— We have been reading all along about Mr. P. G. Hanson of Cambridge street winning prizes for field and garden products from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and now we have found out how he got them. The magnificent strawberries he raises and which Mr. F. A. Hartwell sells at his market tell the story of Hanson's success in winning premiums. Those strawberries are just splendid—big enough to be eaten with a knife and fork, fair to the eye, luscious to the taste, and fragrant to the nostrils. Mr. Hanson has a rare knack and great luck at such things, and one of cardinal business habits of Hartwell is to have the best of everything that is going.

— It is currently reported that the matter of the new school house at Central Square is not yet settled. It is not unlikely that trouble may grow out of it, the effect of which would not be of the highest benefit to our schools. The fact of the business is, the School Board ought to have been officially invited to come in and help settle on a site for the new building, and why the discourtesy of ignoring them was indulged in by the City Council would be hard to say. All of this trouble, bickering and heartburning might have been avoided had a little common civility been exercised, honorable concessions made, and due deference paid to the rights which belong to official position. But we people here in Woburn have fallen on queer times and doings.

— The great leather firm of Alley Bros. & Place of Boston failed last Tuesday for $450,000. Inability to secure ready money to meet current demands brought on the crash. The firm did a business amounting to $1,500,000 per annum, and their credit stood very high. It is said that Mr. Griffin Place of this city put in at the formation of the co-partnership $200,000, the two Alley's $200,000 each, and J. B. Alley, father of the Brothers, as silent partner, $400,000. Mr. Place is one of our most prominent and public spirited citizens, a man of marked integrity and uprightness of conduct in all the walks of life, and his streak of bad luck will elicit much sympathy in this city. Mr. Place maintains, and so do the Alleys, that the firm will pay dollar for dollar.

— Mr. John E. Russell has been a faithful employee of the North Woburn Street Railroad Company 23 years last Monday. He has served the public and his employers with fidelity all this long period of time, and so familiar has his face become should he for any cause drop out of sight no man in this community would be missed more than he. He saw the N. W. S. R. start in a modest way many years ago and has kept right along with it until the present date. For some time he was the Active Superintendent, the one conductor, general manager, and chief man among them. He has seen the line grow to be one of the most important in Boston's suburbs, and still "Johnny" sticks to his bell-punch and strap. He is and has always been popular with the public and a valuable man for the Company.

— In last Sunday's Boston Globe an article appeared nearly a column long under the title of "Men you ought to know" and was a sketch (with portrait) of the personal and professional career of Dr. Ephraim Cutter of New York City, a native and former medical practitioner of Woburn, and a gentleman who stands at the head of his profession and is regarded in this country and Europe as one of the most learned scientists of the day. The article said that as a microscopist Dr. Cutter has no peer in any land, and that he is the owner of a microscope made in Boston several years ago which has the greatest magnifying power of any in the world. The writer claimed much credit for Boston for having made the best instrument of the kind that was ever seen, and also for having once been the field of Dr. Cutter's professional activities. Dr. Cutter stands very high among European savants, especially those of England and Germany.

— Notwithstanding the report that Will W. Crosby of Court street, member of the Innuton Canoe Club, came within a hairs-breadth of being drowned last Friday afternoon, he was seen knocking about the streets very much as usual directly after the news of his wetting got abroad. It is true that his canoe went over and he with it—into Horn Pond; but that did not give him any uneasiness, for he is an expert swimmer and is cool. Officer Marrinan, who had been summoned to the scene of the supposed drowning of Mr. Cyrus Munroe, saw Crosby when he tipped over into the drink, and not knowing who he was and fearing it might be a serious case, hastened to his rescue and found he was not needed. Officer Marrinan did the right thing promptly, but when he reached Crosby that young gentleman was swimming for the shore and taking his canoe along with him. His own being full of water he boarded the Officer's boat and they all went along about their business. Officer Marrinan's and young Crosby's stories agree, so it is safe to say that the latter did not come very near drowning.

A Sword for Capt. E. R. Porter.

Last Friday evening Co. A, W. H. S. B., met at the pleasant home of their Captain, E. R. Porter, son of Veteran Huntington Porter, 92 Pleasant street, and presented him with a regulation sword and belt, also a letter and said. The fine gift was accompanied by an appropriate speech by Lieut. P. D. Carney, which was feelingly replied to by Capt. Porter, although the whole preceeding was a perfect surprise to him. During the evening nice refreshments and a happy time were enjoyed. Quite a large party of guests were present among whom were:

Major Bancroft and ex-Major Wade, Adj. Trull, Lieuts. Carney and Walsh, Sergts. O'Brien, Wade, Stevenson, Simonds and Smith, Corporals, Preston, Russell, Barret and Cauldfield, and Privates, Buxton, Anderson, Clancy, Brophy, Russell, Johnson, Buchanan, Converse, Cummings, Cutler, Doherty, Hoy, Aurd, Kelley, Knights, Sewall, Mahoney, Martin, McCormack, Smith, Stetson and Thornton.

A Salary

With expenses paid will come handy to anyone who is now out of employment, especially where no previous experience is required to get the position. If you want a position, see advertisement on page 3 headed, "A Chance to Make Money."

As was anticipated by those well acquainted with the principles of its manufacture, Mellin's Food has won its way to public favor. This can only be attributed to the unquestioned value of the food in cases of insufficient nutrition or delicate organism.

They Graduated on Last Tuesday.

Class '91, W. H. S., took their diplomas at the hands of Mayor Bean on last Tuesday afternoon in the Cummings School Hall. The Hall had been put into trim for the important occasion and looked very neat.

It didn't seem much like the graduating exercises of past years when Lyceum Hall was always packed with living, crowding, sweating humanity, and every thing else in proportion. Not much! After all had secured seats there was still considerable room left, showing that, for some reason or other, the interest in the W. H. S. commencement day was not at fever heat this year. Possibly the controversy over the question "How to do It" in the School Board and outside of it may have had something to do with the paucity of numbers at the exhibition. Certainly the heat did not interfere with the attendance. Indeed, common experience has proved that always heretofore the hotter the day the bigger crowd in the Hall while the graduating exercises were going on.

Professor Charles Eliot Norton's address was a good one in substance, but the manner of its delivery was slow, stiff and sometimes very indistinct. Principal Mendum's introductory speech opened the ball in an easy, graceful manner and paved the way for Prof. Norton in good shape. Some of the listeners spoke well and some spoke ill of the oration, just as is always the case on similar occasions. It was doubtless a learned and highly polished literary production, useful as well as ornamental, full of intellectual meat, and sound in doctrine, but Mayor Bean's ringing words aroused more enthusiasm and called forth more applause than Prof. Norton's did by a good deal.

The young ladies looked as pretty as pinks in their modest 8-dollar gowns and lovely flowers, and the boys acted out the true gentlemen that they are all through the exercises. Principal Mendum appeared to be very proud of his large, bright, intelligent class, and he had good reason for it.

Whether the new departure in commencement day exercises adopted by Class '91 will eventually prove popular remains to be seen. Certainly the people seemed to like it last Tuesday, and in the judgment of the JOURNAL it seems to be a mode based on good common sense. The following was the order of exercises:

"PRAESIS UT PROSIS."

1. Piano solo. Marcia. Scharwenka
   Miss C. F. Spear.
2. Chorus. The Weird and Gloomy Shadows. Bellini
3. Address. The Importance of the Higher Education.
   Professor Charles Eliot Norton.
4. Chorus. The Pilgrim Fathers. Brown
5. Presentation of Diplomas.

6. Chorus. Gloria. From Bordese's Mass in F.

Duly Honored.

Ex-Officers of the W. H. S. B. gave a reception to the present ones on last Friday evening. The affair came off at the handsome residence of Col. W. T. Grammer on Academy Hill and proved to be one which the participants will not forget very soon. It had a high up society air about it and was eminently toney and stylish. The ladies and gentlemen who received were Mrs. Alice M. Grammer and Capt. Homer B. Grant, and Miss Helen Ordway and Major W. W. Wade. A competent Committee of Arrangements carried things through in fine shape. They were Adjt. George W. Buchanan, '88; Capt. Arthur C. Wyer, '89; Major W. W. Wade, '90. An elegant spread was provided and much enjoyed. The grounds were brilliantly illuminated and wore the appearance of a fairy scene. Everything was delightful and joyous. There were present W. F. Kenney, Chairman of the School Committee, Supt. Frank B. Richardson and wife, Principal Mendum, Sarah F. Clarke, Ida A. C. Jacobs, Lena H. Brown, Elizabeth M. Brown, Mary W. Prior, Mary W. Board of Aldermen.

This body held a regular monthly meeting last week Thursday evening at which Mayor Bean presided.

The confirmation of Mr. Elisha F. Hayward, appointed by the Mayor for Registrar of Voters, was refused.——Petitions were received from Charles Buckley, Samuel E. Wyman, Charles R. Brown, William H. Curtis, Eliphaz Prior and John Lynch for licenses to sell fire works. Upon motion of Alderman Davis the rules were suspended and immediate action taken. It was then unanimously voted to grant licenses to the petitioners allowing them to sell fireworks from the 2nd to the 6th proximo, inclusive of both days.——Petition from Thomas Crosby, Taylor, and Courey for licenses to collect junk were referred to the Committee of Police.——Petition of L. W. Thompson and others for a renewal of State Aid to John Martin.——Pet. of John Meehan for pool license referred.

A favorable report was submitted by Highway Committee as to building sidewalks and putting in curbing on the premises of L. W. Cooper. Also favorable in regard to placing edge stones in front of the estates of Samuel F. Trull, Catherine McEleney, C. H. Buss, and C. Hertkorn and in regard to granting permission to the Pantasote Leather Company to lay tracks across New Boston and Merrimac streets and their action was endorsed by the Board.

The Committee on Finance reported favorably an order transferring the sum of $2,900 from the Miscellaneous Department to be expended as follows; $2,000 for Highways, $400 for Almshouse and $500 for repairs on City Hall.——They also reported "inexpedient" in the matter of creating a new department to be known as the Special Sidewalk Fund. The action of the Committee was indorsed in both cases.——License to collect junk was granted to L. Obest and further consideration will be given to petitions of John Dwyer and Johnson & Gavin.——Mr. Walsh then moved to rescind an order previously passed by the Board for the purpose of closing all entrances to the premises of licensed liquor dealers other than those from the public street or streets. Lost.

Adjourned to June 25.

Children's Day.

The Unitarian Sunday School have a fair prospect before them for a very nice time on next Sunday, which will be their "Children's Day," an institution of quite modern origin. There will also be a christening service.

The exercises will take place in the church at the usual hour (10.30 a. m.). There will be special music by the Sunday School and choir assisted by Mr. Cushman, the eminent tenor soloist of Boston.

The programme has been thus arranged:

Members of the Sunday School are requested to meet in the vestry at 10.15 a. m.

The Almshouse.

There are a plenty of people in the world, and some of them live right here in Woburn, who cherish the idea that it is no trick at all to conduct city Almshouses; that the Masters and Matrons of them have what is known in common parlance "a soft snap;" that they are paid handsome salaries for doing next to nothing. An address recently delivered by Mr. John F. McCarty, Chairman of the Board of Overseers for Lynn, before the Woman's Suffrage League of that city, on "Management of Poor Departments of Cities," as published in the Lynn Item, contained the following on "Almshouse" which is commended to the careful perusal of people who think that Superintendents of Almshouses have an easy time of it. What is said in the extract concerning the manifold and multifarious duties of the Master and Matron of the Lynn Almshouse applies with equal force to all others that are properly kept.

"The labor of the Superintendent may be better understood when I relate a few of his countless duties. He receives all newcomers to the Almshouse and enters their names, birthplace, connections and history, in a book prepared for that purpose. He furnishes them with suitable clothing, sees that they are properly cleansed, instructs them in the rules governing the institution, looks after the supplies, arranges for the religious exercises which are held in the chapel connected with the house, on every Sunday evening, superintends the large farm, including the live stock, visits the Overseers' room at the City Hall, for special orders each day, "listens to the tale of woe" from the inmates, and in short, is "on duty" 24 hours each day.

"The Matron's duties are no less arduous. In addition to the general superintending of the house she has the direct care of the sick, and this part of her labor is most trying and difficult.

"When it is known that the greater portion of the people admitted to the Almshouse are old and decrepit, some of them actually tottering upon the very verge of the grave, and many suffering from both loathsome and lingering diseases, it can be better understood what the good, motherly, kind-hearted Matron has to endure. At the Almshouse last month there was no less than five deaths, and all the work of preparing the bodies for the grave devolves upon the Superintendent and the Matron.

"I believe it is better to give outside or partial relief, wherever it is practicable, for my observation leads me to think that when once a person is admitted to an Almshouse whatever ambition they formerly held deserts them, and they very seldom leave the institution for any great length of time."

For Probation Officer.

The new law respecting the treatment by the Courts of intoxicated persons will go into effect on the first day of July next. Among its other merciful and salutary features there is one which provides for the appointment by the Court of a Probation Officer who, in a great measure, will hold the punishment for intoxication in his keeping. It is admitted on all hands that this office is a very important one not only as it relates to the unfortunate victim of strong drink but in its attitude towards the Magistrate and the public.

To fill the place as it ought to be filled experience with Courts, a good share of practical sense, familiarity with the habits of the drinking classes, a heart, human sympathy, and some other qualities not so common among men as they might be, are essential.

Does the reader think of anyone who would fill this bill to a charm—who would answer all these requirements better than any other man in Woburn? Several people have suggested the name of Mr. Edward Simonds to the JOURNAL as the most fitting person for the position that could be found. He answers perfectly to all the qualifications above set forth, and we have no hesitation in saying the appointment of Mr. Simonds would meet with general approval from our people. He is just the man for the place.

Judge Johnson, son-in-law of Mr. Simonds, is the person to fill the post. He and Mr. Simonds might think the appointment of the latter would savor too much of nepotism and decline to make the arrangements, but the community would not so regard it. It is said by many friends of the people of this Judicial District would sign a petition for Mr. Simonds if the opportunity was offered them to do so.

Silver—Brown.

The residence of Jacob Brown, E-q., 23 Canal street, this city, was the scene of a gay and brilliant wedding party on Wednesday evening last, the chief actors in which were Miss Anna Theodora, the accomplished daughter of the host (who is a member of the firm of A. S. & J. Brown of Boston), and Mr. Elmer Ellsworth Silver, a prominent and honored citizen of Newton.

The parlors, drawingrooms, halls and chambers of Mr. Brown's handsome residence were magnificently illuminated and filled with rare flowers and plants whose brilliancy and fragrance added a charm to the fair surroundings.

The connubial knot was tied by Rev. Daniel March, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational church of this city, assisted by Rev. M. H. Bixby, D. D., of Providence R. I., and the rite was solemnized with the bridal pair standing under an arch of beautiful flowers. A fine orchestra discoursed delightful music during the evening.

Miss Isabella Brown, niece of the bride, was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were six of her lady friends.

Mr. E. H. Alger was best man, and the ushers were J. Winn Brown of this city, A A. Silver, F. D. Beattys, F. W. Matteson, George Cutler, Jr., and W. E. Blodgett.

The couple started on a tour and upon their return will reside in Newton.

Singer—Charman.

Last Thursday evening there was a very pretty June wedding at the residence of Mr. Frank Charman, No. 30 Union street, this city, which was made beautiful and fragrant with June roses, daisies and other wedding flowers for the occasion.

Quite a large party of relatives and invited guests assembled in the brilliantly lighted parlors of the Charman home to witness the interesting ceremony, performed by Rev. Daniel D. Winn, pastor of the First Baptist church in this city, which made Mr. Edward Singer and Miss Lillian Charman man and wife. Everything passed off delightfully, and all enjoyed the occasion very much.

Miss Lilian, now Mrs. Singer, is the daughter of Mr. Frank Charman, and one of Woburn's very best young ladies; while Mr. Singer, the groom, is entirely worthy of a matrimonial prize so rare.

The JOURNAL sends hearty greetings to the happy couple, and thanks for a generous slice of the bridal loaf.

Mr. and Mrs. Singer will return from their honeymoon trip to Maine in a fortnight or so and settle down to real life.

Andruss—Agnew.

At the St. Charles Parsonage on Summer street, last Wednesday evening, Rev. Lawrence W. Slattery, Assistant Pastor of St. Charles R. C.) Church, united in the holy bonds of matrimony Mr. Edward I. Andruss and Miss Katherine Joseph Agnew, both of this city.

At the close of the ceremonies at the hymenial alter the happy pair repaired to their new home, No. 694 Main street, where some 50 of their relatives and friends were warmly welcomed and generously entertained. Before sitting down to a fine wedding supper some time was spent in looking at the large number of handsome and valuable presents which had been received by bride and groom. The rooms were gay and fragrant with beautiful flowers.

There was a wedding dance, too, and a pleasant evening for all present. The JOURNAL offers congratulations.

The Mechanic Phalanx.

When this old Military Company elected Lieut. Charles F. Spear Captain last week it did a thing for itself that couldn't be improved upon very well, for it will put a stop to all further wrangling and prove the starting point for greater prosperity and efficiency than ever before.

Capt. Spear is well deserving the high honor he received. He used to be a member of the Salem Cadets, has long trained with Co. G., and has the true military spirit in him. These fit him for successful command and no better man for the office could have been selected. Quarrelling will cease under his authority, and the Woburn Phalanx will soon regain its old place among the Military of the State, that is, away up near the top.

A Few Old Settlers.

Changes of all kinds are constantly going on in the world. Mutability is stamped on nearly everything mundane. Communities, families, individuals, change continually. Kinds of business and those who do them succeed each other swiftly. Men are here to-day and somewhere else to-morrow. Empty buildings and barred doors are all that is left of a once flourishing trade in one place: enterprise, thrift and business success have grown up where there was nothing before.

But some men and some occupations, measured by years of our time, seem stable. There is a permanency about them which forms an exception to the general rule. In almost every community there are "old standbys," and have been so long that at last they have come to be regarded as fixtures—as social and business institutions that are well nigh unchangable. We can boast of a few of them here in Woburn. Let us see: there is

Mr. William Woodbury, still hale and hearty and daily attending to his dry goods store, who began trade here in 1834—57 years ago.

The A. and M. Association was organized in 1830. Mr. John Johnson has been its head nearly all the 61 years of its existence.

The First National Bank of Woburn was established as a State institution in 1853, and as a National Bank in 1865.

The mercantile firm first known as Gage & Fowle and subsequently as G. R. Gage & Co. was formed in 1842; Mr. Fred A. Flint came 1866; and Mr. Gage retired only a few months ago.

Joseph W. Hammond first went into business here in 1851—40 years ago. The Lyceum Hall Association, of which Mr. Hammond is President and active manager, was incorporated in 1852

Mr. Leonard Thompson has carried on the hardware trade very successfully ever since 1852.

The Five Cents Savings Bank, of which Mr. James Dow was first Treasurer and Clerk, and which offices have been filled for several years by Mr. Edward Everett Thompson, was established in 1854.

The grocer who has done a larger volume of business annually than any other in Woburn and who is still the leading man in that line, is Mr. Alexander Ellis, corner Main and High streets. He began his mercantile career here in 1854—37 years ago, and his store was that now occupied by Mr. Hayward.

Mr. Alvah Buckman began as a merchant here in 1857, and has been very successful. His business is boots and shoes.

Mr. Frederick A. Hartwell has carried on a meat, vegetable and fruit market here since 1864, and comes easily into the category of "Old Times."

The above named gentlemen are alive, smart, and doing large and lucrative businesses to-day.

Not much mutability there!

In Memoriam.

By the death of ABBIE WARREN NICKLES the class of '63, Woburn High School, loses yet another of its members. Everyone who knew her loved Abbie Warren—teachers, schoolmates, neighbors, friends—and it is fitting that the one who best loved her, who was associated with her in closest friendship from the time our yellow chairs stood side by side in the small Main street primary, on through the varying grades of school life to the day of graduation, should lay this simple tribute on her grave.

Memory fails to recall one happy day of childhood that was not brightened by her presence. Possessing a remarkably sunny temperament, with a keen sense of humor and ready flow of language, there was always a sparkle in her eye, a merry word on her lip; and in later life when troubles came as they come to all of us soon or late, she bore them with silent, patient fortitude that deepened our love and respect.

Inheriting a considerable degree of musical talent she was always our leader in that department of school life. Her voice was unusually sympathetic in quality both in speaking and singing. Although having an abundance of this world's goods she possessed an untiring industry, always happiest when her hands were busy. It is a testimony that will be borne out by all who knew her that her disposition was of the sweetest and sunniest, her spirit without malice or guile, her friendship steadfast, her heart true; and to the writer who reached her grave as the earth was smoothed over the top, too late to look on the peaceful face that rested so quietly on its fern-fringed pillow, it seemed as if part of herself were laid away in this sundering of a friendship that for long, long years had known neither shadow nor turning, in this hush of a well-loved voice that death had stilled.

Yet, when our feet grow weary
To rest is meet.
The day's task bravely finished
To sleep is sweet.
And what hath such awaking
As sleep like this,

Serg't. Ambler—That "Technicality."

EDITOR, WOBURN JOURNAL: I found the following in the Woburn City Press of last Saturday and take the liberty, by your leave, to correct the writer on a single point through the columns of your excellent paper.

"It is a clear case of justice too long deferred, which denies to Sergt. I. W. Ambler the recognition at the hands of the Government to which he is so well entitled on account of services rendered in the Civil War. With such abundant proof of these service" furnished by the leading generals and officers under whose eyes these services were rendered, and with the honorable scars which attest his fidelity to duty, it is a shame that he has remained until this late day unrecompensed. The technicality of a clerical error should not stand between Sergt. Ambler and the generous recognition of the Government for the preservation of which he made so many sacrifices, and if his case continues to be treated with the same neglect that has characterized the Goverment's treatment of him thus far, it will be a stigma upon the nation's justice and generosity."

The Editor of the City Press has fallen into the popular error respecting Sergeant Ambler's case, that is, that he was not legally enrolled in the U. S. service at the begining of the Great Southern Rebellion, and therefore was not entitled to any pay for services in that terrible struggle for National existence. The Editor of the JOURNAL, I noticed, fell into the same error week before last, and so also has nearly every other person who has written or said anything on the subject.

Now, the truth of the matter is, Sergeant Ambler WAS duly and legally enrolled as a soldier of the United States very soon after the Rebellion broke out, and these are the facts that prove it:

He joined the 6th Maine Regiment and instructed its officers and men in the use of military arms, having once been drill-master in the English Army. He went to the front with the 6th. On a certain date in the early summer of 1861, when with the Army in Virginia, Col. Burnham of that Regiment accompanied him to the War Department in Washington where, in the presence of the Secretary of War, Sergt. Ambler's name was duly enrolled as a Union soldier. That record is now in the archives of the War Office, but up to the present time search for it has proved abortive. It is to obtain money to prosecute that search, or to secure Congressional aid, that the brave old soldier is now trying to sell his "Life."

Sergt. Ambler was duly enrolled as a volunteer at the War Office in the presence of the Sec'y of War and yet what it owes him for his invaluable services this Nation refuses to pay. After his name had been duly subscribed to the books he returned to the front with Col. Burnham where he served bravely, gallantly, and with great efficiency until disabled by wounds for further service.

This of Sergt. Ambler's is, in my judgment, the worst case of ingratitude that ever a faithful soldier was made to suffer. A Nation that will treat its defenders in such a heartless, cruel manner does not deserve prosperity.

Mind you, Sergt. Ambler WAS ENROLLED AS A UNION SOLDIER, but because the record of the enrollment has not yet been found the War Department refuses to pay him anything for his valuable services as drill-master and fighter.

For further information on this head I would refer the reader to the mass of testimony which the Sergeant has collected from the most eminent Generals, Civil Officers, and Statesmen in this country in support of his just and honest claim against the government.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER

LESSON XIII, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 28.

Period Covered, from the First Preaching of Hosea, About 785 B. C., to the Final Destruction of Jerusalem and the Judæan Monarchy, 588 B. C.

The lessons of the quarter now closing may be considered as but separate chapters of one awful and most impressive lesson—the decline and destruction of an unfaithful government and the punishment of a people who rebelled against God, their true King. Owing to the peculiar character of the series, it is deemed best to insert here a few historic notes, pointing out how the prophecies of punishment were soon made history.

Hosea, sometimes called the first of the minor prophets, entered on his mission about 785 B. C., and continued to exhort and threaten Israel (of which kingdom he was a resident) for over fifty years. His style is concise and sententious, and the form in which his prophecies are compiled makes them seem as one continued series, without divisions to indicate the period of their utterance or the specific subject of each prediction. This calls for unusual diligence on the part of the student in noting the internal evidences. The first verse declares that the prophecies were delivered "in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam, the son of Joash, king of Israel."

This gives us a key to the proper division, and we perceive that after repeated warnings to Israel, in which the patriot is seen as clearly as the prophet, he despairs of his own people, sees the evil at hand, and with an awful burden of sorrow turns to the other kingdom and implores Judah not to follow the evil example of her sister. The fact should be noted that he entered on his mission at a time when all was outwardly prosperous, for Jeroboam II had raised Israel to something like her former glory. But the people had become sinfully vain and were given up to idolatry, and the prophet, as if in agony—turning God's message into his own language, as is the Biblical rule—cries out, "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? How shall I give thee up, Israel? How shall I make thee as Adam? How shall I set thee as Zeboim? My heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together" (xi, 8).

Israel's punishment came soon, for Shalmanezer took Samaria after a siege of three years, and dispersed the Israelites through the northeastern provinces of Samaria. A few escaped into Judah, and at intervals for many years after fragments of the Israelites joined their fellow countrymen, but the great mass was absorbed and lost among the heathen, a fate for which their idolatrous habits had already prepared them. Their place was filled by a heathen people called Kuthim or Cuthaens; but there is reason for believing that they became mixed to some extent with a remnant of the Israelites, for in time they adopted some part of the old customs of worship, mixing them strangely with their original idolatry, and Josephus tells us that when the Jews proper were in favor with their rulers these planted heathen claimed kindred with them.

Such was the origin of the people known later as Samaritans, and the intense hatred felt toward them by the Jews was the occasion of Christ's beautiful parable on the man that fell among thieves. The devout reader may well find cause for reflection in the fact that this hated name has by this parable become in all Christian nations a title for the charitable and tender hearted. It is also a fact of intense interest that a remnant of this people still exists and maintains a religious organization in Egypt, having for its Scripture only a mutilated copy of the Pentateuch. Their forefathers were taken there by Alexander the Great when he conquered the Persian empire. Is it not in accord with all we know of God's providence to believe that this fragment of a nation has been divinely preserved through all the mutations of 2,400 years as God's own witness to the truth of His prophets? See on this subject commentaries on Daniel's prophecy of the power that was to conquer Persia (Dan. viii, 5-21).

The subsequent history of the kingdom of Judah coincides closely with the predictions of the prophets. Josiah stands out with peculiar glory as the last of the great and reforming kings, and soon after Judah's cup of iniquity was filled The kingdom proper was overthrown, but Zedekiah reigned some time as a tributary or vassal of Babylon. Against the imploring protest of Jeremiah, and equally against common sense and good faith, Zedekiah rebelled, being deceived by false prophets. The enraged Nebuchadnezzar came with a large army, and though the Jews with that stubborn bravery which they always manifested held out for a year and seven months the city was taken at last with every circumstance of horror.

Zedekiah's sons were slain in his sight; then his eyes were put out and he was taken to Babylon, to linger out a painful captivity with only the recollection of his sins and follies. In this and the next succeeding portions of Hebrew history are many affecting episodes, and in the literature of the time we find some of the most mournful poetry of ancient times. Out of the hearts of captives longing for their homes were wrought those sublime strains, those prayers and songs of hope or of resignation, which charm even the skeptic by their sad sublimity.

In conclusion it may be well to note how strongly the era of decline was marked by the two vices which the student of history always looks to find in a degenerate people—drunkenness and oppression of the poor. "Woe to the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim," is the way the prophet begins an invective against that degrading vice, and "Woe unto them that add field to field and house to house, etc.," is the exordium of another. The lesson is plain. The national spirit was destroyed. The rich oppressed the poor, and both rich and poor sought temporary pleasure or oblivion in the beastly vice.

A Street Car Conductor's Hard Lot.

There are some things in the life of a Boston car conductor that are, to say the least, a little curious. For instance, the street railway company establishes the inviolable rule that pennies shall not be turned into the treasurer's office by any conductor. But pennies are legal tender, and the conductors must accept them from passengers in payment of fares. But the pennies must all be converted into coin of larger denominations before the conductor can get a clean bill for his day's receipts Another rule is that no smoking shall be permitted on a car, but there is no possible way by which a conductor can stop smoking on the platform. No officer will arrest a passenger, and he cannot be ejected by the conductor. But conductors are "laid off" every day because of passengers smoking on the cars.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. NOB HILL'S USELESS PALACES.

Five Enormous Buildings Intended for Private Residences, but Unfit.

A morning contemporary announces as a matter of news that Mrs. Hopkins-Searles offers her residence on California street for sale. It might have added, as a companion item, that the Pilgrim Fathers had landed on Plymouth Rock. There has been no time for many years that the Hopkins mansion on California street has not been for sale, though, if public rumor be believed, the owner has not been distracted by many offers to purchase. It is, in fact, difficult to conceive who could want to become its possessor at any price.

The spectacle of Nob Hill, with palatial piles crowning its ridge, fills the stranger who visits California with mild amazement. There are five big buildings there which were built as private residences, and are as unfit for that use as could be conceived. They were apparently modeled on the plan of the palaces of the Old World, which were erected to be the homes of feudal barons and all their retainers. In the middle ages every nobleman supported a swarm of dependents. He had to find quarters for them, and of course his lodgings had to be large. In our day rich men do not maintain much larger households than their neighbors.

Individually they cannot occupy more than a dozen rooms, and as many will lodge all the servants they can employ. More rooms than this are of no possible use. Conceived in ostentation, their destiny is to become lumber closets. In the old feudal castles of Europe the modern possessor is lost; it gives him a nightmare to wander through a maze of rooms which are never occupied save by mice and spiders, and he flees to take refuge in a bedroom and parlor at club or hotel. It must be much the same in the mansions of Nob Hill.

If they have any destiny it must be to become some day public buildings—museums or hospitals. Even for that use they would have to be donated by their owners, for the city could build suitable edifices for less money than they would cost if they were bought.

It seems odd that men with the sagacity required to build a transcontinental railroad and to acquire vast fortunes should not have understood that a house that is too big may be as inconvenient as a house that is too small. A very small quantity of shelter is all that the richest and greatest of us can want. A bedroom, a dressing room, a reception room, a parlor, a dining room, a library, and perhaps a billiard room—what more than this can Crœsus occupy, though he counts his riches by the hundreds of millions.

Yet rich men go on piling stone upon stone and bricks upon mortar until they have exchanged what might have been a snug home for a barrack; and in the doing of it they generate a mass of envy and grudging which follows them to their grave.—San Francisco Call.

The Ocean.

The great storehouse of the world's water is the ocean, which covers four-fifths of the globe's surface. In some places the ocean has never been sounded, even by a line more than five miles in length. It is supposed these great depths are without plants, because all plants require some light, and though light is said to penetrate sea water farther than fresh, yet we can scarcely imagine there is a ray of light at the depth of five miles. Some of the sea plants have stems at least 300 feet in length. In some parts of the sea we are told that the eye can discern the bottom at four or five hundred feet.

It is a very pretty sight to look down and view a forest beneath the waves. It is sometimes a blaze of gold, scarlet and green. In one part of the Atlantic is a space which the Spaniards call the Sargasso sea, because its surface is covered there for miles and miles with a great mass of seaweed, which Columbus spoke of as "floating meadows."—Montreal Star.

The News Editor's Nemesis.

"Years ago," said a news editor, "I used to have on my list a correspondent at Valparaiso. He would send reports of church socials by wire, and we couldn't shut him off. One day a store down in his place burned. The loss proved to be about $5,000. He began sending bulletins as soon as the fire broke out, and kept it up every ten minutes till the last spark of the conflagration was out. We tried to choke him off, but he couldn't be suppressed. There are two persons on earth whom I would like to meet some time when I am feeling real well and strong. They are that correspondent and the man who sold me a fountain pen."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Zeno's Paradox.

Many persons will recall the famous paradox of Zeno, by which he sought to prove that all motion is impossible.

"A body," he argued, "must move either in a place where it is or in a place where it is not. Now, a body in the place where it is is stationary and cannot be in motion, nor, obviously, can it be in motion in the place where it is not. Therefore it cannot move at all."

Bodies do move, however, and that is a sufficient answer to the ingenious philosopher.—New York Tribune.

Ornithological.

"They say a sparrow has been known to hatch out a king bird's eggs."

"Yes; but what of that? I've known many an eagle to father a lark."—Puck.

May Thank Her Stars.

The narrow escape of Mrs. B. M. Searles, of Elkhart, Ind., from a premature death is wonderful. She states that "for twenty years my heart troubled me greatly. I became worse. Had smothering spells, short breath, fluttering; could not sleep on my left side, had much Pain in Breast, shoulder and stomach. Ankles swelled. Had much headache and dizziness. Treatment did me no good, until I tried Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure and Restorative Nervine. The first bottle helped me, and I was soon virtually cured. For sale at Charles H. Buss's drug store. HE SMOKED IN A STREET CAR.

He Was Big and Burly, but the Little Conductor Ejected Him.

The man inside the horse car was very large and red. The conductor of the car was small and pale. The large red passenger was infringing the rules of the railroad company by lighting a cigar. The small conductor had watched this audacity, and when he was satisfied that the cigar lighting process was not an illusion he remarked, with considerable sternness of voice for a diminutive man:

"You'll have to put that cigar out."

The large red man took no notice of the observation, but puffed huge volumes of smoke.

"You'll have to put that cigar out, I say."

Still the large man puffed serenely on.

"I say you'll have to put that cigar out."

The large man turned his small pig eyes literally and said:

"Save yer voice, young feller, save yer voice."

The conductor looked the large man over. He observed that he was about the size of Mr. Sullivan, the pugilist, and he wondered whether his salary as conductor was large enough to induce him to risk his life in a physical encounter with the burly ruffian. There is a personal pride in nearly all men, and that conductor forgot the corporation he was serving, and its rules, and determined that he, as an individual, would not be crushed.

"You'll have to put that cigar out," he repeated. His admonition was painfully unchangeable in diction and tone, and it was beginning to annoy the large red man.

"Say, young feller," remarked the latter, "ring the bell and let yerself off."

The conductor walked forward to the driver's platform and said a few quiet words to his coadjutor. Then he returned to his own platform, and for a moment or so, as the car went on, he was silent. Finally he directed his attention again to the smoker.

"You'll have to put that cigar out," he said.

The large red man rose to his feet, and as he did so the conductor pulled the bell for the car to stop. The smoker strode out to the platform and, glowering down on the little conductor, held the lighted cigar under his nose, saying:

"That cigar ain't goin' ter be put out. See!"

The car was now at a standstill, and the driver was looking back at the two men on the rear platform. He saw the little conductor let fly his fist at the large red man, and immediately he let go of his brake and gave each of his horses a sharp cut with the whip. They leaped forward and galloped away with the now empty car. When the driver looked around again he saw the figure of the large man standing ruefully in the middle of the car track, a block behind.

A small boy went out into the street to see what the man fell off the car for. The determined smoker was dusting himself. There was no cigar near him. He looked about in a dazed way, and then said:

"What was that conductor's number?"

The small boy did not know; so the comedy will never have a tragic sequel. —New York Sun.

Concerning Fools.

From time immemorial we have been counseled in one way or another to beware of fools. Disagreeable consequences are mentioned of answering one kind of fool according to his folly, and of refraining to answer another kind. Yet in spite of the general prejudice there is a variety of fool which is expected to mirror most of the Christian virtues. He is supposed to be absolutely good natured under ridicule, and never justly revengeful. When attacked he is expected to smile with his tormentors, and join in the general laugh.

Though he be by nature a modest man, he must bear with equanimity the cross of finding himself suddenly dragged into public notice, with the eyes of a score or more of people turned on him at once.

He must be self sacrificing, willing to yield his own dignity for the amusement of others. If he but resent ill usage by a word of remonstrance he receives contempt as a crusty bear and a despiser of ancient customs.

This species of fool is born on the morning of April First, and like certain summer insects has a brief existence of one day. If his general insensibility to ridicule, his meekness under abuse and his unfailing good temper should continue in the same measure throughout the year, one might call him a miracle. As it usually happens, however, he is content with a brief exercise of such virtues, and the temporary title of April fool.—Youth's Companion.

Benevolent.

Even the kindest hearted of us sometimes say things that without explanation sound rather queer.

It was one of the best of women who said to her husband, "What a pity it is that none of our neighbors is sick now!"

"Why?" was the surprised query.

"Because if they were I could send them some of this nice jelly," was the complacent answer. — Youth's Companion.

Saving a Life.

It is the practice of some writers of serial stories to begin the publication of their romances before the end is written. In the early stages of the story they do not know any better than the public who read it how they are "coming out." This is especially the case in France, where nearly every newspaper has a feuilleton or department in which a continued story is published.

It is related by M. Aurelien Scholl that when Paul Duplessis was publishing a serial romance in The Patrie newspaper he was visited one evening by Millet, the artist.

"By the way," said Millet, after a little conversation, "I am seeking a bit of information. You know that in The Patrie this morning you left the countess in the most alarming situation. She had fallen into an ambush, and was surrounded by those who have every motive to cause her to disappear."

"Yes."

"Well, does she die?"

"Yes; she meets her death at the point of the Corsican's poignard."

Millet struck the table with his fist. "No luck for me!" he exclaimed.

"Why, what is it to you?"

"Oh, nothing but ten louis—that's all! I made a foolish wager with a devoted reader of your stories that the countess was necessary to the 'come out' of the romance, and that she would get out of the scrape."

"Dear me!" Duplessis exclaimed. He drew out his watch. "Only 9 o'clock," he said. "There's time enough yet."

"Time for what?"

"Time to get into a cab and go to The Patrie office and save the countess' life!"

"Truly? Would you do that?"

Duplessis shook the artist's hand solemnly.

"It's very little to do for a friend," said he.

He rushed away to the newspaper office, overhauled his proofs and made the grumbling printers turn the countess' distressing death into a marvelous rescue.

Touching Loyalty.

The grand old Douglas motto, "Tender and True," was once touchingly illustrated by the representative of another Scotch family. The Duke of Athole had a disease which was certain to end fatally. When he was assured that he would soon be taken away he called on all his tenants and bade each one farewell with a cheerfulness that testified to his peace of mind. During his last days there occurred a touching incident.

Queen Victoria visited Blair-Athole to bid adieu to the dying duke. She had returned to the station, where a crowd of persons had collected, but in sympathy with the solemnity of the occasion they maintained perfect silence.

The train was about to start when there was a shout of "Stop! Stop!" and a brougham was seen driving rapidly from the castle.

Out of it, wrapped in flannels, staggered the duke. He went to the door of the royal car, knelt, kissed the queen's hand, waved his cap and called out, "Three cheers for the queen!" Then re-entering his carriage he drove back to the castle, and never left it again alive.—Blackwood's Magazine.

African Tracking.

Tracking is a science; some have a natural quickness and aptitude for it, others are of no use at all at it. The keen way, for instance, in which Farag Ala can follow up a native track is wonderful; the slightest sign is noticed by him. The only other art that resembles tracking is "finding your way about in the bush." A clever bush native near his own home, acting as your guide, no matter how much you may have twisted and turned or gone up hill and down dale, when asked where camp is, will instantly say, "There," and point out the direction.

He knows where his home is, just as the wild bee does; he has mentally and instinctively been carrying on a "traverse," carefully noticing the angles of deflection and the distance traveled over; this he has plotted in his mind, and when asked where he is he reads the map he has made on his brain, and lets you know the result. It is fatal to interrupt a tracker by unnecessary speaking. If doubts are cast as to the skill of the leading man, and he feels that he is not trusted, most probably confusion will follow.—Nineteenth Century.

A Reception Room.

Dr. Brooks went into the drawing room of a pretentious parishioner on Columbus avenue who had furnished her room with mirrors upon all sides. He began to bow very deferentially this way and that, and to say, "Good afternoon, doctor." "Good afternoon, doctor;" and then as the truth dawned upon him exclaimed, "Why, bless my soul, I thought I had got into a caucus of the clergy called to nominate a bishop!"—Boston Transcript.

Tact.

He—I didn't get your last letter.

She (pouting)—And I sent you a kiss in it.

He—How unbusinesslike you are! Don't you know that letters containing valuables should be registered?

He was allowed to kiss away the pout.—Harper's Bazar.

The Woburn Journal

A CITY MYSTERY.

Miss Melinda Parkinson had come down to New York to buy her summer patterns and to indulge herself with a glimpse at the great world, of which hitherto she had only become acquainted through the columns of the weeky newspaper.

"It must be a mortal strange place, said that amiable spinster, "where folks walk up and down Broadway in their Sunday clothes, and milk sells for ten cents a quart. And where they hain't no garrets to their houses, and go out to parties just when we Centrevillers are tying on our nightcaps to go to bed. Well, well, it takes all sorts of people to make a world."

So Miss Melinda retrimmed her leghorn hat with sage green ribbons, sponged over her ancient black silk gown, indulged in the extravagance of new gloves, and set forth for the great American metropolis to visit Cousin Lemuel Larkins, whose family had frequently spent halcyon summers at the farm, and to partake of whose hospitality she had had a standing invitation for some time.

Cousin Lemuel and his oldest daughter, Persephone, met her at the depot, with faces of friendly welcome. Cousin Lemuel was a photographer on the Bowery, and Miss Persephone "did" supernumerary parts at the Sparkle theatre and had the promise of "going on" whenever there should be a vacancy in the regular dramatis personæ.

"Come along, Cousin Melly," said Mr. Larkins. "Where's the check for your baggage? Here, expressman! And look sharp, d'y' hear?"

"But," shrieked Miss Melinda, "that check is all I've got to show for my trunk. How do you know he'll ever bring up the trunk at all," gasped Miss Parkinson. "I once read in the Sentinel how"——

"Come along," said Mr. Larkins, good humoredly. "You'll find it'll all be as right as a trivet!"

"Ain't we going in a carriage?"

"Bless us, no," said Cousin Larkins. "We're agoin' in the 'short cars.'"

"But why are you going in the short cars?" said Miss Melinda in great bewilderment. "I thought you said you lived a mile and a half from the depot?"

"Oh!" said Mr. Larkins. "'short' means the cars, not the distance. Let me help you aboard, there's a good girl."

No sooner was Miss Parkinson safely bestowed between a stout gentleman reading his paper end a black velvet cloaked lady than she again began to be uneasy in her mind.

"Lemuel," said she, in a stage whisper, "I don't like these cars. I'd rather walk."

"But why?" said Mr. Larkins, who was hanging from a strap like a first class trapeze performer. "Eh? The man next you a pickpocket? But, my dear woman, it can't possibly be! He's a-holding up the paper with both hands! How can he be picking your pocket?"

"Ah!" nodded Miss Parkinson, "they can't deceive me. One of 'em's stuffed! I've read all about it! And he may be a-takin' my watch and my twenty-five dollars out of my under pocket with the real hand, this very minute, for all I know!"

"Madam," said the strange gentleman, jumping up and turning very red, as he started for the door, "I have not yet arrived at my destination, but I much prefer walking a few blocks to finding myself the subject of aspirations such as these! Conductor, you will have the goodness to stop."

"There," cried Miss Parkinson, starting to her feet, "it's just as the Sentinel says! He's escaping! Driver, I insist that he shall be searched! Conductor, call the police!"

"P'r'aps," suggested Cousin Lemuel, "you'd better see if your watch and money ain't safe, Melinda!"

"Because, murm," added the conductor, with the corners of his mouth twitching, "that there gent is Judge De Griffiths, of the court of common complaints, as ain't noway addicted to pocket picking, as ever I heerd on!"

And Miss Parkinson, discovering that her valuables were all safe, subsided once more into her place and merely remarked that "we are all liable to mistakes."

She was rather surprised to discover that the Larkins family, instead of occupying one of the palatial mansions contiguous to Central park, lived on the fourth floor of a rusty brick house on the Bowery, whose front windows were blinded by the elevated road and whose rear outlook consisted chiefly of cats and chimney tops. There was a summer garden next door, where a band discoursed sweet music until 3 o'clock in the morning, and a shooting gallery on the other side, and the ground floor of their own building was occupied by a job printer, whose steam machinery, albeit it was underground, roared and hissed and kept the walls a-tremble, until Miss Parkinson declared it was just like living over the crater of Vesuvius!

"La, my dear," said Mrs. Larkins, a comfortable, elderly lady with a greasy poplin dress and a cap covered with crumpled artificial flowers, "you wont mind it after a day or two. It's really a very superior neighborhood."

They supped off clam chowder, boiled lobsters, Vienna bread and Limburger cheese—for the Larkins family were cosmopolitan in their tastes—and spent the evening at the Ingomar theatre, for which Miss Persephone had always a limited number of "orders." And when Miss Melinda Parkinson retired to rest in a back hall bedroom, with the elevated road shaking the very casters of har bed every thirteenth minute, and a quartet of cats on the roof rivaling the German arias of Mme. Frida Von Poppenhusen in the garden below, she seriously belived that gentle sleep was banished altogether from her eyelids.

In the middle of the night Mrs. Larkins was aroused from her balmy slumbers by a rapping at her chamber door.

"Eh?" said Mrs. Larkins, sitting up in bed, her classic brow crowned by a cheveux de frise of curl papers. "It ain't burglars, is it? Nor the fire department? Dear me, Cousin Melinda, what can you possibly be wanting at this time of night?"

"Lucretia," said Miss Parkinson, "hush! Come with me at once."

"Laws!" cried Mrs. Larkins, hurriedly shuffling her feet into list slippers and flinging on an ancient flannel dressing gown. "What is the matter? Ain't nobody sick, is there?"

"It's a somnambulist," whispered Miss Parkinson, as Mrs. Larkins joined her in the hall. "A poor crazy creature on the roof next door, all alone by herself, with nothing but a step between her and death."

"La!" said Mrs. Larkins, beginning to tremble and develop strongly hysterical symptoms. "Are you sure, quite sure, now, Melinda, that it ain't the Limburger cheese settin' heavy on your stomach? It don't agree with everybody, you know. And"——

"Come and see for yourself," said Melinda; and she drew her cousin to the curtained casement which commanded the feline and the smoke blackened view previously alluded to. "There! Don't you see her dress flutter? Do you perceive how dangerously near the parapet wall she stands?"

"Oh, good gracious!" cried Mrs. Larkins, covering her eyes with her hands. "Let's call Lemuel."

"Who is it that lives in the next house?" demanded Melinda. "For we must go there ourselves, Lucretia. There's no time to rouse up anybody."

"And Lemuel sleeps like a log," said Mrs. Larkins. "and always thrashes round with his fists when he's roused up sudden, thinkin' of burglars the very first thing, poor dear. It's Mr. Burnabee as lives there, a manufacturer of ladies' felt skirts; quite decent and respectable. Oh, yes, my dear; p'raps we'd better go, then, or the poor dear'll fling herself over the parapet, and it'll be a clear case for the coroner's inquest."

In the cloudy moonlight the two women crept down stairs and rang loudly at Mr. Burnabee's door.

There was a delay. There always is a delay after the ringing of a city door bell. But to Miss Parkinson and Mrs. Larkins there was a delay which seemed almost interminable before Mr. Burnabee appeared on the scene, a little old red nosed man, with scanty gray hair, a palm leaf patterned dressing gown, and a candle whose feeble flame flickered to and fro while he held it shaded from the night wind with one hand.

"Is it fire," said Mr. Burnabee, "or is it a accident on the elevated road? I've always knowed it would come sooner or later."

"The roof! The roof!" gasped Melinda.

"Save her!" shrieked Mrs. Larkins.

"Eh?" said Mr. Burnabee. "Save who? What are you talking about, ladies?"

"The sleepwalker!" cried Miss Parkinson. "The poor creature who hovers between life and death on the top of this house!"

"We saw a woman on the roof," explained Mrs. Larkins, "and she wouldn't answer when my cousin called to her, and we're almost certain sure she's insane."

Mr. Burnabee's wrinkled countenance broke into a smile.

"There ain't no woman there," said he.

"Man," said Miss Melinda, "you are deceiving us."

"It's nothing on earth," went on Mr. Burnabee, "but my wire dummy as I fit the skirts over. The roof leaked all over her new pink cambric slip in the hard shower yesterday, so I jest set her out on the roof to dry. I put her out at night, because I knowed if I did it in the daytime there'd be no end of people asking questions and minding everybody else's business but their own."

"Oh!" said Miss Parkinson, rather awkwardly.

"Of course," said Mrs. Larkins, biting her lip.

"Much obliged to you, all the same," said Mr. Burnabee blandly, although he still chuckled.

And the two women crept home again.

"Lucretia," said Miss Parkinson, standing opposite her own door.

"W-w-well!" faltered Mrs. Larkins, scarcely able to repress her shivering.

"Don't speak of this to any one, will you?"

"No, I won't" said Mrs. Larkins.

But it is to be feared that she did not keep her word, for Mr. Larkins was full of dark allusions the next day, and Miss Persephona could scarcely speak for laughing.

Miss Parkinson purchased her patterns, and secured her summer ssyles, and hastened speedily back to Centerville, and ever since she declares that all the wealth of the Indies would not induce her to live in that sink of iniquity and head centre of mystery, New York! And if people ask her why, she only shakes her head and says mysteriously:

"Never mind!"—Amy Randolph in New York Ledger.

Thousands Poisoned.

In a recent work on Heart Disease, Dr. Franklin Miles—the noted specialist—gives many new and startling facts. Thousands of people are slowly poisoning themselves, weakening their hearts by the use of tea, coffee, tobacco and alcohol. These are Heart Whips, causing it to beat rapidly, thus gradually wearing it out, producing shortness of breath when exercising, pains in side and shoulder, hungry and faint spells. Finally heart failure and sudden death. For weakened and irritated hearts the press everywhere highly recommend the New Heart Cure discovered by Dr. Franklin Miles, which is for sale by Charles H. Two marked improvements have recently been made in the use of gas for lighthouse illumination. One is a process of enriching gas made from ordinary cooking coal by the addition of hydrocarbons and heated air, the other is the new dioptric lens.

The Great Benefit

Which people in run down state of health derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla, conclusively proves that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength, but Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up in a perfectly natural way all the weakened parts, purifies the blood, and assists to healthy action those important organs, the kidneys and liver.

The heat produced from the light of a fire-fly is only one percent of an equal amount of candle-light. The bug's light is produced by a chemical action, as it is increased by putting the fly in oxygen and dimitished in an atmosphere of nitrogen.

The size of an adult Englishman's head is said to average No. 7. The heads of Portuguese average from 6 7-8 to 7, those of Spaniards are a little larger, and those of Japanese exceed the English average. Germans have round heads, Malays small ones.

I Had Stone in the Bladder

And my kidneys were affected. None of the means taken produced any benefit until I began the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. The pain ceased—the stone having been dissolved by the action of the medicine. I am ready in public or in private to testify that my recovery is due to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy—F. D. Artificial Ice.

The scientific fact on which the making of artificial ice depends is that when a liquid evaporates it uses up a great deal of heat, which it draws from anything that happens to be around it. If a can of water is at hand its temperature is reduced, and if the action goes far enough the water will be frozen. This cooling action can be felt by pouring a little ether or alcohol upon the hand. The liquid evaporates rapidly, and the loss of the heat which it takes up cools the hand very perceptibly. If a bottle containing water is kept wet on the outside with ether, the evaporation will chill the water and eventually freeze it.

This is essentially the process by which the carafes frappees of French restaurants are produced. The decanters filled with fresh water are set in shallow tanks containing brine, which remains liquid balow the temperature at which fresh water freezes. In contact with these tanks are receivers, which can be kept charged with newly formed ether vapor. The chilling vapor cools the brine, and this in turn takes heat from the water in the decanters, which soon freezes.

In making ice on the large scale either ammonia or sulphurous oxide is used instead of ether, because these substances are cheaper and are not inflammable.—F. A. Fernald in Popular Science Monthly.

Hunting Bears.

General E. F. Burton describes a novel method of catching bears practiced by the native hunters of India. Four or five sturdy men are armed, two with long spears, cross barred on the handles close to the sharp, two edged blades, and two or three with ten foot bamboos, of which the ends are smeared with bird lime.

Thus equipped, and leading several powerful dogs, the hunters sally out an hour or so before dawn, and pass along the base of the hills with the fresh morning wind blowing up from the plains below.

If the hunters have luck it is not long before the fierce dogs wind the bear; and though dogs of this species hunt as silent as death, their straining on the leash informs their masters that the shaggy game is nigh.

The dogs are slipped and disappear in the darkness, and soon the roaring and growling show that they have found the game. The hunters run up to the spot where the bear is fighting with the dogs.

The men with limed poles poke the bear in the ribs and adroitly twist the ends in its long hair, thus holding it fast on either flank, and the spearmen complete the tragedy by repeated spear thrusts. It is said that a party of experienced men with good dogs never fail to secure the bear in this way.—Youth's Companion.

Will the Sun Burn Up?

Thousands of curious and ingenious theories have been brought forth to account for the fact that the sun, although he has whirled his burning disk across the heavens for untold ages, continues to burn without being consumed or his bulk being lessened in the least. Some learned men affect to believe that the great orb is a monstrous ball of gas, but even a great ball of gas would be consumed to its utmost atom in the course of a few thousand years. Others pretend to believe that its fires are kept up by the remains of wrecked worlds which are constantly falling into its depths, but even this seems far from probable, not to say a purely absurd conclusion.

In giving his opinion on the last opinion, one of the most eminent astronomers of the day has figured that a mountain range consisting of 176 cubic miles falling into the sun would only be sufficient to maintain the present heat for a single second; a mass equal to that of our earth would engender only enough of heat to last ninety-three years. If these conclusions are correct, and we have no means of proving them false, well may we ask the question: Of what wonderful, indestructible substance is the sun composed?—St

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

GOOD APPOINTMENTS.

Last week Thursday evening at a regular meeting of the Board of Aldermen Mayor Bean appointed for members of the Sewerage Commission Nathaniel J. Watson of No. Woburn for one year; John W. Johnson of Warren street for two years; and James Skinner of Montvale Avenue for three years.

Better men for the responsible position it would be hard to find in this city.

Mr. Watson is a clear-headed, practical man who enjoys the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens of all parties and creeds. With good common sense, strict integrity, and a well cultivated bent for mechanics, he will be found one of the most useful members of the Board and his appointment will turn out to be a very judicious one.

John W. Johnson, Esq., is not only a lawyer of firstrate standing in the profession but he is a man of general business knowledge and habits and one who takes a lively interest in the welfare of our city. Take him as a man of affairs or as a lawyer Mr. Johnson is one of the best persons we have among us for the position, and his appointment will meet with universal approval because everyone admits his fitness and honesty.

In the judgment of the JOURNAL when the Aldermen refused to confirm the appointment of Mr. James Skinner they made a mistake. His rejection looks as though there was "politics in it," and if so it was a wrong step to take. Mr. Skinner is one of the clearest-brained business men in Woburn. Extraordinary success in his private affairs shows him to be so. He has not only sound judgment but he will go as far as the next man to promote the best interests of our city. We should hope that the Aldermen would think better of it and conclude to accept Mr. Skinner as a member of the Committee. They ought to do it too without unnecessary delay so that the Board may be in a condition to act at any time whenever it may become necessary or advisable that they should do so and not be obliged to wait until next September for the completion of the Commission.

THE NEW JUDGE.

On last Wednesday morning Hon. Edward F. Johnson took his seat on the Bench of the Middlesex Fourth District Court vacated the day before by Judge P. L. Converse after an honorable career of seven or eight years. Mr. Johnson was appointed several months ago by Governor Russell on the petition of a large number of prominent citizens and business men of Woburn, Stoneham, Winchester and Burlington which constitute the Judicial District. The appointment is for life, or during good behavior.

Judge Johnson is well qualified for the position in every respect. He was born in 1856; graduated at Harvard University in 1878; from Harvard Law School in 1881; and was admitted to the Bar the same year. Before settling down to practice he traveled in Europe, and since his return he has been a member of the law firm of John W. and Edward F. Johnson, which is a leading one in this city.

Judge Johnson (then, plain Esq.) was elected first Mayor of Woburn in 1888 and re-elected in 1889, and the credit was accorded him on all sides and without reserve of having administered the affairs of the position in an able and successful manner. His handling of the public finances rescued them from loose and dangerous methods and placed the public business on a sure and solid foundation.

Judge Johnson possesses a judicial mind, which is only another term for sound common sense; he is cultivated; has good literary taste; and is fair in his dealings with men. The community will be disappointed if he does not fill the honorable position accepted by him this week with dignity and ability, or fails to deal out even-handed justice to all. But of this there is no danger.

FOR GOVERNOR.

In its issue of date June 27 The Beacon contained a strong editorial in favor of the nomination and election of Hon. W. E. Barrett, ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the next Governor of this State. It gave plausible reasons why it will not do for the Republicans to take up Crapo, Brackett or Greenhalge, and "ex-Governors Long and Robinson are not inclined to re-enter political life, and Mr. Hayden of Woburn is understood to be opposed to accepting a call," etc., and then goes on and makes out an excellent case in behalf of the candidacy of Speaker Barrett. The editorial was frank and fair towards all parties and aspirants but it warmly favored Barrett, and its reasons therefor will doubtless be accepted by good Republicans all over the Commonwealth.

There is one thing about Barrett that makes it pretty safe to bank on his getting there, and that is he hardly ever fails to light on his feet. He has a wonderful faculty for that sort of a thing, and it is seldom the case that his political enterprises are defeated by the enemy or seriously interfered with by them. Barrett is able—no question about that; and he is honest; and the politician that gets the better of him must arise early in the morning and keep his eye peeled all the time.

ALL QUIET ON THE POTOMAC.

The newspapers have but little to say concerning the governorship of our State at the present time, but it is fair to presume that a great many people are keeping up a de'il of thinking, all the same.

THAT LETTER.

The honorable gentleman from Waltham who has been Rev. Hugh Montgomery's counsel in his raid on the Woburn rumsellers lately, wrote a letter last Monday severely criticising some decisions which Judge Converse made in those cases and formally withdrawing from the prosecution of them.

We do not know whether the decisions of Judge Converse were good law or not but it is very clear to our mind that the honorable gentleman's letter was not good manners, but on the other hand that it was a piece of impertinence the like of which no real firstclass lawyer would be guilty of. It was disrespectful to the judiciary of the State and a breach of courtesy and gentlemanly deportment which no member of the Bar professedly working for the advancement of the good cause of temperance should ever allow his anger to lead him into.

PROBATION OFFICER.

Last week the JOURNAL, in its modest way, suggested the propriety of appointing Mr. Edward Simonds to be Probation Officer, under the new law, for the Middlesex Fourth District Court, which suggestion Judge Johnson accepted and promptly acted on when he took his seat on the Bench last Wednesday morning.

We said all that was necessary to be said concerning Mr. Simonds's fitness for the office in our recommendation and all that we deem it of any moment to add is the fact that Judge Johnson's choice of a Probation Officer, so far as we have heard, meets with cordial and unanimous approval.

FOURTH OF JULY.

Tomorrow will occur the 116th anniversary of American Independence which was declared in the first year of the Revolutionary War.

Being a day of great importance in history it has always been the custom of the American people to celebrate it in a spirit of National pride and with patriotic zeal. It has been for over 100 years the principal holiday of this Republic and the enthusiasm with which the return of the auniversary is hailed by her citizens, and more especially by "Young America," has not abated one jot or tittle in modern times, and we hope it never will.

Hurrah for the Stars and Stripes!

KEEPS RIGHT ON HOEING.

Rev. Hugh Montgomery is going to prosecute Woburn's Mayor and Aldermen in his anti-liquor crusade. Mr. Montgomery has a hard row to hoe, but he keeps right on hoeing.—Boston Record.

The dominie is plucky and not easily put down. He is Rum's mortal enemy and to fight it with all his might and main and with any weapons within reach he believes is doing the Lord's will and pleasure.

☞ The News, the new 1-cent morning daily of Boston, is as smart as a whip and is making headway into the good graces of the public like all creation. We like it firstrate. It is stalwart Republican from centre to circumference, fearless, square-toed, able, and is bound to give the old fogies of the Hub trouble before a great while. Success to the News, and may its shadow never grow less!

☞ Representative Thos. D. Hevey has laid us under obligations to him for a copy of the "Manual of the General Court for 1891," for which we return thanks.

— Mr. Leonard Thompson, one of last week's JOURNAL'S "Some Old Settlers," went into business in June, 1842, in the Wade Block, but first embarked in the hardware trade in 1852. That makes him a Woburn business man of 49 years standing and places him next to Mr. William Woodbury.

— A due regard for Civil Service rules would entitle Janitor John Connolly to the appointment of City Lockup Keeper to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Simonds. He is in every respect well fitted for the office and we hope it is true that his appointment is as good as settled.

— The No. Woburn Land Co. have offered to give to the Boston & Maine RR. Co. a very liberal slice of land on which to erect their machine shops which must leave East Cambridge before long. The land offered is admirably adapted to the business and the Railroad folks may accept it yet.

— Mr. William Kimball writes from his home at Milton, N. H., on June 26: "The country never looked lovlier, and there is a promise of unusual abundance of berries of all kinds, particularly blackberries and raspberries. Apples will be the same as last year—a short crop. Everything else promises well."

— Bright and early on last Monday we were favored with a brief but pleasant call from L. B. Hatch, Esq., Editor and Proprietor of the Plymouth County Journal, one of the best and most prosperous papers down in the Cape country. Mr. Hatch appears to be a worthy member of the pencil-pushing fraternity, and a gentleman besides.

— Several of the finest inside views of parts of our Public Library ever taken are those produced last Memorial Day by Mr. Baldwin Coolidge, a Boston photograph resident of this city. They are far superior to the very best yet made, and Albert Thompson, the painter, says they are altogether the finest he ever saw either in this country or Europe.

— Mr. Joseph R. Green, who has moved to Sharon in this State, writes the JOURNAL that his father Mr. Oliver Green, for many years an esteemed citizen of Woburn, died last Wednesday in his chair at the Green residence of heart failure and that "it was all over in a few minutes." He had been ill about six weeks. His death will be sad news to a large circle of friends and acquaintances in this city.

— We are in receipt of a "Circular of Information" concerning "Heartrest Sanatory" in New York City established and conducted by Drs. Ephraim and John A. Cutter for the treatment of many chronic diseases. The Boston office of the Doctors Cutter is at 24 Boylston st., corner of Tremont, where one or the other of them may be consulted on Thursday and Friday forenoons every other week.

— City Solicitor Adams is of the opinion that the city of Woburn is not bound to purchase the Armory lot of the Winn Estate for the reason that the contract was not signed by a majority of the Committee, as required by the City Ordinances. The agreement was signed by only one of the Committee of five. Equitably, he thinks, the city should buy the land, as the Committee assented to its purchase.

— Conductor "Dick" Carton remains with the RR. Company but will not be obliged to move to Wilmington. Conductor O. J. Hart and his son "Ed." have arranged things satisfactorily with Super Sanborn, and will live in Woburn principally. Yardmaster Webber goes to Wilmington, so also, Isaac Phillips, Engineer Sutherland, and some others. Not a dozen people in all will move from this city to Wilmington on account of the change.

— Dr. John M. Harlow, Mrs. Harlow, and Miss Maria S. Merrill, who is a teacher in the Andover Phillips Academy where also Mrs. Harlow was formerly an instructor, left this city on the morning of June 23 for a trip into Northern Vermont, the Doctor's native soil. They visited the beautiful city of Burlington on Lake Champlain, scenes on Lake George, and spent several days at Saratoga where time flew very pleasantly indeed. The party found everything in nature clothed in the sweetest and greenest of early summer garbs and as beautiful and attractive as only Vermont fields, woods, waters and skies can be. Dr. and Mrs. Harlow and Miss Merrill returned, after their delightful trip, on last Monday evening well and happy.

— Mr. J. R. Slattery of Boston, a younger brother of Rev. Lawrence W. Slattery, Assistant Pastor of St. Charles church in this city, graduated from Harvard Medical College last week with a good standing in his class and a handsome piece of sheepskin. He will open an office and practice the healing art in Boston. Another younger brother of Fr. Slattery is studying Blackstone, Coke, Kent, etc. and will soon appear out a full-fledged limb of the law.

— The following are the recently elected officers of Ionic Lodge, 86, K. of P.: John T. Given, Chancellor Commander; B. Frank Waldron, Vice-Chancellor; Samuel H. Patten, Prelate; William S. Latteny, Keeper of Records and Seal; William A. Mullett, Master of Finance; John H. Nason, Master of Exchequer; Allen T. Weeks, Master at Arms; William J. Singer, Trustee for 18 months; J. E. Osborne, O. G.; G. W. Waughn, I. G. The installation will take place next Monday evening.

— The reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Chamberlain at their pleasant residence, No 8 Eastern Avenue, on last Thursday evening week, to Miss Stevens of Baltimore, was a very delightful affair. About 100 high society people of this city were present who were lavish of their praise of the courtesies received from Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain. In various ways a happy evening was passed, and it was with many regrets that the party broke up and departed when the proper hour for it arrived.

— Of course nobody of any respectability will think of getting along to-morrow without a Penobscot River salmon for dinner. It wouldn't be any kind of a 4th without that—the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. And of course nobody who would have the very best Penobscot River salmon that the market affords would think of going any where else for it than to Tabor's City Fish Market—of course not! Tabor has a big stock of it on hand and it is the finest Penobscot River salmon ever struck this city.

— There is to be a union temperance meeting at the First Congregational church at 7 o'clock on next Sunday evening to devise ways and means to stop to some extent at least the illegal sale of rum in this city. Dr. March will preside. The pastors of the various churches will make short addresses but Hon. B. B. Johnson of Waltham will deliver the principal speech of the evening. Good music will be furnished, and as all the protestant churches have united in the matter a rousing meeting may be expected.

— There are quite a small army of railroad men living in this city. They are engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, etc., and they are a unit in the opinion that Mr. D. W. Sanborn is the best Super the B. & L. has ever had. "Why he's white all through" said one of them the other morning when answering a reporter's question as to the Wilmington change; "he's a long way the best Super we've had yet," declared another. The way Supt. Sanborn has managed and arranged with his men about the removal to Wilmington has pleased them very much.

— In the JOURNAL'S enumeration of the people now in business in this city and have been for the last 25 years and more the name of Mr. F. B. Dodge was unintentionally omitted from the list. Such an old and prominent business man should not have been overlooked. Mr. Dodge began trade as a jeweler in Woburn in 1858 at No. 3 Wade Block where he remained 15 years. At the end of that period he moved into his present fine store and has been carrying on a successful business there for the last 18 years. He has always enjoyed a large patronage and has thrived handsomely on it.

— J. Grafton Murdock of the High School Class of '91 is enjoying boating and fishing at the Ne-mat-ta-no, North Lubec, Maine. The Y. M. C. A. of Mass. have secured land at this grand summer resort and have erected the Ne-mat-ta-no, one of the best hotels along the coast. State Secretary Armstrong and family, General Secretary Whitford of Cambridge and his family, and hosts of Y. M. C. A. people and their friends are made happy at the Ne-mat-ta-no. Mr. Murduck will enter upon his duties as salesman at Messrs. Brown, Durrell & Co. wholesale dealers, cor. Kingston and Essex streets, Boston, on July 13th.

— An estimable Winchester lady had one of her eyes painfully injured in front of Mr. Lovell's drugstore about 5 o'clock last Saturday afternoon, from which she still suffers. A person passing along near there a swinging rope which is used in connection with the awning (which was being raised) it struck the lady directly across her eye and produced a shock from which she nearly fainted away. Recovering somewhat she stepped into Mr. Cummings's store where a gentlemanly clerk fetched water, bathed the eye, and when the pain had somewhat abated she took a street car for home. Too much care cannot be exercised in matters of this kind, especially when ladies and children are on the street.

— We received a pleasant and encouraging note from our old townsman, Mr. J. W. Bedelle of Fitchburg, the other day and also several papers of the city, for which he will please accept our thanks. Mr. Bedelle has charge of a leather business at Fitchburg which he says is in a very prosperous condition—very different from what it is here. He hired 5 Woburn curriers the other day to which class of workmen about the same wages are paid as in Woburn, he says. Fitchburg is a thriving city, and having a multiplicity of industries it does not suffer from dull times as Woburn and other places with a single principal mechanical industry do. Mr. Bedelle is evidently happy.

— Mr. J. R. Carter of this city and Mr. J. M. Perley of Stoneham have purchased Mr. J.B. McDonald's big coal plant, stock and good will and will hereafter conduct the business under the firm style of Carter & Perley. The purchase was a large transaction for Mr. McDonald was one of the most extensive coal dealers in this county. The property has fallen into good hands. Mr. Carter is an old citizen who commands the confidence and respect of everybody on general principles, and as a coal merchant of several years standing in this city his reputation stand beyond the reach of adverse criticism. As a business man and member of the community no one occupies a higher position than he does, and it is understood here that his partner, Mr. Perley, is a gentleman who will do to tie to. The new firm has the best wishes of the JOURNAL for its success.

— Here are some figures that might be used to advantage at the great temperance meeting next Sunday evening:

May, 1890, total of arrests,		23
" " arrests for drunkenness,		15
June, " total arrests,		18
" " arrests for drunkenness,		10
May, 1891, total of arrests,		59
" " arrests for drunkenness,		36
June, " arrests,		60
" " arrests for drunkenness,		21
" " " common drunkards,		13

In June 1890, there was only one arrest of common drunkard.

These statements contain food for reflection and also a moral. During May and June, 1890, under prohibition sway, there were 25 arrests for drunkenness in this city; while during the corresponding months in 1891, under license, there were 57 arrests for the same cause—almost 3 to 1. These figures tell the story only partially. They do not fairly represent the excess of drunkenness in 1891 over that of 1890, for everyone knows that but a small perce nt of intoxicated persons ever find their way into court. But they indicate to some extent the relative degree of sobriety in this city under prohibitory and license rule.

— The newspapers which we received from Ralph A. Tenney, map and atlas publisher, Lakeside Building, Chicago, last Monday morning, were "worth their weight in gold." One was a copy of The Geneseo (Ill.) Republic of the issue Vol. 1, No. 44, and date of April 1, 1857; and the other was a copy of Tenney's Advertiser, Vol. 1, No. 1, date July 1, 1858, published at Kewanee, Henry County, Ill., by R. A. Tenney, the Chicago gentleman who kindly sent us the copies. The former became the property of the writer in 1858 and continued to be edited by him for 20 years straight from the start, during the first part of which period it was obliged many times to apply the lash of correction to the back of the latter, which was one of the toughest Democratic papers in all that region of country—and still remains so, although Mr. Tenney left it years and years ago for a more lucrative business. A good many things have happened in those 33 and 34 years since Tenney and the author of this item were running newspapers together out in the Prairie State. We were both younger then than now and had more fun than people similarly circumstanced have now-a-days, judging from appearances. Things were primative, new, raw like our sod-corn, and there was not so much "style" or "society" then to interfere with ones freedom of gait as was afterwards set up and adhered to. Those were rattling old times, and it was a rattling old country to enjoy them in.

Bells, Music, Cannon, Parade, Fire Works, Band Concerts, Field Sports, Children's Entertainments, Trades, Military and Civic Processions, Bicycle Races, etc., etc.

To-morrow is to be a big day in this city. Arrangements are completed for a 4th of July celebration on a grand scale. The above sets forth in general what the celebration will consist of.

Come Everybody!

City Council.

Both branches of the city government held a meeting last Thursday evening week and when they got through they adjourned to next fall.

In the Common Council an order was passed transferring from miscellaneous, $400 for almshouse, $500 for City Hall, and $500 for printing.——Concurred with the Aldermen in ordering curbstones in several localities, and allowing the Pautasette Leather Company to lay a track across two streets and locating fire alarm boxes at the almshouse and on Eastern avenue.——Mary A. Page was given leave to withdraw on her petition for damages for injuries.——Orders were passed providing for the indexing of town and city reports from 1868 to date; placing curb-stones around the common, appropriating $100 for celebrating July 4, and Councilmen O'Donnell, Waldron and Simonds were appointed a committee.——Petitions: From Isaac W. Butler and others for laying out of Tremont street; Duncan McPherson and others, laying out grade; William T. Kendall and others, water trough at corner of Salem and Cedar streets; Matthew Cassidy and others, electric light at corner of Washington and Albany streets.——Adjourned to Sept. 10.

Mayor Bean presided over the meeting of the Board of Aldermen.

The Mayor nominated and the Board confirmed: Alphonzo P. Webber as a Public Weigher, and John W. Francis and James E. Boutwell special police without pay.——The Mayor made the following nominations for Sewer Commissioners: Nathaniel S. Watson, one year; Orlando W. Johnson, two years; and James Skinner, three years.——The first two were confirmed, but Mr. Skinner was refused confirmation by a vote of 2 blanks, 1 no, 3 yes.——Several permits to sell fireworks were granted, and Margery McEleney petitioned for changes in the line of Water street.——A communication was received from Rev. Hugh Montgomery, asking that licenses of certain liquor dealers be forfeited on account of maintaining entrances other than those direct upon a public street. ——The document asked for a hearing, when all the facts would be presented. On motion of Alderman Davis the rules were suspended, and the paper received. The Aldermen then moved that the petitioner have leave to withdraw, and it was so voted unanimously.——The sum of $100 was appropriated for the Fourth of July celebration.——Alderman Finn offered an order, which was adopted, requiring the city clerk to specify in the liquor licenses that all enterance to saloons, except those leading direct to a public street, be kept closed.——The Mayor appointed as his Fourth of July committee, Aldermen Finn, Pushee and Walsh.——Adjourned.

School Meeting.

The Board held a meeting on last Tuesday evening.

Miss Carrie A. Fowle, Miss Jennie E. Gallagher, Miss M. Emma Perkins, Miss Annie L. Naven and Miss Annie M. Pike applied for positions as teachers and Miss Blanche L. True and Miss Mary C. Goode applied for admission as trainers.

A letter from Mr. Samuel Mendum read declining a re-appointment as military instructor as the duties were too great in addition to those of Principal of the High School. It was voted to accept his declination. The Board then went into executive session for the appointment of teachers for the next school year.

All the old teachers were re-appointed and in addition, Miss M. Emily Perkins was appointed as a teacher at Montvale. Miss Perkins is a daughter of the late George Perkins. Miss Marietta H. Bowers was transferred from Main Street School to the Highland School and Miss Mary J. Wakeford from Montvale to Main Street School.

Montvale.

We have a Band of Mercy in our school which, you know, is for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and it is flourishing first rate. There is no better or more praiseworthy society in the world than the B. of M.

The closing exhibition of our school was given in the Hall in this village on June 25 and was one of the best and most satisfactory ever attended here. Our teachers are the ablest in the city and under their instruction the best of progress is made by the pupils in their studies. Miss Augusta M. Fellows is Principal of the school and Miss Annie M. Henshaw of our room is one of the most successful instructors that ever laid the birch over an unruly boy's back. She is a fine scholar and stands without a superior as a teacher of youth. The exhibition went off in the best of shape and a great crowd witnessed and enjoyed it.

A Valuable Collection of Autographs.

The effort of making a collection of autographs, or, indeed a collection of anything, is a labor involving greater difficulties than the inexperienced realize. Such undertakings require, first of all, the expenditure of much time, patience, and perseverance; to say nothing of the expenditure of money. Influence must be exerted with friends in all quarters to procure the autographs of distinguished men, and an extensive correspondence must be entered into to obtain the desired material. A notable collection of this sort has just been presented to the Woburn Public Library, and the results, after arranging, fill two quarto scrap-books of reasonable thickness. This collection was gathered by the late George M. Champney, Librarian, and given to the Library by his son Edwin G. Champney, now residing at Lexington. The collection numbers some 940 pieces, not including labels containing descriptions. Most of the specimens are actual letters in the handwriting of the persons whose autographs have been secured, and the letters, of themselves, in many cases, are valuable and interesting. The collection in a sense, is a democratic one, for here are letters from men in every station of life from those who have distinguished themselves even in a moderate degree, to those who occupy the highest positions of power and influence.

Turning over the first volume we come to such names as Marshall Jewell, N. P. Banks, John A. Andrew, Raphael Semmes, autograph letter, contributed by request, William Lloyd Garrison, Horace Mann, Alexander H. Stephens, Daniel Webster, Charles Francis Adams, John Quincy Adams, Alexander Hamilton, James Munroe, J. C. Calhoun, Caleb Cushing, Rufus Choate, Robert C. Winthrop, Edward Everett, Wm. M. Evarts, Charles Sumner, Horatio Seymour, Hannibal Hamlin, M. R. Waite, Gideon Welles, John A. Dix, Hamilton Fish, Henry Wilson, P. T. Barnum, U. S. Grant, R. B. Hayes, and many others of national eminence.

Another division contains the autographs of James Russell Lowell, Charlotte Cushman, Louisa M. Alcott, Lydia Maria Child, Maria Mitchell, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Adeline D. T. Whitney, with sample of manuscript, Sophia Hawthorne, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Thomas Ball, Edwin Forrest, William Willard, F. E. Church, William M. Hunt, Henry K. Oliver with specimens of his musical composition, Martin Milmore, H. H. Richardson, Wendell Phillips, Richard H. Dana, Jr., E. P. Whipple, Lord Macaulay, Washington Irving, J. G. Palfrey, Benjamin Peirce, James Martineau, Charles Dudley Warner, Horace Howard Furness, Benson J. Lossing, Bret Harte, Bayard Taylor, William D. Howells, John G. Whittier, William Cullen Bryant, Ralph Waldo Emerson, H. W. Longfellow, Theodore Parker, Henry Ward Beecher, Richard A. Proctor and others eminent in literature and art.

The second volume contains the autographs of Isaac I. Hayes, Joseph T. Buckingham, Horace Bushnell, James Walker, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Edmund H. Sears, Jared Sparks, L. Agassiz, Ben: Perley Poore, D. R. Locke (Nasby) Dean Stanley, Henry W. Bellows, James Freeman Clarke, Robert Collyer, Phillips Brooks, Thomas Starr King, F. D. Huntington, and many others.

There are besides two autographs of the Duke of Bedford, lately deceased, addressed from Woburn Abbey, England. Also autographs of W. H. Vanderbilt, and Brigham Young, J. G. Blaine, A. G. Thurman, and others.

Also in the second volume is another autograph of U. S. Grant, and autographs of W. T. Sherman, P. H. Sheridan, T. F. Bayard and F. E. Spinner.

Not at all unimportant is the section devoted to citizens of Woburn and persons identified with the place. This department will grow more valuable in the course of years. The following selections illustrative of the career of Woburn are taken from the second volume.

John M. Marsters, a former pastor of the Unitarian Society, in a long letter, writes;

"In my walks and runs on the heights about the Cambridge valley, I often see the hills and steeples that mark the site of your village, and the sight stirs me to my best moods and thoughts, for in Woburn I found the best society to work in, I have ever found. My first Sabbath in Woburn seemed to bode ill; it was a day of snow, and only a dozen or twenty came together to listen to my wretched words. The prospect held out to me was not flattering, but I determined to try. I found myself borne on in my two years of preaching, which closed in April, 1855. I was splendidly supported, our members steadily increased. In a year we found the church building too small. One season we canvassed the whole village for purposes of charity; and found two results, first, everybody willing to give; and second, few needing to be given to. Our noble-hearted men of means gave their money as a ferment to stir up the town to be a well-equipped town. We made the lyceum flourish; we built the new hall; we brought gas to Woburn and lighted the streets; and made it known that a Christian purpose could be as strong to make a good town as a good church.

"It is the record of two years;—to Woburn and our society I suppose the thought of it has vanished,—not so to me: the memory of it is precious and beautiful, and will always be so.

"Of course, when I think of these bright things, the recollection of my own imperfections casts a cloud over them all. Fortunately for the society, a sharp sickness put an end to my 'drowsy tinklings' and incoherent nonentities of speech, and opened the way for a fine line of men."

James Walker, President of Harvard University, under date of Feb. 27, 1874, says:—

"I was born in Woburn, six years before that part of it which was my native place became Burlington. May I suggest, what has doubtless already occurred to you, that one object of libraries should be to collect and preserve every scrap of print or manuscript which will help to throw light on the past condition and folklore of their respective localities. In many families heir-looms have come down, in the form of diaries, documents, letters, surveys, or the like, of great importance in settling facts and dates, which in process of time will infallibly be lost unless safely deposited under the lock and key of some permanent institution. These things have no money value and probably would be of no expense to the library except that involved in devoting a single drawer to their safe-keeping.

"Woburn has had its full share of men of note. Edward Johnson was the author of one of our early New England classics. Count Rumford impressed himself on the science, the economy, and the institutions of the Old World as much perhaps as any other American of his day. And I need not mention the individuals and whole families, born and brought up among you in later times, who by their public or professional services, or by their business talents or skill, have won success or distinction. You will take care that memorials of such men are preserved in the community, and amidst the homes, which gave them birth; and it will not be without its moral effect. Your children will be more likely to be stimulated and encouraged by the example of these persons from the very fact that they grew up in the same neighborhood, were familiar with the same playgrounds, fished in the same streams and ponds, and began their studies in the same schools, as themselves."

Samuel Batchelder, of Cambridge, under date of June 11, 1874, says:—

"When you were at my house on the occasion of my ninetieth birthday, you expressed a wish for my autograph for your Woburn repository. You must obtain a valuable collection in the native place of Colonel Baldwin and Count Rumford. The former I remember very well sixty-eight years ago, when he was engaged upon the canals on the Merrimack River [Col. Baldwin died in 1807]; and during the winter of 1808, I was acquainted with some families in Green Street [Boston?] where the Countess of Rumford frequently visited, and I occasionally walked home with her and called upon her."

Pine Banks Park.

Very rich men are not always blessings to the communities in which they dwell. Oftener than otherwise they are the reverse of this. Generally speaking they hold their money with a tight grip that increases in strength as they draw nearer and nearer to the end of their earthly span when they must yield up their possessions, be they much or little, into other hands to be enjoyed, or otherwise, by other possessors. Unwisely most rich men prefer a post-mortem distribution of their gold and jewels, their houses and lands, their flocks and herds, rather than the pleasure of being the executors of their own wills; the satisfaction of seeing their riches go where they would have them go instead of lining the pockets of voracious Attorneys; and the delight of reaping the rewards while in the flesh of doing good and making people better and happier.

There are exceptions to the rule however, and Hon. E. S. Converse of Malden is a notable one. As a principal proprietor of one of the most extensive and prosperous rubber manufactories in the country he is held to be among the wealthiest business men of Boston. His fine summer home is in Malden in which flourishing city he has large landed possessions which are made to contribute to the advancement of the city's material interests. Mr. Converse is justly regarded by his fellow citizens as a benefactor, and for his munificent public bequests and innumerable private charities, as well as for his many sterling qualities of head and heart, he is held in the highest esteem by all classes of Malden people.

Among his princely gifts recently made to the city of Malden is a splendid Public Library which cost more than $100,000, and which excels in size, beauty of design and finish and wealth of contents all other institutions of the kind to be found in the environs of Boston, always excepting Woburn's magnificent Public Library. Mr. Converse has of late years dealt most generously by the Malden churches, schools, and public enterprises for the general good, and in this way he has built a monument to his own memory that will outlast any marble shaft that a grateful people may raise over his grave. This monument is to be found in the hearts and affections of his neighbors, friends and fellow citizens.

But one of the noblest public gifts which Mr. Converse has ever made is that of Pine Banks Park, a magnificent piece of original country located in Malden, containing several hundred acres, and forming one of the most delightful pleasure grounds in New England. They lie adjacent to the broad thoroughfare that leads from Malden Square to Melrose and charming Melrose Highlands and Woburn over which the fine horse cars of the East Middlesex Street Railroad make frequent trips, and opposite the famous Middlesex Fells, whose hills and rocks and woods have of late become a favorite resort for lovers of primeval nature.

There are two entrances to Pine Banks, the principal one being guarded by a pretty rustic keeper's Lodge flanked with beds of bright flowers artistically arranged, and cobiestone work and flowering shrubbery. From the broad and admirably kept avenues leading from the entrances run other avenues, and from these in turn branch woodroads, bridle-paths and trails, each canopied by tall, stately, pines whose aromatic scent is not only grateful to the sense but is a healing balm for many physical ills. The Park contains several hundred acres charmingly diversified with native pine and deciduous growth, rock-ribbed hills, dales, glens, ravines, grottoes and dells. There are little lakes, clear brooks, and sheer granite walls scattered through the grounds the whole forming one of the most picturesque and delightful scenes anywhere to be met and enjoyed in this part of the country. From an observatory on one of the highest hills in the Park (soon to be succeeded by a more costly and enduring one) a magnificent view of the surrounding cities, towns, ocean and country is obtained. From this elevation ancient Marblehead, Lynn, Swampscott, Nahant, the Beaches, Boston Harbor, the Hub, and numerous other places are seen, the whole comprising a panorama which for beauty and interest is unsurpassed.

Pine Banks is daily visited by scores and hundreds of people and on Sundays it is full and running over. Family groups, picnic parties, solitary pleasure-seekers, equestrians, and handsome equipages, are always to be seen moving about over the broad acres of woods and hills and add variety to the landscape. By means of the admirably equipped street cars of the East Middlesex Street Railroad people can quickly, easily and cheaply reach Pine Banks from Boston, Chelsea, Somerville, Lynn, Woburn, Stoneham, and other neighboring points, and not a summer day passes that they do not avail themselves of the privilege of breathing country air and luxuriating on the beauties of nature by visiting this delightful spot.

And all this was the gift of Hon. E. S. Converse for the benefit and pleasure of the people. For this and other munificent presents to his fair city his name will forever be held in remembrance by an appreciative and grateful community.

Hardly in Good Taste.

It was hardly in good taste or dignity, at any rate, for B. B. Johnson to indulge in his fling at Judge Converse just as the latter leaves the bench, after 33 years of service. Mr. Johnson should cool down and wait. He will have a new "court" of his own name now.—Boston Record.

THE WORD MADE FLESH.

LESSON I, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 5.

Text of the Lesson, John i, 1-18—Commit Verses, 11-13—Golden Text, John i, 14—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

We now enter upon the simplest, and yet the highest and deepest of all the gospels.

1. "In the beginning was the Word."

We are here introduced to the Son of God as "The Word," the telling out of the Father's heart by whom we are to know the Father. By people's words, if they are honest, we know their hearts, so by the Son as the Word of God we shall know our Heavenly Father's heart toward us.

"And the Word was with God, and the Word was God."

Can we for a moment wonder at His oneness with the Father before He ever came as a man?

2. "The same was in the beginning with God."

The words "in the beginning" in this verse and the last take us to Gen. i, 1; but who can tell when "the beginning" was?

3 "All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made."

See how full the statement in Col. i, 16, 17, which closes with these words, "All things were created by Him and for Him; and He is before all things, and by Him all things consist."

4. "In Him was Life, and the Life was the Light of men."

Apart from Him no one, however good morally or even religiously, has what the Scriptures call Life.

5. "And the Light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not."

Weak eyes cannot bear natural light, neither can sinners bear the light of God, unless they are willing to be healed, and then Christ, the Light of God, will first be their healer and then their life (Jer. xxxiii, 6; John x, 10). And they will soon learn to sing "Behold, God is my salvation" (or health) (Isa. xii, 2).

6. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John."

We now turn for a few moments from the Light to the herald of the Light. Jesus testified of him that "Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist" (Matt. xi, 11).

7. "The same came for a witness to bear witness of the Light, that all men through Him might believe."

The Spirit said through Malachi, "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me" (Mal. iii, 1). This is now the business of every believer, to bear witness to the Light by letting the Light fill them and shine through them.

8. "He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light."

He bore witness by the Spirit in him, by whom he was filled from his birth (Luke i, 15), and we can only be witnesses by the same Spirit (Acts i, 8).

9. "That was the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

See His own oft repeated, "I am the Light of the world" (John viii, 12; ix, 5; xii, 46), and give good heed to the fact that there is no need to walk in darkness.

10. "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not."

Having created all things for His pleasure and glory, He created man in His own image as the head of all things and to have dominion over all things (Gen. i, 27, 28); but man having by sin defaced the image and lost the dominion, the Creator came in human form as a man to restore the image and the dominion. Yet He was treated as a stranger in the world which He had made. Seek, by in some faint measure putting yourself in His place, to realize somewhat the state of things here described.

11. "He came unto His own, and His own received Him not."

"A stranger to His brethren and an alien unto His mother's children" (Ps. lxix, 8). Even Job's experience when brethren were far from him, acquaintances estranged, kinsfolk failed, familiar friends forgot, a stranger in his own house, wife, children, servants, all against him (Job xix, 13-19)—even this was not equal to the experience of God manifest in the flesh.

12. "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power (or the right or privilege) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe in His name."

While the nation rejected Him a few believed on Him, and this was their privilege. Each hearer has it in his or her power to keep Him out or let Him in, and thus continue in darkness and death, or pass from death to life.

13. "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

The Jews thought that because they were of the blood of Abraham, descended from him, that therefore they were safe (viii, 33). They were full of the works of the flesh, their own doings, and that was their righteousness in which they trusted.

14. "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth."

As the glory of God was concealed from the people in the Holy of Holies, within the veil, in the tabernacle and in the temple, so in the body of the Lord Jesus, as within a veil (Heb. x, 20) the glory was concealed from natural eyes while He was here in humiliation. But on the Mount of Transfiguration it shone forth.

15. "John bare witness of Him, and cried, saying, This was He of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me, for He was before me."

Not as a man born of woman was Jesus, Son of Mary, before John, son of Elizabeth, but as John's creator and the creator of all men.

16. "And of His fullness have all we received, and grace for grace."

"It pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell." "In Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. i, 19; ii, 9). And we are filled full in Him. Receiving Him (verse 12) we must have all that He has and is.

17. "For the law was given by Moses, but Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ."

The law showed what man ought to be, but never could give life nor make man what he ought to be, because of his sinful nature, which cannot keep God's holy law.

18. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."

See the first clause of the verse repeated in I John iv, 12. Jesus said to Philip, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father" (John xiv, 9). Wherever, in all Scripture, you read of any manifestation of God, see there the only begotten Son, "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting" (Mic. v, 2), and your Bible will take on a new meaning and shine with a new light.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Analysis of individual beets indicate that maturity, more than size, determines the sugar contents of the beet. A high weight of leaves, as compared with the roots, was no evidence of higher sugar content, but rather the reverse.

POPLAR LEAVES.

The wind blows down the dusty street;
And through my soul that grieves—
It brings a sudden odor sweet,
A smell of poplar leaves.

O leaves that herald in the spring,
O freshness young and pure,
Into my weary soul you bring
The vigor to endure.

The wood is near, but out of sight,
Where all the poplars grow;
Straight up and tall and silver white,
They quiver in a row.

My love is out of sight, but near;
And through my soul that grieves,
A sudden memory wafts her here
As fresh as poplar leaves.

Napoleon and the Scientists.

Napoleon was fond of the society of scientists, and rewarded with prizes and honors the most noteworthy of scientific discoveries. Although at war with "perfide Albion," as he was wont to call England, he drew the line at scientists, and pardoned English prisoners at the simple request of Joseph Priestley, after all other means had been exhausted, and acceded to the award of 3,000 francs by the first class of the Institute to Davy for his celebrated memoir of 1806. It was Bonaparte who proposed to award a gold medal to Volta, after reading his memoir on galvanism, and later induced Volta, by emoluments and titles, to surrender his Italian professorship for a residence in Paris.

When the memorable expedition to Egypt set sail Bonaparte took with him many savants and academicians. After the wager of battle had turned against the great soldier, and he was transported to the lonely St. Helena, he must have felt that the last tie to France had been severed when, in 1817, he felt forced to resign his chair in the Academy of Sciences.—W. C. Cahall, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

Dangerous Knowledge.

A certain illiterate man had married a woman with just enough education to want to air what little learning she did have. As she became older, the habit of using big words grew into a mania. The pocket dictionary did great service in perplexing her associates, and many a disgusted reply did she receive from delayed grocerymen who were in haste to get back to business, but she only moralized the more upon the "illumination" of mankind.

Suddenly her husband became very successful in his lumber speculation, and his wife seemed to think that bigger words would add to the dignity of her new position.

One day a former townsman visiting in the town congratulated the lady upon her brighter fortunes. He was rather taken back at the reply, "Oh, yes, Joshiah and I have had quite a boomerang since you were here!"—Lewistown Journal.

A Problem About Corn.

Here is a puzzle in geometry. It does not require a skilled mathematician, however, to solve it.

It is required to demonstrate (geometrically) that a larger crop of corn can be grown on an acre of level ground than on an acre of slanting ground. The stalks of corn are supposed to grow perpendicularly in both cases, and all other particulars, such as fertility of the soil and the like, to be the same.

The ingenious reader will probably have no trouble in solving the problem without assistance.—New York Tribune.

True Gentleman.

Old words are continually receiving new definitions. Two negroes were talking about their respective employers.

"Well, now," said one, "nobody can't say but Mr. Loftus is a real gentleman."

"Oh, no," answered the other, "he's well enough. But he ain't no such man as my boss. My boss is always jes' so. Why, I see him step on a bananer peel t'other day, an' it didn't frustrate his dignity the leastest bit."—Youth's Companion.

Never purchase glasses from a peddler or a jeweler. Even opticians, except the most careful ones, practically allow the customer to make his own selection, and if he is near sighted he commonly selects glasses which are too strong, while if he is far sighted he selects such as enlarge the print, or else are of too low a number, from the false idea that this will favor a long preservation of his sight.

Arguing from the measurement of the fifty-second parallel of north latitude, between Valencia, Ireland, and Orsk, Russia, the conclusion is reached that the earth's surface on this parallel is not that of an ellipsoid of revolution. This confirms the conclusions reached in this country when the forty-second parallel was measured, and shows that the earth is not a perfect spheroid.

In Elizabeth's reign the English army wore a variety of colors, but a change occurred in 1584, when some of the troops for Ireland wore coats of motley and others of "sadd greene or russet." The cavalry at this time wore red cloaks and breeches, and the infantry who went to low countries wore red coats.

The beautiful Maltese lace, made of black or white Barcelone silk, sprang from the philanthropy of Lady Hamilton Chichester, who exhibited to the native lace makers a Greek coverlet and induced them to imitate its exquisite mesh.

Tuisco, from which the word Tuesday was derived, was one of the most ancient and popular gods of ancient Germany. The third day of the week was dedicated to his worship.

The Wonderful Tower.

The highest structure in the world is Eiffel Tower, at Paris, 1,000 feet high. But the great discovery of Dr. Franklin Miles is certain to tower far above it in promoting human happiness and health. This wonderful nerve medicine builds up worn out systems, cures fits, sparms, headache, nervous prostration, dizziness, sleeplessness, monthly pains, sexual troubles, etc. Mrs. John R. Miller, of Valparaiso, Ind., and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., gained 20 pounds a month while taking it. THE GENUS NEWSBOY.

Unwritten Laws Which He Observes with Commendable Strictness.

Etiquette is not confined to the Four Hundred by any means. Even the newsboys of this great town have a code of manners which is carefully kept up even without the surveillance of a McAllister.

Watch one board a horse car, for instance. He swings himself on the platform with an adeptness which is little short of marvellous. If he sees another newsboy in the car that settles it. The latter comer gets off the car without more ado. Perhaps he is many times larger than the boy inside, but that makes no difference. There is an unwritten law among the newsboys of New York which says that, "The first feller on der car owns der roost."

Size and personal prowess do not count in the deal at all. It is simply an arrangement adopted by the craft long ago and founded on the basis of fair play.

Another thing that one notices in the horse cars is the tendency of the conductor to be tolerant toward the boys, even though the little fellows sometimes get in their way and tread on their corns. Seldom is it that a newsboy, when he is handed five cents for a penny paper, appeals in vain to the conductor for five coppers if he happens to find himself without change.

On the other hand, if the day is very cold and the car door is kept shut by the conductor, the newsboy in opening it will always close it again carefully before crying out the different editions of his paper. This seems to be another tacit understanding among the boys. Occasionally a cross grained conductor will strike one of the little lads, who are so great a convenience to the public, or even push him off his car, but such cases are few and far between. It is not impossible that some of the conductors were newsboys themselves in their time.

Aside from his method of doing business on the city's horse cars, the New York newsboy has another trait which entitles him to respect, and that is his honesty. Give a boy a dime, and if he says, "Haint got no change, boss; just wait er minute," and then disappears in the crowd, you needn't think for an instant that you are being robbed. Of course the boy could get away if he were so inclined, but he isn't. The little chap may have had hard luck, and perhaps didn't get money enough to buy his usual luncheon, but it will never enter his head to run away with your dime. Just inquire among your friends and see if you can find one who will say that a New York newsboy ever robbed him of a cent.—New York Herald.

Improvement in Surgical Dressing.

A new material, which has been named "Christia," has been introduced for surgical dressings. It is a membrane-like tissue, made by a process of felting the pure fiber of the manilla hemp. It is very light and strong, impermeable to water, spirits of all kinds, oils and acids. It is made neutral, so that it can be rendered antiseptic with any desired medicament. It will stand tropical heat and arctic cold without being injuriously affected by the changes.

It is particularly adapted for India and other hot climates, where guttapercha tissue and oiled silk become in short time amalgamated to such an extent as not only to be useless to the surgeon but injurious to anything with which they come in contact. In view of the fact that both oiled silk and guttapercha tissue have been discarded by the government of the United States, England, France, Denmark and Norway in consequence of their impracticability, there is a large field for the new material, another advantage of which is that it is only about half the price of oiled silk.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Knowing Horse.

Some fifteen years ago, on the green hills, in sight of the beautiful Pennesee-wassee, browsed an old horse which had been through the war with its owner, a quartermaster. It would take a long time to tell all that this intelligent animal knew and could do; but it was this which especially excited the admiration of the village mammas.

The school house was three miles from the barn from which old Betsy drew a pung full of little ones every day. After arriving at the school the oldest would secure the reins, turn Betsy's head homeward, and the old horse would jog along, making the right turns in the road, sheering out for teams and arriving home just as safely as if it had a driver.—Lewiston Journal.

Improved Automatic Stall Door Trip.

A new door trip has been designed to facilitate the movements of the fireman upon receipt of an alarm by throwing open the stall doors and loosening the horses, which immediately at the first tap of the bell take their position ready to have the harness fastened. It also has a clock which marks on a register the exact moment the alarm was received. It can also be made to light the gas or electric light in any part of the house, or ring one or more mechanical or electric bells.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS MURAT.

Story of the Royal Couple Whose Bodies Are Buried in Florida.

In the well kept little cemetery in the quiet little city of Tallahassee, the capital of Florida, side by side beneath the shade of the trees, rests all that was mortal of a once well known prince of royal blood and his American bride, their graves turfed over and marked by plain marble shafts. One of these stones bears the following inscription:

"Departed this life April 18, 1847, Charles Louis Napoleon Achille Murat, son of the king of Naples and Caroline Murat, aged forty-seven. This monument is dedicated by his wife Catherine in perpetual memory of her love."

Upon the other shaft is cut these words:

"Sacred to the memory of Princess C. A. Murat, widow of Colonel Charles Louis Napoleon Achille Murat and daughter of the late Colonel Bird C. Willis, of Virginia. She departed this life on the 6th day of August, 1867, in the sixty-fourth year of her age. A kind and affectionate wife and sister. A sincere and devoted friend. None knew her but to love her. None named her but to praise. This monument is erected to her memory by her bereaved brother and sisters."

The Prince and Princess Murat resided upon their plantation in Jefferson county, east of Tallahassee, and owned numerous slaves. They lived in grand style, and pictures of their royal robes and magnificent jewels are yet fresh in the memories of old residents.

When the remains of the prince were brought from Tallahassee for burial the funeral cortege presented a novel appearance. There were carriages, buggies, wagons, carts and buckboards, drawn by blooded horses, ordinary horses, shabby horses, mules, donkeys and oxen. Everybody for miles around attended, and among the mourners were 200 slaves, all in funeral black, and there yet remained upon the plantation many slaves either too old or too young to come.

Prince Murat was an eccentric character, and old citizens who knew him well delight to tell anecdotes and reminiscences of his peculiar doings. Several of his former slaves are yet living in and about Tallahassee, and they, too, are proud to have one listen to their marvelous tales of "Maus Muhraw." The prince had three favorite slaves—Mingo, Jerry and William—who took part in all his hunting, fishing and exploring expeditions.

The prince was a great sportsman, and he always shot any bird or beast that came within reach of his gun. He never shot anything but once that he did not eat; in fact, he was often heard to say that before he stopped he intended knowing the flavor of every animal, fish or fowl to be found in Florida.

One day he brought in a bird and delivered it to William with instructions to cook it.

"Good Gawd, mausa, yuh ain't gwan tuh eat dat ting, is yuh?" asked William.

"I will eat zat crow, William; you cook eet!"

"But, mausa, dat's uh buzzard!"

"You cook eet!"

The buzzard was plucked and put in the pot to parboil, but soon the atmosphere became so dense with such a peculiar effluvia that even the prince had to hunt purer air. He did not eat that bird.—Detroit Free Press.

Simple Questions That Puzzle.

An exceedingly wise man has sometimes been caught by a very simple question of this sort. The following for example:

How many days would it take to cut up a piece of cloth fifty yards long, one yard being cut off every day?

Or this:

A snail climbing up a post twenty feet high ascends five feet every day and slips down four feet every night. How long will it take the snail to reach the top of the post?

These are simple questions in arithmetic, and yet how many persons would answer fifty days, instead of forty-nine to the first one and twenty instead of sixteen to the last one. It is perhaps scarcely necessary to point out that the snail would gain one foot a day for fifteen days, and on the sixteenth day reach the top of the pole, and there, of course, remain.—New York Tribune.

Exercise as Well as Diet.

By judicious dieting alone a corpulent person may reduce himself in weight, but the loss is almost always very slow indeed after the first two or three weeks, and ere long a point is reached when further reduction is impossible by this means unless he "half starves himself." If, however, he exercises freely as well as diets, he can pull himself down as much as he wishes; and this fact supports the theory advanced—that corpulent people owe their overweight to a choking up of the system—for exercise is the one grand eliminator of waste, and does what dieting alone cannot do.—Boston Herald.

The Slang Shocked Him.

A dignified bishop of the Methodist Episcopal denomination came to this city from a western state a few days ago and put up at a hotel near Madison square. After he had eaten breakfast on the morning after his arrival he went to the office of the hotel and asked to be directed to the Young Men's Christian association building at Twenty-third street and Fourth avenue. The clerk told him that the green cars going down Broadway and through Twenty-third street would take him right there. The bishop, however, said that he wanted to walk, and he had been informed that the Christian association building was "just across the park."

"Yes, that is so," answered the clerk, briskly. "You cross the park diagonally, and any of the 'sparrows' over there will point out the building to you."

"The what?" asked the bishop.

"The sparrows, the sparrows," repeated the clerk.

"Do you mean to say that they have trained birds over there?" said the bishop, in an incredulous tone.

It took the hotel clerk five minutes to convince the dignified bishop that the term "sparrow" was commonly applied to a park policeman, and it took another five minutes to explain to the good man that the vulgar New York gamins had originated the appellation to express their conviction that the park policeman's chief occupation was the chasing of sparrows.—New York Times.

Solicitude.

To his already large collection of zoological specimens a young Maine naturalist every summer adds several valuable species from the hills of Oxford county, his trips usually extending into the White mountains of New Hampshire.

One day he came home with a pair of reptiles he had long coveted. Now he had a compartment especially fitted to hold his collection, but those species hardest to obtain and consequently most prized were kept in his sleeping room, and his lately acquired treasures were too precious to be trusted out of sight.

The next morning he casually remarked, "Had quite an adventure with my reptiles last night."

"Yes; what was it?" inquired the mother, who felt like an old hen with a duckling in charge.

"I was waked up with a terrible pain in my side, and putting my hand up touched one of my new reptiles, who evidently preferred warmer quarters."

In reply to the question, "Were you not frightened?" he answered, "Yes; for a moment I almost held my breath for fear I had hurt my reptile."

His mother has now no doubt as to his call to be a naturalist, although she may sympathize with Mrs. Agassiz, who thought it rather too much of a good thing when she found tiny red snakes in her slipper.—Lewiston Journal.

Reading the Journal.

One morning, in the Kentucky house of representatives, the usual motion was made to "despense with the reading of the journal." It had been observed that every morning when this motion was made a certain member from one of the mountain counties, who was very fond of reading George D. Prentice's pungent paragraphs, and who bought a copy of the journal every day, would lay down his paper unread. On this particular morning the mountain member could contain himself no longer.

"Mr. Speaker," he said, "I've sat here for more'n a week and submitted to the tyranny of this house, but I can't stand it any longer without a solemn protest, sir. Somebody, sir, has moved every morning to dispense with the reading of The Journal, and I've lost every paper I've bought for a week by it. Nobody has ever moved to dispense with the reading of The Democrat or The Courier. It ain't fair play, Mr. Speaker; it ain't just, and"——

The remainder of the gentleman's protest for fair play to The Journal was lost in a general burst of laughter such as rarely lightened the gravity of a border state legislator in those troublous days.—Youth's Companion.

Unprofitable Neckties.

"How much?" I asked, taking the white dress necktie that the clerk had carefully put in a little box.

"Twenty-five cents."

"You must make money in that line."

"On the contrary, we lose money, although the articles are sold for five times their worth."

"Then how can you lose?"

"By so many ties becoming soiled and spoiled from the handling of customers. We lose so many that way that it takes all the profit off. It is not the wearing of a necktie that soils it, but the putting on and taking off and banging around."—New York Herald.

Laugh.

There is more benefit in a good laugh than in all the hot water remedies, faith cures, cold water, electric and all other new fangled treatments in the world, and it does not cost anything. Laugh. If you know of nothing else to laugh at, laugh at your neighbor. He is probably improving his health by laughing at you.—Atchison Globe.

An Editor in Trouble.

A downey editor is in trouble from having published the following, "Miss Jones, who came here before the flood, is still the guest of her brother." He found it difficult to convince the lady that he meant no reference to her age.—San Francisco Call.

Short Work of a Troublesome Case.

One day I was taken with Paralysis of the Bowels. The stomach and other organs lost all power of action. Although opposed to proprietary medicines, I tried Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. To make a long story short, it saved my life. It is the best medicine in the world for difficulties of the kidneys, liver and bowels.—A. J. Gifford, Lowell, Mass.

The Woburn Journal

(In behalf of Members of the Rumford Historical Association.)

RUMFORD'S CLAIM ON THE GRATITUDE OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The recent remark of a contemporary than Rumford's name is unworthy to be given to our public park, owing to his political status at the time of the American Revolution, has excited some attention in antiquarian circles, and again called to mind the action of the Rumford Historical Association in the matter. On mature reflection it seems to us that Rumford's name is "unworthy," when it is considered that the applying of his name to the park is a "cheap" way of doing him honor! In fact, it is a very cheap way and very easily accomplished, to apply his name to a tract of thirty acres in the neighborhood of his birthplace, and it would not harm his reputation—but we believe that he is worthy of something better than that in the city where he was born, namely a brouze statue, a fitting memorial, not costing nothing, but thousands of dollars! This scheme was agitated a number of years since, and may yet be realized.

In our opinion it would be better to call our park—"The Park," or "Woburn Park,"— than to allow the name of "Rumford" to be used in a doublesense, in view of the possible actions that may occur in a park, on the part of persons who have not a respectable name in their thoughts, either to honor or dishonor. The park was bought with the people's money, and is the property of the city and the name "Woburn Park" would honor itself, would define itself, would protect itself and an absence of flattery in such a name of any particular individual would commend itself to the good sense of the community.

The action of the Rumford Historical Association was taken at the suggestion of one of its members, and favorably acted upon, partly with a desire to be loyal to the name and purposes of the association, which have been first to preserve for future generations the birthplace of this eminent man, and secondly to collect relics concerning him, and to preserve his fame, and thirdly as the only local historical association to conserve the interests of Woburn history.

Now the value of the objects for which the members of that association have labored will be greatly depreciated if the object of these honors is utterly unworthy of any regard or attention from the American people, or indeed from the people of his native city of Woburn.

Count Rumford is par excellence the most eminent native Woburn has produced, and the list of her eminent men in the two centuries and a half of her existence is not a short one. He was born a poor boy,—in the language of the biographies of former times, "of poor but respectable parents." He was a diligent student in his youth, and made the most of his advantages. By an unfortunate combination of circumstances when he was hardly more than twenty years of age, he was placed on the wrong side in the controversies which led to the American Revolution. His father died when Rumford as a child was hardly twenty months old. The father at death was only in his twenty-sixth year and too young to have accumulated any reasonable amount of property. The boy by his inherent talent rose in the world by dint of his own exertions. By his unpopular course in the Revolutionary struggle, he excited the enmity of his fellow-townsmen, and was proscribed as a refugee both in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. This course led him for his safety to leave his native country and find an abode in Europe, and, as we look at it now, it was fortunate for the world that he did so.

Without pursuing this theme further let us examine the amount of Count Rumford's benefactions to American institutions:

To the Royal Society of London (in 1796) he gave £1000, for a medal and premium. Up to 1846, this sum had increased to £2430, the value of an award amounting to £144.

This gift was intended for the benefit of the whole world, and Americans have shared in the awards.

The amount today is probably about	$50,000
To the American Academy of Arts and Sciences (in 1796) $5,000, as a premium and for medals. By accumulation the fund increased about 1850 to $20,000, and in 1870, exceeded $37,000.
Awards from this fund as large as $600, have been given to inventors. At the time his donation was the most liberal and important of any that the institution had ever realized.	$37,000*
By will he bequeathed the residue of his estate to Harvard College. See below.
To the town of Concord, N. H., through his daughter, $2,000, for the support of 12 poor and industrious children—pretty good for a proscribed and outlawed exile by the laws of Massachusetts and New Hampshire! The money bequest to poor children in Concord, N. H., amounted (in 1871) to $49,000; (in 1886) to $100,000.	$100,000*
About 1889, a school was started in accordance with the terms of the above bequest and is still in successful operation.
To Harvard College, besides what is mentioned above, he bequeathed an annuity of $1000, to found a professorship. The Rumford fund for this purpose amounted (in 1870) to $52,848	$52,848*
The daughter also left a bequest of $15,000, to the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane.	$15,000*
	$254,848

*Estimated on a basis of twenty years ago. The amount must be much greater now.

Making bequests, in all, in money, of some $255,000, at least, for the advantage of American citizens. Besides this, he gave to the United States government, all his books, plans and designs relating to military affairs, to be deposited in the United States Military Academy, as soon as an institution of that nature was established.

In a list of 438 donations of different articles to the Royal Institution in London, which he founded, during its first year, 175 of the number were from him.

In 1800, he was most honorably and gratefully named in Parliament, for his valuable labors and counsels, and the highest encomiums were passed upon him as a public benefactor.

He also bought large sums in the funds of the United States, when this was a young and somewhat uncertain country.

One says of him he spent years of most thoughtful, wise, and arduous labor for his fellowmen, having advanced the welfare, comfort, and happiness of millions of his race, especially the poor, abject, and forlorn. He was pronounced abroad to be an honor to the whole human race, and was called an illustrious philosopher and the friend of man.

His gifts remind us of the similar bequests of his contemporary Benjamin Franklin, particularly to Boston and Philadelphia, and which have accumulated in a similar manner.

Harvard College corporation took immediate measures to obtain their property in his bequest, and they transmitted to his executors an expression of thanks for their services and an acknowledgment of the gratification of the corporation at perceiving that Count Rumford's sound and enlightened mind extended beyond his life, in the selection of friends so able and willing to forward his honorable purposes. The professor who first held the Rumford professorship paid this tribute to him:

"To the country of his birth Count Rumford has bequeathed his fortune and his fame." His career "should teach us to respect ourselves, to value our resources, to cultivate our talents. Let those who would depreciate our native genius recollect that he was an American! Let those who would despond as to our future destinies remember that his eye, which had wandered over the continent and capitals of Europe, settled at last upon the rising prospects of this Western world." This was written in the year 1816.

His publications number at least 54 separate articles, published at London, Paris, Munich, etc. His Essays were translated, wholly, or in part, into French, German, and other languages. These works also passed through several editions, including American editions. A list of biographical sketches of him numbered, in 1870, 65, and a number have been published since that time. Frederick Drummond in one of the latest of these notices (Encyclopedia Britannica, 9th edition) characterizes him, as "an eminent man of science, enlightened philanthropist, and sagacious public administrator." His military record, too, was a remarkable one, for he was not only a prime minister, but a commanding general of an European army. In this respect also he is pre-eminently Woburn's most distinguished son. The following is a list of his military titles: Major of Colonial Militia; Lieut.-Colonel and Colonel of cavalry in the British regular service; Colonel of cavalry, General Aide-de-Camp, Major-General of cavalry, Privy Councillor of State, Minister of war and Minister or Superintendent of Police, head of the Council of the Regency and Commander-in-Chief of the army in Bravria, etc.

What the present writer has said in another place may be said again here: "His eminent services to mankind as a scientist and a philanthropist are sufficient to overcome the opprobrium conferred on him by his countrymen for his course in the Revolutionary struggle. The world now looks on him as a benefactor, in spite of serious defects in his moral character, and America considers him as one of her greatest men. Let us unite in that verdict."

It is for the reasons above stated that the members of the Rumford Historical Association have preserved the house which was this eminent man's birthplace; that they have taken steps to honor his memory; and that for the credit of his native place his name should be remembered as a household word by the action which this Society takes by meeting in the room in which he was born on the annual anniversary of the day of his birth, or in any other way which they deem best.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. He found, before he had used half a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and is to day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, Lung or Chest Trouble try try it. We guarantee satisfaction. Trial bottle free at F. E. Lovell's Drugstore.

The revenue of the Brooklyn bridge amounts to a million and a quarter dollars a year, derived almost exclusively from fares. The other items of revenue during 1890 were $82,000 from rentals and $13,000 from telegraph and telephone companies. The lightest month in the year for business on the bridge is July.

A Valuable Discovery

Dr. Brown Sequard's elixir of youth may be an important discovery, but every one knows that Dr. Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure certainly is. It has given thousands afflicted with serious heart disease a New Lease of Life. Druggists who can observe its effects on many customers everywhere speak very highly of it. Mr. John Weaver, of Knightstown, Ind., says: "I have sold much of Dr. Miles' New Cure and have received many good reports." O. Monroe, of Dunkirk, N. Y., reports large sales. "And the best part of it is every bottle has given satisfaction. Sold by Charles H. Buss.

Some G. A. R. posts have gathered a highly interesting collection of war-like curiosities, such as banners, flags, field glasses and captured weapons. Occasionally, a piece of field artillery, identified with the history of a post, graces an alcove of its apartment.

USE OF ARTIFICIAL STONE.

It Is Succeeding the Natural Article in Building Houses and Bridges.

Of all the great improvements which have been witnessed during the past twenty years that of artificial stone stands in the front rank. Nearly all the large cities of the United States have their works for manufacturing artificial stone, and scores of thousands of barrels of cement are annually used in the industry. This may not be news to people who travel, and are especially interested in architecture and engineering work, but others who have not had the opportunity of investigation would be amazed to see the constructions in artificial stone which have taken place in the last decade. The magnitude of these works would astound the old Roman engineers, whose works are historic.

The Vaune aqueduct, thirty-seven miles long, to supply the city of Paris with water, is built of composite stone. It comprises two and a half to three miles of arches, some of them as much as fifty feet high, and eleven miles of tunnels. It also includes eight or ten bridges of seventy-five feet span. The pipe is six and a half feet interior diameter, with a thickness of nine inches at the top and twelve inches at the sides. The lighthouse at Port Said, Egypt, 180 feet high, is another notable example of artificial construction. A Gothic church at Visinet, near Paris, is one piece of stone, including the steeple, 130 feet high. The municipal barracks at Notre Dame, Paris, of artificial stone, have arched ceilings whose spans vary from twenty-two to twenty-five feet.

Over thirty-one miles of the Paris sewers are constructed of this material. The jetties at the entrance of the Suez canal are built of artificial stone blocks, each weighing about twenty tons, and 16,000 of them were used in the improvement of the docks in New York.

Space will not permit of statement in detail of scores of hundreds of examples of artificial stone construction in this country, but among the more recent may be mentioned the Pompeian villa at Saratoga, the Moorish villa, Hotel Ponce de Leon, Alcazar hotel and the Casa Monica, St. Augustine, Fla. These hotels, the most magnificent in the world, are constructed of artificial stone, including roof towers, ceilings, baths, etc. There is not a joint in these immense structures. The balconies, high up on the towers, are of solid terra cotta, and weigh five tons apiece. The Casa Monica has a frontage of 450 feet. More than 60,000 barrels of cement were used in the construction of these hotels.

A dwelling was erected a few years ago at Port Chester, without joint or seam. The house is fireproof. The floors, roof, stairways and towers are all of stone and 4,000 barrels of cement were used.

An interesting application of this material in the construction of a hollow sustaining wall was made at the cemetery of Passy in supporting a bank of earth 29 1-2 feet high. Numerous rustic bridges in parks and cemeteries in various parts of the country have been built of this material. The most important and general uses, however, to which artificial stone is put is that of trimmings for brick buildings.

It is specially adapted for entire fronts of commercial buildings and for churches, schools, hospitals and dwellings. It is also largely used for wall facing in basements of frame dwellings. Late improvements have been made which greatly enhance its value as a building material, whereby the surfaces of the stone are made rough, representing the tool work of the stonecutter. And buildings erected of this material are represented as being much admired, and the stone in them is not easily distinguished from the natural stone.—Rochester Post-Express.

Only One Subject on Which to Talk.

I overheard a remark the other day that had a good deal of domestic pathos in it. One woman said to another:

"I do have the most stupid call when I go to that house."

"Why so. She is a very pleasant lady."

"Oh, I know that, but—but—well, I will tell you. You know I am so unfortunate about getting good servants. I am obliged to change every few weeks. Mrs. —— has actually had her servants eight and ten years, and we never have anything to talk about."—Chicago Herald.

High and Low Life.

Society Youth—Say, Jack, can't you lend me five dollars? I've got to take a lady to the opera tonight.

Poor Clerk—Yes, George, I can; but you received a check from your father this morning. Where's that?

S. Y.—Well, the fact is I stepped into my tailor's to get a necktie and hadn't anything but the check with me, and the rascal instead of handing me the change gave me a receipt for balance due.—Good News.

The Amende Honorable.

She—Mr. Sutton, that was a brilliant thing you said at dinner—pardon me, but was it original?

"It was."

"Is it possible?"

"Madam!"

"Excuse me—I did not mean it—you see I was naturally a little shocked to find that after all Talleyrand was a plagiarist."—Life.

Said Too Much.

"I have nothing more to say," said she, as he started home after the rejection.

"I am glad," said he. "I wish you had said less."—Harper's Bazar.

Who Was the Fool?

"Talking about April Fools' Day jokes," said one of a group of bystanders, "reminds me of an incident that happened to me some years since on the 1st of April. I was walking along the street when I noticed directly in front of me a large, much worn pocket-book. The minute I saw it I came to the conclusion that it was some mischievous boy's trick to catch an unsuspecting passer by, so I hung round near it for several minutes, hoping to share in the enjoyment of the joke. Several persons saw it, but passed by without paying any attention to it.

At length one man came along, saw it and stooped to pick it up, but remembering himself suddenly, gave the pocketbook a kick which sent it flying into the gutter. Then it was, though I can't say why, that I was seized with a great desire to pick up the old wallet and open it, even if I should be the victim of the joke; so, walking up to where it lay, I picked it up and put it in my pocket to carry home."

"Well, gentlemen," he continued, "what do you suppose that old wallet contained?"

"A roll of bills," said one.

"Five hundred dollars," ventured another.

"What was in it?" asked a third listener.

"Not a blamed thing but paper," said the story teller, and he turned on his heel and walked off.—Boston Herald.

Blasting Rocks in the Metropolis.

The operations of the blaster on the upper west side of the city were never so extensive as now, and the explosion of dynamite, accompanied by showers of dislocated rock, reverberates from block to block throughout that whole section.

When the exposed tenants of that aristocratic neighborhood see a red flag they do not charge it, like the traditional animal in a cornfield, but "lay low" until the shower is over. If an occasional fragment of Manhattan Island is hurled through a kitchen window the maid of all work simply gathers it up and pitches it out again.

"Drat 'em!" fully covers the situation so far as she is concerned. She ought to be frightened into spilling the family soup, but she isn't.

DEATH OF HANNIBAL HAMLIN

At nearly 82 years of age Hannibal Hamlin, the only living ex-Vice President of the United States, died very suddenly in Bangor, Maine, on last Saturday evening of heart disease. He had been in perfect health up to the hour of his death which occurred at the rooms of a social club, of which he was a distinguished member, where he had gone to pass the evening.

Hamlin was Vice President with President Lincoln from 1861 to 1865; was once Governor of Maine; United States Senator for several terms; Collector of the Port of Boston, and the incumbent during a long and active life of many important public posts.

No citizen of Maine was more highly esteemed or had more friends than Hannibal Hamlin and his death will be deeply and generally mourned.

THE NEW PROBATION LAW.

The law went into effect on July 1 and manifestly it is too soon to form a correct opinion as to its future operations. That it is a humane measure and a long step in the right direction is admitted by nearly everybody; that it is not perfect, but needs amending, is equally a fact.

In Boston the weight of judgment so far is in favor of the law. Officers and Courts there think it a good thing. In this city the leaning of the authorities is in the same direction. Police Officers and the Court say they believe in its efficacy and justice.

Our own opinion is that those who wait patiently and watch carefully the practical operations of the law will find before long a plenty of reasons for approving it.

JUDGE CONVERSE'S DECISION.

We publish in this issue of THE JOURNAL the decision of Judge Converse in the liquor prosecutions which gave rise to so much public talk and unfavorable criticism. The general feeling was that Judge Converse had made a mistake; that his decisions were against law. Nearly every Attorney in this city so believed. But a careful perusal of the reasons which he gives for them, as set forth in the paper herein published, will be apt to dissipate all doubts as to the legal correctness of his position respecting the cases.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

Hon. George S. Boutwell, ex-Governor of this State, published an Editorial in last Sunday Globe on the subject above named which everybody ought to read and ponder over. It was a blow straight from the shoulder at the "reform," but it was no heavier than the subject deserved, and we hope it was not the last one which Mr. Boutwell will feel it his duty to deal the nonsensical idea.

☞ Readers of the Boston Journal will regret exceedingly to learn that ill-health has compelled Mr. W. W. Clapp, for many years its able Editor-in-Chief, to resign and surrender his office into other hands. Under his protracted occupation of the Chief's chair the Journal was a strong, prosperous and influential paper, and it is well for its thousands of readers and admirers that on the retirement of Editor Clapp its management fell to the lot of Mr. O'Meara, a bright, talented journalist who has for several years occupied a responsible Editorial position on it.

— Rev. D. D. Winn, pastor of the First Baptist Church in this city, read his resignation paper to his people on last Sunday morning. — A couple of weeks ago J. Chester Hanson, W. H. S., Class '91, passed his "finals" and will enter Harvard this fall. The preliminaries were successfully disposed of last summer which has made his work for the final examination this year comparatively light. Chester is one of the very brightest and most promising boys in this city.

— Mr. John Palmer Wyman who died at Arlington last week was a direct descendant of Lieut. John Wyman who was the first immigrant of the name and settled in Woburn in 1640. Capt. The picnic was held on Saturday, June 27, and a very nice one it was, too, says Mr. Joel Barnard, who was there himself and one of them.

— The JOURNAL'S candidates are pretty apt to get there. Week before last it advocated the appointment of Mr. Edward Simonds for Probation Officer, and he was appointed. C. knocked the permission and now fills the office of keeper, etc., in the best of shape.

— A jolly party of canoeists and campers consisting of Edward C. Leathe and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Clarke, Mr. Francis A. Partridge, wife and son, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Hurd of Chelsea, left here late last week for a fortnight's tramp on the Merrimac. Their headquarters are at Fairhaven Bay, Concord, and latest dispatches from there say they are having a big time on ice.

— THE JOURNAL is filled with good things this week. See page 1 for an original article on Count Rumford; then there is Judge Converse's opinion in the rum cases in extenso which is worth 4 times the price of the paper and should be read by everybody; besides these there are lots of interesting things. And yet THE JOURNAL is sold at the remarkably low price of 5 cents a copy, or $2 per annum!!

— Druggist Lovell asks the JOURNAL to state, by way of removing a false impression, that the slight injury which an eye of a Winchester lady received from a swinging awning rope in front of his store, as minutely narrated by the JOURNAL last week, was an accident pure and simple, and that he, Lovell, personally, went out and tendered his sympathies and services to the lady by whom they were declined. The JOURNAL stands corrected.

— The young ladies of the W. H. S. Class '91 are taking steps to collect $350 to aid Miss Cora Brown, a member of the Class, in securing a college course at Wellesley. That amount will pay her way for the first year, after which other provisions for defraying her expenses will be made. Mr. B. H. Nichols, whose daughter was one of the brightest in '91's class, will head the subscription with a generous sum, and other liberal minded gentlemen propose to follow suit.

— Mayor Bean gave representatives of the Epworth League and Christian Endeavor Society of this city a hearing last Monday evening on the matter of closing drugstores on Sunday. After hearing what the delegates had to say he took the matter under advisement. If he should order the drugstores closed on Sundays, or restrict their sales to medicines (as they ought to be restricted), he would have to make his peace with the political party he belongs to pretty quick or be knocked out of the ranks. The Democratic party don't believe in moral reforms very much.

— Uncle Levi C. Teel, 65 Cambridge street, takes the champion's belt on early potatoes this year. He dug good, nice, ripe ones of this spring's planting on July 3, and we know of two very respectable families who made a fine dinner on them supplemented by a plenty of McLean peas, new beets, cucumbers, and a full supply of Tabor's 4th of July salmon, which families were Mr. Levi C. Teel's and—well never mind about the rest. The young sprouts of farmers of this place have got to hustle to keep up with uncle Teel in raising early vegetables.

— Last Tuesday morning Mr. and Mrs. William W. Hill and daughter Avis, left this city for a visit of considerable length among relatives and friends at Minneapolis, Minn. On the same train, which was an excursion one to the annual convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Nation, were Miss M. F. Haggins and Mr. A. Dimmick. Rev. Mr. Murphy, pastor of the North Congregational Church, went on Monday evening. Mrs. Hill and her daughter expect to remain in the West to well towards autumn, but Mr. Hill will not be away quite so long. We trust they will enjoy to the brim their vacation on the Mississippi.

Interesting History.

The first class to graduate from our High School was in 1855, and from that time to and including 1886 there have been 517 graduates. Of these 167 were males and 350 females. There were eleven members of the first graduating class, and of them there are deceased, viz:—Mary S. Brackett, Florence K. Holden, Martha W. Persons.

The largest class was that 1883, with 35 members; and the smallest was 1862, with four members.

There was but one male graduate each in the classes of '55, '59, '62 and '63, and none in '64, '65 and '69

Males exceeded females in classes of '61, '71, '78 and '84 only. Of the 517 graduates 64 are known to be deceased, of whom 18 were males, and 46 females. The children of 14 graduates have graduated.

During all these eleven years past the Bank has had the management of some of our most careful and conservitive citizens who have acted as a Board of Investment, and who have again been elected for another year.

Cases of Commonwealth vs. John Maloney et als.

MR. EDITOR: As the above cases, six in all, tried before the Fourth District Court of Eastern Middlesex, each for keeping and maintaining a liquor nuisance, of which each was found not guilty and discharged, are, because of peculiar circumstances, of unusual public interest, I desire, with your permission, to give the evidence adduced, and law cited, with the reasons why the judgments were so made; in order that the public may have a clear understanding of the whole matter.

In each case, the defendants pleaded not guilty; and as the offences charged in each case are one; and the same evidence and principles of law involved, were substantially the same in all, I treat them mainly as one case.

The Government in order to obtain a conviction, was bound to prove and show beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant was proprietor of, and kept a certain place shown; that certain sales, acts, or other doings, which by established usage, are held to prove the offence charged, were made or done therein; that these sales, acts, &c. were done by the proprietor himself, or by his proved agent or servant, with his knowledge and assent; or to put it very mildly, by him, or by his agent or servant, in his presence, and with his knowledge, and presumed consent; and if the government failed thus to show, there was no case, and the defendant was not bound to answer at all, or make defence, or justify under any license; but he must be found not guilty, and discharged.

Now how stands the evidence and the law: The Government showed by two spotter witnesses of the better class, (especially as to the sales,) and by others, First: That the defendant was the proprietor, and kept the place shown. Second: That sales of intoxicating liquors were made once, and in some cases twice, or even more, in one day, in the place, by some person unknown to the witnesses, and unidentified; such sales being made to them and others over a bar. Third: That doors, passages, and in some cases screens existed, not allowed by statute in a licensed place; and in violation of the clauses in their licenses of 1st and 4th classes and Victualler's licenses. Fourth: That there were no provisions made to furnish food, and that none was in fact furnished except in some cases a few crackers. Fifth: That there were shelves, tables, some bottles, chairs, and a bar in some form. Sixth: That in one case, the description in the license of the place, was too uncertain to be good. And it was argued for the prosecution, that these sales, acts, doors, bars &c. were conclusive evidence, beyond doubt sufficient to convict the defendants, because as by statute, and the clauses in their licenses, these very sales and acts rendered their several licenses void, they could not justify under them, and therefore conviction must follow; the whole force of the argument for the government and law cited being especially, that as the licenses were so rendered void, the defendants had no defence whatever, and here the government rested, without any allusion to the vital and turning point in all the cases, hereafter mentioned.

But the prosecution utterly failed to show, in any case, that the proprietor or his agent or servant was present when these sales were made; or that the acts were done by him or them; or that he assented thereto, or even had knowledge of the same; but on the contrary, the witnesses expressly testified, that they did not know them, and failed to describe them sufficiently for identification; and there was none of the usual evidence as to drunken people coming out of a man in one place, disturbances, late hours &c. ordinarily relied upon to prove such cases. The Government here rested.

The defence put in their licenses and rested.

In the case of Com'th vs. Nichols, 10 Met., 259, the Supreme Court say:

"A shopkeeper is liable criminally for an unlawful sale in his shop, made with his assent, by a servant or agent employed in his business. But an unlawful sale made by the servant or agent is only prima facie evidence of the assent thereto, by the shopkeeper, and his liability to punishment therefor."

So by the above decision, the Supreme Court say, that to make even a prima facie case, the unlawful sale must be made by the agent or servant, proved to be such, which certainly was not done in these cases.

In the case of Com'th vs. Fitzgerald, 14 Gray, 14, the decision of the Supreme Court shows the legal necessity of proof, on the part of the government, that the agent was there by the authority of the principal. In these words:

"The instruction was properly guarded as to the necessity of the jury finding, that the woman was there by the authority of the defendant, and was acting as his agent in making the sale."

But the leading case of Com'th vs. Putnam 4 Gray, 16, in which the offence charged, was being a common seller of intoxicating liquors, places the matter beyond a doubt; for in that case, the Supreme Court say:

"The act, the sale, must be that of the defendant, though done through another. The fact that the person selling was a clerk of the defendant, and that the defendant knew of the sale was not sufficient. He might have had knowledge and dissented or forbidden it. There must be evidence from which the Jury could infer the assent of the defendant."

The cases of Com'th vs. Briant, 142 Mass. 463, and Com'th vs. Stephenson, 142 Mass. 467, assert the same doctrine. It said case vs. Briant, for selling intoxicating liquors to a minor, the Court says: "It is an error to rule, that a sale of such liquors by a servant in his master's shop, and in the regular course of his master's lawful business, is prima facie a sale by the master, although the sale is an illegal act."

"And although a Jury might be warranted in inferring, that such a sale was authorized, it would not follow, that a Court could rule that there is a presumption of fact that it was so.

"The proposition, that there is evidence for the Jury to consider, is not identical with the proposition, that the evidence, if believed, raises a presumption of fact.

"The facts that a man employs a servant to conduct a business expressly authorized by statute; and that the servant makes an unlawful sale in the course of it, do not necessarily overcome the presumption of innocense, merely because the business is liquor selling, and may be carried beyond the statute limits." See Com'th vs. Putnam 4 Gray 16, Com'th vs. Dunbar, 9 Gray 298. In the case of Com'th vs. Holmes 119 Mass. 195, only went so far as to say "that evidence that the defendant's son and clerk sold intoxicating liquors in a public house kept by defendant, was evidence of a sale by the defendant sufficient to be submitted to a Jury" but no presumption of fact existed; nor did it make a prima facie case.

The case of Com'th vs. Edds et als, 14 Gray 406 only decided that "The evidence of sales of liquor in the tenement was competent with the evidence that the defendants kept the tenement;" but no presumption of fact existed by it.

In none of these cases did the Court say, that a presumption of fact existed, or that even a prima facie case was made out thereby; but only, that it was admissible evidence in the case, for what it was worth; and so in these cases, it was only so much evidence for the court to consider, in connection with other evidence; bearing in mind always, that the action, or assent to the action, of a proved servant or agent, of and by the proprietor is the turning point; and that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of any doubt.

And in conclusion, I will say, that the court was sensible, that the counsel for the prosecution had done all he could to enlighten it, as to the law in regard to the licenses being void, by reason of the acts of the defendant as to doors &c., and that it did not misunderstand him, but on the contrary, the court understood the point, and agreed with counsel, in regard to it; but unfortunately for him, and his side of the case, it had no application, for the plain reason, that there was nothing in the evidence, so far as said sales were concerned, which required either of said defendants to use their licenses in defence, at all; and so it was immaterial whether they were valid or void.

As, for the above reasons, the sales could not be used against the defendants; and as the keeping of forbidden doors, passages and screens does not constitute at law, the offences charged, but only render the licenses void; and as the rest of the evidence alone, was not sufficient to warrant conviction; the judgments in each case, if honestly and intelligently given, must have been, as they were, not guilty.

Charming Wedgemere Park.

A Delightful Spot. Attractions Offered to Seekers for Suburban Homes at Winchester—Transit Facilities of the Best—Streets Broad and Shaded—Property Can be Laid Out to Individual Taste.

It has been said that Boston contains more wealth to the square inch than any other city in the world, from which statement the title, "Hub of the Universe," has been deducted in the sense that as "All roads lead to Rome," so all wealth seeks this particular centre.

Not only does wealth and refinement centre in Boston, but they cluster around it in its beautiful suburbs, that today are famous throughout the country. You are going to Boston? "Don't fail to take a drive through the suburbs," is told you on every hand, yet the dwellers therein seldom consider their vast glories as a whole, but leave their appreciation beyond their own immediate zone to strangers, who carry away with them an impression that the outlying district of the Hub is one vast park for the delight of visitors.

Not only do the citizens of Boston crowd out into the surrounding towns, but the dwellers of other large cities and towns gather themselves to the favorite spots that are in close communication with this great centre of learning, with its wealth of attractions, and to those who have not found their ideal location we most heartily commend the town of Winchester.

Upon this spot some of Boston's best known business and professional men have located their homes, and each one jealously guards every foot of land in their possession, preferring to dispose of every foot they own than let go a portion, and if one should take the trouble to visit the charming locality, the reason would be apparent, for the charms of Winchester are well known far and near.

But fifteen minutes' ride from Boston, over the Boston & Lowell Railroad, in the midst of natural scenery of lake, wood, field and hill unexcelled by any other town in the neighborhood of Boston, have been added all the attractions of elegant architecture and landscape gardening, giving a continuous series of harmonious effects that can be obtained only under such favorable conditions.

No expense has apparently been spared by the fortunate dwellers in this favored spot to gather around them all the advantages which wealth and culture can procure.

Driveways winding among miniature forests and lighted by electricity, schools of the highest educational standard, churches of all denominations, a handsome public library building, well stored with books, a commodious town hall, a finely equipped fire department, and a supply of pure water coming from a natural water-bed, a mile from the centre of the town and 200 feet above it—these are, in brief, some of the advantages enjoyed by the inhabitants of what may be termed a residential town, for the business done there is very small.

It will readily be seen that in such a locality the opportunities for obtaining eligible building lots are rare, as the land that is not built upon is in the hands of the owners of large estates, and up to the present time it has been almost impossible for a person to obtain a piece of ground of modest proportion in the more desirable parts of the town, where the streets were graded, and sewers, water and lights had been introduced.

A short time since an association was formed of gentlemen from Winchester and Boston, who purchased from H. A. Emerson and Mr. and Mrs. William Boynton a tract of forty-six acres of land, combining every modern advantage offered by this favored locality, and immediately after the sale was consummated they secured the services of Ernest W. Bowditch, the well-known landscape gardener, who at once undertook the task of laying out and grading the ground in accordance with the most approved plans.

Everything combined to make his task an easy one.

Streets and avenues, from forty to eighty feet wide, set with three rows of shade trees—one row inside the curbstone, one on the border of the lot and the third between these two—have been constructed in a thorough and artistic manner. The trees are large and of vigorous growth, and the care taken in setting them out in deep beds of loam insures a fine shade in a short period of time.

There are about two miles of these streets, graded in accordance with the requirements of the town, with sewer, water and gas pipes laid and poles and wires for electric lighting. Heavy granite edgestones have been laid and nothing remains for the purchaser of a lot to do but to grade it; for, as many of them are high above the street, it has been deemed advisable to leave this duty to the purchasers of lots, giving each one an opportunity to consult his own taste in laying out his grounds.

The surface soil is a rich loam, from one to two feet deep, with a sub-soil of gravel, insuring a fine growth of grass and shrubs and perfect drainage.

This charming locality has been named Wedgemere Park, and it is the intention of the Winchester Land Associates, the owners of this property, to build an electrical street railway from their land to connect with the electric road at Arlington, a distance of a mile and a half, which will bring Bowdoin square by this route within 40 minutes of this property, and give this additional facility for reaching Boston.

The train service is already of the very best, the Lowell station being but fifteen minutes' ride from Winchester, and there are many trains a day. As compared with West Chester Park, the time from State street to the property is about the same, it requiring but thirty-five minutes to accomplish the distance.

For the convenience of those who object to the short, and, in summer, very charming walk from Wedgemere avenue to the railroad station, the company will run an omnibus at a five cent fare, connecting with all the trains.

In fact, it is the intention of the company to do everything in its power to make this one of the most popular and desirable places for suburban residences anywhere in the vicinity of Boston.

To give all an opportunity to judge for themselves of the desirability of Winchester for a home, and a chance to inspect the lots, now placed in the market for the first time, excursion tickets will be furnished at the office of the Associates,

Independence Day.

Everything passed off to the satisfaction of the starters of the 4th of July celebration in this city and no fault was found by others that we heard of. It was not intended to be an elaborate or costly affair and it was neither. There was nothing gorgeous about it—just a simple, home-made, plain affair, with the regulation bell-ringing at 6 a. m., 12 m., 6 p. m. o'clock; no cannon; a great deal of bunting, and brassband music galore.

It was the quietest night before the 4th that anybody ever went anywhere. Everyone slept well, and yet heaps and heaps of all kinds of noisy things were sold by the dealers. There was never anything so peaceful and calm before.

There were showers in the early morning with much thunder and lightning. This compelled a postponement of the grand "Antiques" parade until 10 a. m. at least. At this hour a clear sky and fair wind enabled the "Horribles" to show themselves to the several thousands of people who lined the sidewalks anxiously waiting for the show.

There were some good pieces in the procession; a few fair kind of hits; but it is no easy thing to get up anything new in the 4th of July "Horribles"—— indeed, their banishment from the Independence Day programme would be a boon. The parade adds nothing to the dignity, amusement or pleasure of the celebration.

City Clerk D. F. Moreland, Ald. Pushee, Ex-Councilman Charles F. Bryant were the Judges on the "Antique" parade. The awards were as follows: The first prize was awarded to "The Wire-Pullers"; 2d to "The Drunkard's Bank"; 3d to "Mitchels and Bendum's Drum Corps"; 4th, a piece representing the City Council.

There were foot and bicycle races on Pleasant st. The Woburn Press Association judged and awarded prizes. Baseball was also on deck all day. The races attracted big crowds of people, and the awards raised a big fuss as usual.

The National Brass Band gave a splendid concert on the Common in the evening which was enjoyed by a great multitude of people. They also played on the Common in the morning.

Never before in the history of Woburn was so much drunkenness seen on the street as on the 4th.

The Last Days of Pompeii.

Boston's greatest amusement this summer and in fact the most extensive outdoor entertainment provided in New England will be Paine's new spectacular production "The Last Days of Pompeii" given on the Pompeiian Grounds on Saturday evening, July 4th, and to continue nightly for 2 months, Sundays excepted. The spectacle will be given on a stage the area of a city block. It will require 10,000 yards of scenery, 500 performers male and female, and 60 thoroughbred horses will be seen in the most exciting of contests on a ¼ mile track. Among the racing features will be grand hippodrome chariot races, with daring lady racers. Athletes and acrobats such as the Livingstone Bros., Wm. Davis, The Bartons and others will give exhibitions of the Roman sports and games of 18 centuries ago. Over $25,000 has been expended in preparing the grounds. The largest grand stand in the world comfortably seating 12,000 is provided. Low round trip and excursion rates are being arranged on all roads running into Boston, and the grounds are remarkably easy of access. Succeeding each performance will be given the finest display of fireworks ever seen in Boston or in fact in this country. Admission with comfortable chair 50 cents. Children under 10 years half price.

Citizens of Woburn will find this one of the most satisfactory entertainments to be enjoyed in Boston.

Another Old One.

DEAR MR. HOBBS: Let me add an item to your interesting article in last week's JOURNAL entitled "A Few Old Settlers."

My brother (whose letter I enclose), Joseph Earl Teel, will be remembered by every man, woman and child (who was living 50 years ago) all the way from William Winn's in Burlington down the West Side road through Woburn to West Cambridge (now called Arlington).

John Weston and Earl Teel were famous as milkmen in the good old days when you could always find a "yellow scum" on the milk that was good. In 1854–57 years ago —Earl sold the goodwill of his milk route for $3000 and migrated to Illinois where he became a successful farmer and owns one of the best farms in Morgan county, and a nice home in the town of Waverley. He has been nearly blind for 15 years, but now at the age of 73 he is hale and hearty and is the hardest worker on the farm during harvest. I know of but few men who left dear old Woburn in the long, long ago, who will be better remembered by the New Bridge and West Side people than Earl Teel.

WARREN TEEL.

Davenport, Iowa, June 20, 1891.

[Earl Teel's letter which accompanied the above corroborates his brother Warren's story and is interesting as the production of a person 73 years old and nearly blind.]—ED.

The Union Temperance Meeting.

The temperance meeting held jointly by the city churches at the First Congregational house of worship on last Sunday evening was a good one. For several days previous to holding it the Boston papers, seemingly on mischief bent, contained warnings of an impending row, insisting that Rev. Hugh Montgomery and Hon. B. B. Johnson were loaded to the muzzle and would pour such heavy shots into the Woburn city authorities and talk in such a way generally that the meeting would prove an exceedingly inharmonious one, and perhaps break up in a fight. Said papers did all they could to bring about such a condition of things, but their failure was a signal and humiliating one. Perfect harmony prevailed at the meeting; everything went along as smooth as oil; cordial feelings prevailed among the originators and promoters of the occasion; and one of the best temperance gatherings of the year ended in the happiest manner.

Right here this thought suggests itself: If all the churches of Woburn would solidly unite to drive rumselling to the wall and promote the good cause, and would work earnestly and honestly together, shoulder to shoulder, in behalf of sobriety and good morals and to banish rum from our borders, and would strive together heart and hand, and would stop pulling in different directions —if they would unite cordially and earnestly and on such a platform and say the traffic in intoxicating liquors in this place must stop it would stop and right speedily too. The churches here might be a tremendous power for good if they only had a heart and mind to pull together; but as it is, their efforts in behalf of temperance do not yield fruits in as great abundance as they ought.

The meeting was a very large one. Rev. Dr. March presided, and Prof. Clarke led with the organ some excellent congregational singing. Opening remarks were made by the Chairman, after which Rev. Hugh Montgomery, pastor of the Methodist church, cursorily reviewed his temperance work in Woburn, and avowed his determination to continue a hot warfare on the rumsellers as long as he had life and strength given him to wage it. He has been engaged in the business for a long time. For several years he labored successfully in New Hampshire, subsequently in Connecticut, and since then in Massachusetts. He has prosecuted over 4000 rumsellers for violations of the liquor law during his crusade against the great enemy and a very large majority of them he made stick. Mr. Montgomery then gave an epitome and running commentory on recent proceedings against the rum traffic here, and at the close reiterated his determination to keep on fighting until victory perches on the temperance standard in this city.

Mr. Montgomery was followed by Hon. B. B. Johnson of Waltham, a prominent temperance lawyer of this county, who is almost constantly engaged in prosecuting the rumsellers in the courts. His address —the principal one of the evening—was listened to with close attention, and appeared to give general satisfaction. His speech consisted chiefly of a criticism of Judge Converse's decisions in recent liquor trials, and in exposing the illegality of the action of the Mayor and Aldermen respecting the granting of licenses this spring. He handled his subject ably and fairly and left a favorable impression on the minds of his audience.

The churches ought to repeat these temperance meetings at intervals of a few weeks and thus strengthen the hands of those who are engaged in making war on the SALOON.

North Woburn.

Rev. W. J. Murphy went last Monday on the Christian Endeavor excursion to Minneapolis.

It is said that our present postmaster, whose term of office is nearly at an end, will not accept another term.

We need and ought have at once free postal delivery for this village. Our present postal accommodations are of the most primative kind and totally inadequate to the wants of this community. No. Woburn is an important part of the city; it is a nice village made up of intelligent, educated people who deserve and demand better usage by the General Postoffice authorities.

Miss S. E. Fisher, the popular Boston school teacher, left Boston last Tuesday morning on the great Christian Endeavor Convention excursion to Minneapolis which meeting she will attend.

Board of Aldermen.

The Board held a special meeting on the evening of July 3, at which Mayor Bean presided.

The nomination of Mr. James Skinner as a member of the Sewerage Commission was confirmed 4 to 1 (Score one for THE WOBURN JOURNAL!)——Mr. Elisha T. Hayward was confirmed as member of the Board of Registrars of Voters (Another of THE JOURNAL's candidates safe in port!) ——Mr. John Connolly was appointed Lockup Keeper (Score No. 3 for THE JOURNAL!)——James Leighton licensed to run a pool-room. Adjourned.

A Delaware peach grower says it doesn't take a frost to kill the setting blossoms. A cold wind will do it as effectually.

Woburn's Industrial School.

It was organized late but is making good progress. The Directors and Teachers are well satisfied with the work done to date and with the success of this very laudable scheme for improving the minds and hands of the rising generation of both sexes.

A lady Director voiced public sentiment quite correctly when she said to a JOURNAL representative last Wednesday that to Supt. F. B. Richardson of the public schools of this city was mainly due the establishment of our Industrial School, as also is its gratifying success in no small degree attributed to his energy, enthusiasm and wisely directed efforts to that end. The fact is, Supt. Richardson is an enthusiast on the subject of Industrial in connection with the Public schools.

But although the lady Director modestly disclaimed any credit for herself for having contributed to the establishment of the manual labor annex on Academy Hill to the common school classes we are disposed to disagree with her on that point, and furthermore, to claim for her female associates, as well as for herself, the honor of having been among the very first to move in this important undertaking, and to claim also that the success of the school is owing largely to their intelligence and earnest work in conjunction with Supt. Richardson.

The establishment of the Industrial School was a grand thing for the boys and girls, and those who originated the idea here and carried it out ought to be known and duly honored by the community, as no doubt they will be.

The Industrial School on Academy Hill takes no vacation this year but the classes hold sessions three times a week to receive instruction in the domestic arts by the girls and mechanics by the boys. Thus far the attendance has been prompt and large, and the interest taken in the studies highly commendable.

The services of Supt. Richardson and the Directors are a free gift to the institution, and they are by no means few or small. Teachers and pupils are enthusiastic in carrying forward the good work from which great benefits are certain to arise. On the opening of the next school year it is expected that the School Board will place this branch of our public establishments of learning on a solid foundation that cannot thereafter be taken away, and also organize cooking classes which the lady managers have so set their hearts on.

Friends of learning—book or otherwise—male and female, in this city, ought to make a point to visit the Industrial School often, especially during this vacation season, and thus not only discover for themselves the good work it is accomplishing but to encourage Superintendent, Directors, Teachers and Pupils to keep on and faint not in the noble enterprise.

THE FIRST DISCIPLES.

LESSON II, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 12.

Text of the Lesson, John i, 29-42—Commit Verses, 40-42—Golden Text, John i, 29—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

29. "The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him."

The following verses indicate that the events of the two days included in this lesson took place after the baptism of Jesus.

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world."

The Father had testified by an audible voice from heaven, and by the descent of the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove, that this was His beloved Son, and now John points Him out as the one to whom he came to bear witness.

30. "This is He of whom I said, After me cometh a man who is preferred before me, for He was before me."

This He had said when they sent to ask Him if he was the Christ or Elijah or the prophet (verses 19-27). When a little later word was brought to John that all men were following Jesus, he only reiterated his testimony exalting Jesus. Every believer should make it his and her constant aim to magnify Christ under all circumstances.

31. "And I knew Him not."

Inasmuch as this gospel was written to prove that He is the Son of God (xx, 31), it may be that it was as Son of God he knew Him not till after the baptism.

"But that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water."

Gabriel had spoken of Him as one to sit on David's throne and reign over the house of Jacob, and Zacharias (the father of John) sang of Him as the one who should perform the oath which God had sworn to Abraham (Luke i, 32, 33, 72, 73). As the son of David, son of Abraham, to restore the kingdom to Israel (Matt. i, 1; Acts i, 6), John must have known Him, and baptized the people, pointing them to Israel's coming Messiah. But as Son of God and Saviour of the World bearing away the sin of the world this was a new revelation, and not till long after Pentecost did even the apostles receive the truth that Jesus was a Saviour to any but Jews.

32. "And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him."

For special service and on special occasions the Spirit had in Old Testament days come upon people, but here is one on whom He can abide. Not as a tongue of fire does He come to Jesus, but as a pure and gentle dove.

33. "And I knew Him not; but He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me."

As witnesses unto Christ we must be much away from the world and go forth in the power of God, and as sent by Him to make ready a people for His Second Coming, now so near at hand.

"Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on Him, the same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost."

From the time when the Spirit of God moved upon the chaos of Gen. i, 2, and even before that (Ps. xxxiii, 6), all that has been done on earth that has been truly good or great has been by the Holy Spirit.

34. "And I saw and bare record that this is the Son of God."

The word "son" in Scripture does not nessessarily signify inferiority or difference of nature, and sometimes not that at all, but rather likeness or sameness of nature or quality, the closest possible resemblance.

35. "Again the next day after John stood and two of his disciples."

John continues his work quietly and faithfully. When we are wholly subject to God He will clearly show us when to go and when to stay, when to speak and when to stop.

36. "And looking upon Jesus as He walked, He saith, Behold the Lamb of God."

The statement concerning His taking away the sin of the world is here omitted, so that this would point him out more definitely to Israelites as the antitype of their burnt offerings and paschal lamb.

37. "And the two disciples heard Him speak, and they followed Jesus."

See the benefit of personal work; the statement in verse 29 was probably a general declaration to the multitude, but here is a private and personal statement to two individuals, and the result is that both follow Jesus. Observe how it came about, and do thou likewise.

38. "Then Jesus turned and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye?"

How quietly and ordinarily it all comes about, the calling of these first two disciples! What a small and unlikely beginning!

"They said unto Him, Rabbi (which is to say, being interpreted, Master), where dwellest thou?"

Perhaps hardly knowing what they did seek, or what to say, but longing for something they had not yet obtained, they ask where He dwells. He might have answered, "I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble and to revive the heart of the contrite one (Isa. lvii, 15).

39. "He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where He dwelt, and abode with Him that day, for it was about the tenth hour."

"Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out" (John vi, 37). However unworthily or however feebly they come, if any one will only come they will be welcomed.

40. "One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother."

The other, we suppose, was John himself, inasmuch as he, being the writer of this Gospel, would not be likely to mention his own name; and it is only in the latter part of the Gospel that he speaks of himself as "That disciple whom Jesus loved."

41. "He first findeth his own brother Simon."

It may be that he thought of God's question to Cain, "Where is thy brother?" but whether or not, he did well to seek first his own brother. The first question for the sinner is, "Where art thou?" and when found and saved the next should be, "Where is thy brother?" (Gen. iii, 9; iv, 9).

"We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ."

The word "Messiah" is only found four times in our English Bible; here and in chapter iv, 25, in the New Testament, and in Dan. ix, 25, 26, in the Old Testament.

42. "And he brought him to Jesus."

The very thing to do, and the only thing to do, with our friends and our enemies, our joys and our sorrows, and all that concerns us.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. LITTLE SISTER.

Little sister, robed in white,
There with folded hands she lies,
Breathless silence on her lips,
Endless slumber on her eyes.

Leaving earth with no regrets
Clinging to her heavenward feet,
All that she has known of life
Was to grow more fair and sweet.

Yesterday she was our own,
Ours to comfort, love and teach.
Now she seems a wondrous star
Shining far beyond our reach.

Lay the scattered toys aside,
Fold the little clothes away,
Smooth the empty trundle bed
No more needed day by day.

Angels shall attend her now,
With immortal food and rest;
Leading her with tenderest care
Through the garden of the blessed.

Nicaragua Canal Project 340 Years Old.

A Mexican gentleman gave a bit of curious history with regard to the proposed Nicaragua canal. He said that in the early days of the Spanish occupation there was talk of a canal across the isthmus, and a Spanish explorer named Gomara, in 1551, indicated the Nicaragua route as the most feasible between the two seas. The Spanish government did not at the time give the matter attention, but in 1781, desiring quicker communication between the oceans, sent out an officer named Galisteo to make a survey of three different routes, and among them that through Nicaragua.

He also reported in favor of the latter, but Spain could not raise the funds for construction. In 1838 the route was again surveyed, this time by an Englishman named Bailley, who was employed by the state of Nicaragua, and again in 1851 by Colonel Childs for a company which proposed to undertake the canal. Nothing came of it, but in 1873 an officer of the United States navy made the surveys which resulted in the choice of the route by the company which is now engaged on the work of the canal.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Why Is It?

"Can you tell me," asked a traveler, "why it is that a man, or a woman, either, for that matter, has to pay different fares very often for traveling the same number of miles on a railroad, and on the same route at that? The fare to New York, for instance, is twenty dollars, limited train, over a certain road. The fare from New York over the same line on the corresponding train is twenty-three dollars. Why is this? I have asked one or two railroad men about it, and they have failed to give me any satisfactory reply or explanation. Not long ago I was in Rochester, and in purchasing my return ticket for Chicago I noticed that I paid something like ninety cents more for my ticket from there here than I did from Chicago to that point. It was the first time I had the experience, and I ventured to ask the agent, who informed me that he was not there for the purpose of explaining the rules of his company."—Chicago Tribune.

He Was Busy.

Jean Corot, the famous painter, was a patriotic Frenchman, but one who by no means kept pace with the times. So occupied was he with his work that he did not even hear of the coup d'etat of 1851 until two months after the new government was established. Then a friend found him painting a moonlit forest, with nymphs dancing. "You are happy," said the visitor; "you paint things gay and smiling, and we have just changed the government. We have strangled the republic." "My dear friend," answered Corot, "I have been so busy in making my nymphs dance that it is three months since I have opened a newspaper."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Saturday is usually said to have taken its name from Saturn, and to literally mean "Saturn's day." Saturn, in mythology, means one of the oldest and principal deities. The seventh day of the week was reserved for his worship. As a Saxon divinity Sater occupies a similar position. He was represented as a thin visaged, long haired individual whose looks bespoke one thoroughly wretched.

The chaplain at Wandsworth prison has come to the conclusion that crime and offenses rise and fall with the thermometer. A rise in the temperature, he says, has a tendency to diminish human rectitude. Even the conduct of children, we are told, is affected by a high temperature.

Every one knows how unlucky it is supposed to be to kill one of the tiny "money spiders." It is rather hard to say why these little creatures should have protection awarded to them in this way, unless it is because they are particularly numerous on a fine morning.

Mocking birds are found in nearly every part of the United States, but in the north they are only summer visitors, and they migrate to the south in winter, passing that season in the states that border on Mexico and the Gulf.

The poet Whittier has given up writing. He has made much money by his writings, and the income from his books is sufficient to keep him in comfort. The annual sale of his works is from 50,000 to 60,000 copies.

It is estimated that the production of the Pittsburg district is 25,000 barrels a day, worth, at the present low price, $8,000,000 for the year, enough to pay 6 per cent. interest on an investment of $130,000,000.

ROMAN HOUSES IN LONDON.

Mysterious Ruins of Civilization in Britain Nearly Two Thousand Years Old.

The houses of the better class can be reconstructed from the Roman villas whose foundations have been laid bare in various parts of the country. A very great number have been found and partially examined by excavations. Some of them are of a size and splendor which denote great wealth as well as a feeling of profound security. They have been found for the most part in the southern counties. Many are in Kent—a county which, so long as the count of the Saxon shore protected its coasts, was the safest part of Britain. But many of these villas have been found in Lincolnshire, and there are probably hundreds awaiting discovery. It is not fair in considering the trader's house of London to take the magnificent ruins of such a villa as that which has been laid bare at Woodchester in Gloucestershire. Here we find sitting rooms fifty feet square ranged about courts or gardens a hundred and a hundred and fifty feet square; here are splendid tessellated pavements, fresco paintings, fragments of statues and groups, Samian ware, and every indication of art and luxury. We need not suppose that London merchants lived in palaces. Into the lofty, brilliant, well heated apartments of the finer houses there was thrown a confused mass of furniture not unworthy of the richest palaces of modern days. Cushions and lounges of crimson silk and Babylonian tapestry surrounded the banqueting tables and walls; mirrors of metal or glass shone on all sides. Glass windows let in the inconstant sunlight, and candles, lamps and candelabra in the winter evenings scattered over the rooms on tripods, tables, niches, and perhaps hung aloft on the ceiling, threw down sufficient light. The infinite number and varied forms of their lamps show the care the Romans gave to lighting their rooms and their taste for nocturnal amusement. Carpets, rugs and matting were thrown upon the mosaic floor. Statues of real merit stood around in artistic negligence. Tables of citron wood, or marble tripods, book shelves and stands, glass vases of all forms and modes, rich with green, red or purple dyes, shone on the Roman sideboard. Goblets, pitchers and vases of the delicate red Samian were added to the glow of color; they were so fragile that only fragments of the finer kind have been preserved. In the midst of his luxurious home sat the London curial, or alderman of the Roman time, on his curule chair, surrounded by wife and children, clothed in the richest fabrics of the day, and all glittering with rings, jewels, armlets, bracelets, some of which have been left behind to tell their tale. On the bones of a woman's arm in Mr. Roach Smith's collection are seen three bracelets of gold, with gems and rare chasings.

To complete the picture of the home of the Roman period we must add a great number of articles of convenience or comfort that would seem to us almost exclusively modern. Chairs, lounges, sofas, bedsteads, chests, closets, drawers, curtains, glass vessels, mirrors and vases, bunches of keys, and a great variety of kitchen utensils, gold and silver ornaments, baskets and urns for money, great amphoræ filled with wine, and the well stored kitchens of the wealthy made up the requirements of Roman life. These the barbarous Saxons plundered or destroyed, chiefly from a fear that magic lay in all objects of art. A garden in the front of the villa, filled with roses from Pæstum and lilies and violets, was never forgotten by a people so fond of flowers; baths, hot and cold, were attached to every large house. Fourteen centuries and the ravages of Saxon and Dane have covered Roman London with a cloud of mystery that no one has been able to remove.—Eugene Lawrence in Harper's.

A Desperate Chance.

A Russian exile relates how he once saved himself by a desperate artifice. A police official searched his house for compromising papers. There was in his possession a document the discovery of which meant serious danger to himself and his friends.

Wherever he might hide it it seemed certain that it would be found. He coolly handed the document to the official, who scarcely glanced at it and handed it back.

After the most careful search the official, his nose blackened with soot and his hair decorated with feathers—for he had even examined the stovepipes and the bedding—departed empty handed.—Youth's Companion.

A New Way of Learning a Language.

Free lectures are now being delivered in various parts of the country to those who wish to take advantage of the facility with which languages can now be studied by means of phonograph cylinders. Sets of cylinders are also provided which contain the conversational course of a well known system in French, German, Spanish or Italian, and with each set of cylinders a set of books is furnished, so that the eye and ear can be educated at the same time.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

YOUTHFUL CHAPERONS.

One of the Funny Things That the Female College Has Given Us.

I have a little cousin no bigger than my thumb.

Well, that is not strictly true and substantial as a fact, but it will do as a figure of speech.

She is a wonderful little creature, as bright as a dollar and as pretty as a fairy. She went through school and went through college like a streak of greased lightning, feminine gender. She graduated at the top of the class, and the only limit to her honors was that the supply gave out. I would not dare to tell the age at which she got her sheepskin, it was so little.

Now there is a certain kind of fame which travels quick, and when my pretty little cousin made up her mind to teach for a year or two, pending the time when the hero should come and set her to darning socks and making cake, the offers poured in from all quarters of the compass. You would have thought that teachers were the scarcest kind of an article, and so I suppose they are—that is, real smart ones.

She took her pick of a number of gilded offers, modestly declining to be made president of a western college, and sticking up her nose at a mere public school principalship.

As a happy medium and good thing to practice on she took a position in a fashionable young ladies' seminary in the city of New York, with about three hours a day of work and a nice fat salary attached. Oh, my little cousin is smart in more ways than one. She knows on which side of her bread to look for butter and molasses.

But the joke of it is that in the school to which she has gone the teachers have to play the part of chaperons to the young ladies when they wish to add Daly's or Theodore Thomas' special branches to the curriculum of their studies. It is all very pretty in theory, but it looks decidedly funny to see my sweet little seventeen-year-old cousin, just as full of fun as she is of Greek and mathematics, engaged in the solemn duty of escorting a lot of nineteen year-old misses to places of amusement. I don't wish to give my cousin away, nor will I mention the particular school which is blessed by her presence and dignity, but I don't mind telling in confidence that it's not many miles from Fifth avenue, and that when she is going to convoy a flotilla of darlings she sends me a warning word, and if ever a fellow gets the worth of his matinee tickets I happen to know the man.

My blessings on the youthful chaperon! She is filling a long felt want.—New York Herald.

An Odd Way to Collect Bills.

Many years ago an eccentric dry goods merchant in New York owned property on which there was a mortgage held by another merchant. A clerk of the latter called on the former and said, "I called to get the interest on that mortgage."

"Did you, indeed?" replied the merchant. "Can you read this Bible, young man?"

"Yes, sir," replied the clerk.

"I want you to read this chapter in the Book of Job," said the merchant.

The clerk read a chapter, and the merchant listened with the greatest attention. It was about a horse being clothed with thunder. After the chapter had been read the merchant observed:

"Job was a great old fellow—wonderful genius. Now I'll give you a check for the interest money, and, mind you, hereafter when you call I'll always give it to you. If I do not, write me a note if I am out, and I will leave a check when I come in. You read Job first rate."—Dry Goods Chronicle.

A Puzzler.

If there are more people in the world than any one person has hairs upon his head, then there must exist at least two persons who possess identically the same number of hairs to a hair.

This same proposition may be applied to the faces of human beings in the world. If the number of perceptible differences between two faces be not greater than the total number of the human race, then there must exist at least two persons who are to all appearances exactly alike. When it is considered that there are about 1,500,000,000 persons in the world and that the human countenance does not vary, except within comparatively narrow limits, the truth of the proposition becomes obvious, without applying the logical reasoning of it.—New York Tribune.

Seductive Song of the Mocking Bird.

In southern cities, where a fine is imposed for killing one, mocking birds are very numerous, and they sing so joyously in the trees that it seems unnecessary and cruel to confine them in cages. They sing their sweetest songs during the moonlight nights of summer, often tempting old residents to lose sleep for the sake of hearing them.—New York Telegram.

Made Him Feel at Home.

Mrs. Bond—Living so far from the city as you do, Miss Newburgher, you must see very little of your father.

Miss Newburgher—Yes, he isn't here very often; still, he seems quite like one of the family.—Puck.

"Hunger is the Best Sauce."

As a rule, a person who has a good appetite has good health. But how many here are who enjoy nothing they eat, and sit down to meals only as an unpleasant duty. Nature's antidotes for this condition are so happily combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla that it soon restores good digestion, creates an appetite, and renovates and vitalizes the blood so that the beneficial effect of good food is imparted to the whole body. Truly hunger is the best sauce, and Hood's Sarsaparilla induces hunger.

Some authorities affirm that the contagiousness of whooping cough ceases after six weeks, however long the coughing may continue; others think it prudent to isolate the patient until the paroxysms are over.

Good Intentions Wasted.

"Isaac" is a bootblack and a philosopher, and he is a well known character in Broad street. Moreover, he is a very dark representative of the African race. "I'se got no use for beggars," he muttered the other day just after a man whose boots he was polishing had given a ragged mendicant a bit of silver. "Why not, Isaac?" asked his customer; "I thought that you had a tender heart."

"No moah tender heart, boss," responded Isaac energetically. "Ise had that nonsense taken out o' me suah!"

"How so, Isaac?"

"Jest this way, boss. A pale, ragged man comed up to me the other day and says, 'For the sake o' mercy, gi me a dime, I'se starvin.' Well, boss, I doant see nobody starve if I ken help it, so I jest pulled out a couple of dese yar St. Andrew's mission tickets, which give a man a plate of beans, two slices of bread and a cup of coffee, and I tole the man to come along o' me. I tuk him to the mission house, whar he could git his meal, and wha you tink he did? Why, he jest give a contemshus look at dat mission and turned round to me and said: 'See yar, you miserable nigger, what you mean by bringin' me yar? Do you spose I eat in dat place? Ise no pauper.' And he frew de tickets on de groun'."—New York Times.

Dirt That Was Once Alive.

In some parts of the earth people eat the dirt, which is found to possess nutritive qualities. The substance is known as mountain meal. The Indians on the banks of the Amazon river use this meal as food during times when other food is scarce. It is made up into a dough and baked as bread. Chemists have analyzed this substance, and find it to be composed of the remains of infusoria, and it is this animal matter yet remaining that makes it available as food.

If we now go a step higher and examine other fossil remains, in size reaching to that of the head of a pin, we find that a large part of the entire crust of the earth is composed of them.

A little shell animal called the miliolæ must have existed in countless numbers in the seas of the cretaceous period. In settling to the bottom of the ancient seas that covered what is now central France these shells formed immense strata, some of which are several thousand feet in thickness. The beautiful city of Paris is built from stone quarried from this deposit, mostly from the quarries of Montmartre.—Macon Telegraph.

Short Bills Passed by Parliament.

The shortest bills ever introduced which became acts of parliament were the following: 9 Henry III (chapter 6 of Magna Charta), containing four words only (Latin), which in English made six, namely: "Heirs shall be married without disparagement." Edward I, "The king commandeth that from henceforth neither fairs nor markets be kept in churchyards for the honor of the church." Edward III, "It is accorded that the plea of non-claim of fine which from henceforth shall be levied shall not be taken for any bar in time to come." This last bill and statute had reference to a method of barring an estate tail. Mr. Gladstone introduced a bill into the house of commons and an act of parliament was passed changing the "District Chapelry of Kirkthwaite" into the "District Chapelry of Cowgill," and this is possibly the shortest bill of the present reign.—London Tit-Bits.

The Capitol Dome.

The Capitol dome at Washington is the only considerable dome of iron in the world. It is a vast hollow sphere weighing 8,000,300 pounds. How much is that? More than 4,000 tons, or almost the weight of 70,000 full grown persons, or about equal to 1,000 laden coal cars of four tons each, which, if strung out one behind the other, would occupy a mile and a half of track.

On the very top of the dome the allegorical figure "America," weighing 13,985 pounds, lifts its proud head high in air. The pressure of this dome and figure upon the piers and pillars is 14,477 pounds to the square foot. It would, however, require a pressure of 755,286 pounds to the square foot to crush the supports of the dome. The cost of this immense dome was little short of $1,000,000.—St. Louis Republic.

Parrot Scares a Hawk.

Speaking of parrots, Mr. R. A. Houston tells a story how a tame parrot of his routed a hawk. The parrot was hopping about in the yard, when the hawk, probably mistaking it for a new breed of chicken, pounced down upon it. Polly gave a squawk that rather startled the bird of prey, and then turned on the fierce intruder with such vigor, beak and talon that the stronger bird was driven from the field in great shape. The parrot is no meek barnyard fowl.—Springfield (Mass.) Homestead.

Ollie's Opinion.

Little Ollie Miller heard her sister Lula speaking of a diary, and having had it explained to her that a personal diary was a brief record of one's life, she exclaimed:

"Well, then, I don't see what they want to call it a diary for; seems to me they oughter call it a livery."—Boston Courier.

A Professional Pessimist.

"Why, I thought Weener a real optimist."

"No, since he went into the meat business he makes the wurst of everything."—Munsey's Weekly.

Short Work of a Troublesome Case.

One day I was taken with Paralysis of the Bowels. The stomach and other organs lost all power of action. Although opposed to proprietary medicines, I tried Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. To make a long story short, it saved my life. It is the best medicine in the world for difficulties of the kidneys, liver and bowels.—A. J. Gifford, Lowell, Mass.

AMERICA ABROAD.

Dr. Daniel March, of Massachusetts, who has been travelling extensively in Oriential countries, says:

"I saw advertisements for the Waterbury watch filling whole columns in newspapers and large spaces on the outer walls of buildings in all the great cities of India. I heard the hum of the American sewing-machine in the by-ways and broad streets of Bombay and Calcutta and Rangoon. I saw American lamps for burning American petroleum hawked about the streets on wheelbarrows for sale in Yokohama and Tokio and Shanghai. I heard the clatter of the American typewriter in Chefoo and Tientsin and Swatow and Aintab. I heard American dentistry praised as the best in the world, and I travelled with an American dentist who was on his way to practise his profession in the city of Pekin. I afterward received his printed circular announcing his arrival in the great imperial city, and his readiness to extract the molars of mandarins or fill the cavities of Confucianists in the most approved style of American art.

"I was glad when I saw American tramcars running in the streets of Tokio, and the American wind-mill pumping water on the bluffs of Yokohama. I was glad when I heard the click of Connecticut clocks keeping good time for Orientals who are always behind. California canned fruits and Oregon salmon and Boston baked beans in hotels all over the East made me feel that home was not so very far away. And the fact that America is so often represented in the East by the homely articles of practical and everyday use did not make me wish that my country had more works of fine art, or more ruins and traditions of ancient time.

"The Bartlett pear and the Jersey peach and the damson plum were introduced into China by a missionary, who was the son of an American farmer. When a boy he learned to break colts and plant trees and hold the plough in western New York. He went to China to plant the Tree of Life, where the thorns and briars of superstition and ignorance had usurped the ground for ages. When I saw him picking fruit from trees and vines which he had imported and planted with his own hands in his garden, and when I rode with him through the streets of Chefoo on a wheelbarrow of his own making, I thought him a good illustration of the typical American, who lives in all climates, masters all trades, and gives an inspiration of hope to all people.

"The Japanese jinrikisha, which runs in every city and country road of Japan, is the invention of an American missionary whose salary failed him in time of war, and who was obliged to turn his hand to mechanical work for a while for the means of living. The Japanese persimmon, which grows in great abundance and makes delicious fruit in California, was introduced by an American missionary, who was out of health, and who went to California to recover. He made $13,000 out of persimmon planting, and then, having recovered his health, he went back to his chosen work in Japan.

"The art of decorating pottery and painting screens and working wonderfully in ivory has been in China for two thousand years. And the people still lived in mud houses, children went without clothes, and their parents worshipped the spirits of the air and the dragons of the deep; women dug up the field for planting instead of turning the soil with the plough; men pulled up grain by the roots instead of reaping it with sickles or mowing it with scythes; children learned the ways of their fathers, and plodded on in the journey of life under the same weary load of ignorance and superstition from generation to generation. Christianity comes bringing first the kingdom of heaven, and, as fast as that is received, all useful and practical arts and occupations follow in its train. Homes are brightened and beautified, minds are enlightened and hearts are cheered, and the people look up as if they saw the day of redemption from the bondage of ages drawing nigh."—Forward.

A Little Girl's Experience in a Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescott are keepers of the Gov. Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich., and are blessed with a daughter four years old. Last April she was taken down with Measles, followed with a dreadful Cough and turning into a Fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "handful of bones." Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They say Dr. King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get trial bottle free at F. E. Lovell's Drugstore.

World's Fair Notes.

A herd of eight-five buffalo will be exhibited at the Fair.

Thirty acres in the northern portion of Jackson Park have been reserved for sites for the State buildings. The ground has already been apportioned among the States, consideration being had for the size and importance of each and the amount it will probably expend upon its building and collective exhibit. The entire space will be artistically divided by beautiful walks and driveways.

An enterprising Nebraska man says, that he will take to the Exposition a crowd of 50,000 school children from Omaha and vicinity. He proposes to have each car load in charge of a teacher, and he has already begun negotiations with the railroads for special rates and special trains.

It is next to certain that the Exposition will be open evenings, in all of its departments. The Directory has called for plans and estimates for lighting, by electricity, all of the buildings. It is proposed to light both the buildings and grounds so brilliantly that everything can been seen at night as well as by day, and it is expected that scene at night will be one of marvelous brilliancy.

At a meeting of representatives of various religious, benevolent and reformatory organizations, held recently in New York for the purpose, a committee of five was chosen to arrange, if possible, for the erection of a separate building at the Exposition, in which can be shown the methods and results of every description of religious missionary and philanthropic work in this country.

The Exposition officials and those of the city of Chicago, have agreed upon police and fire arrangements for the Exposition grounds. Completely equipped police station and fire engine house will be erected at once, and the city will furnish them with a full complement of apparatus and men.

An appropriation of $150,000 has been made by the Exposition directory, for the expense of the ceremonies attending the dedication of the buildings, October 12, 1892. The ceremonies will be extended through several days, and some 15,000 militia and U. S. troods, it is expected will participate.

The fine arts exhibit it is now definitely and finally settled, will be at Jackson Park, the strong effort which was made to have it located in the Lake Front Fark having been defeated in the Directory. The fine arts building, which will cost about $600,000, will stand in the northern portion of the grounds, and will be nearly surrounded by the buildings of the several States of the Union.

A permanent art palace will be built also in Lake Front park, towards the erection of which the Exhibition will contribute $200,000. During the Exposition this building will be used by the World's Congress Auxiliary for the holding of some of its numerous congresses. After the Fair the Chicago Art Institute will take possession of it and make it the home of a permanent art collection.

One hundred thousand soldiers gathered from the regular army and national guard would make an effective feature of the World's Fair, so Gen. Miles thinks. The general has suggested such a display in a letter to President Thomas W. Palmer, outlining the distinguished soldier's views on the Exposition.

Marvellous Endurance.

The vast amount of labor performed by the heart in keeping all portions of the body supplied with blood is not generally known. It beats 100,000 times, and forces the blood at the rate of 168 miles a day, which is 3,000,000,000 times and 5,150,880 miles in a life time. No wonder there are so many heart failures. The first symptoms are shortness of breath when exercising, pain in the side or stomach, fluttering, choking in throat, oppression, then follow weak, hungry or smothering spells, swollen ankles, etc. Dr. 'Franklin Miles' New Heart Cure is the only reliable remedy. Sold by Charles H. Buss.

Anti Fat Swine.

Mr. J. Montgomery Sears, a wealthy fellow-townsman of Mr. J. Lawrence Sullivan, has imported from Europe a few specimens of anti-fat swine for breeding purposes. They are now at his New Hampshire sties. It is explained, says the New York Sun, that Mr. Sears hopes, by repeatedly crossing these leaner creatures with cylindrical and excessively fat porkers in vogue in this country at present, to produce in perfection the streak-of-fat-and-streak-of-lean variety of pork so highly prized in Boston as the central piece in the Sunday bean pot. While students of stirpiculture will be interested in Mr. Sears's experiment hardly less than they were in the now abandoned scheme for producing night-working honey bees by crossing ordinary bees with lightning bugs, all true Americans will regret that a citizen of Boston should decide to go to the monarch-ridden Old World for his lean pigs. His conduct in this matter will naturally be criticised as hardly less than unpatriotic. By taking a little pains Mr. Sears might have acquainted himself with the fact that the United States produces the leanest hogs in the world, as well as the fattest.—The Beacon.

Woman's Column.

Colorado has raised the age of protection for girls to sixteen.

The bill to allow women to serve as notaries public has been defeated in the Pennsylvania Legislature.

Mrs. Ella Brown of Holton, has just taken her diploma as a lawyer at the Kansas State University at Lawrence. She is the first woman to be graduated from the State Law School. She will practice law with her husband.

At the recent annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Medical Society, the following resolution was adopted: Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the President of this society to appeal to the Governor to fill the first vacancy which shall occur in the Board of Public Charities by the appointment of an enlightened and philanthropic woman.

Mrs. Crissey, of Omaha, Neb., is the only woman member of the State Pharmaceutical Association, and at the annual meeting recently held at Beatrice she was elected secretary for a second term. She has been a druggist for about five years. She assisted her husband for two years, and on his death assumed the business, passing the examination required by law.

The first woman in Indiana to hold the office of school trustee was elected on June 2, in Terra Haute. The election in that city is by the Council. The vote stood six to six. Five Democrats and one Republican voted in favor of the lady. The Mayor (Judge Allen) gave the casting vote. The new trustee is Mrs. Ida May Davis, a member of the Western Writers' Association, and a writer of considerable merit.

An "emergency cupboard" is one of the good things started by a Working Girls' Club in Boston. An old-fashioned secretary was secured and fitted up by the King's Daughters. Upon the shelves above are tumblers of jelly and other delicacies for the sick. In the drawers below are a hot-water bag, a rubber sheet, bundles of old linen, etc., which are at the disposal of any member of the club, or any needy person recommended by a member in time of illness. Unlike the renowned receptacle of Mother Hubbard, this cupboard is never "bare," as friends outside pledge themselves to keep it well stocked with supplies.

The natural connection between military and domestic despotism was strikingly exemplified in a speech lately made by the young emperor of Germany to his soldiers at a review. He told them that it was their duty to kill their own parents if commanded by him to do so, and he compared their relation to him with that of the girl "who is commanded by the Bible to leave father and mother, and submit herself to the absolute supremacy of her husband." This brutal expression of the imperial requirement of passive obedience in the home and in the government is the logical opposite of the American principle of individual sovereignty alike in the family and in the State.

A Victim.

BY HON. J. G. WOOLEY.

I talked to eighteen hundred men in Chicago the other day. I saw a troubled face in the audience, and I got to him as soon as I could at the close of the lecture. He said "yes, I was on my way to commit suicide, for I was discouraged, when a young man stopped me and asked me to come in here. You have a wife and children, mine have deserted me. Never mind me, I'll go to Lincoln Park and find rest with this," showing me a rope; but I clung to him. I prayed with him, I begged him to come to Christ. He said he might get rum out of him first, I told him any man was sober enough to come to Christ. As he left the church he promised to come back again at nine o'clock the next morning, and handed me the rope. While I was waiting for him to come I took up a city paper and read of the suicide of a man. In his pocket a note was found, saying, "I am too tired. I give it up." I went to the morgue and found it was my friend. I found him stripped for burial, he was still and white. Perhaps he gave himself to God, but the chances are he tumbled into hell. I wandered home thinking how hope had died out in that man, and perhaps as he neared home that night he thought there is nobody there; no wife, no fire, no child, no hope anywhere, and the devil drink said, "come with me and find oblivion," but he did not find it with my bottle. I don't care whether you vote my sentiments at the ballot box, whether women weep in their desolate homes, whether boys may drink, or the Capitol building at Washington has two dram shops, or the President's wife makes the best punch; it is not done with my bottle. No man hides himself behind the law with my bottle, and when Christian men come to take this stand, we shall have victory over the law dram shops of America.—Ex.

I Had Stone in the Bladder

And my kidneys were affected. None of the means taken produced any benefit until I began the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. The pain ceased—the stone having been dissolved by the action of the medicine. I am ready in public or in private to testify that my recovery is due to Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy—F. D. Parsons, Rochester.

Literary Notices.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for the weeks ending June 20th and 27th contain Canada and the United States; their Past and Present Relations, Sir Walter Scott, Russia and Northern Asia, Philip Henry Goose: a Puritan Naturalist, English War Songs, Chamonix in May, Bores and Bored, Comet Lore, Some evils of Acclimatization, with instalments of Samela, An Indian Ring, and Will Simpson's Funeral, and poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty four large pages each (or more than 3,300 pages a year) the subscription price ($8) is low. Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

"A Fastidious Prisoner" is a sharp reply to a piece of cheeky romancing by a Rebel prisoner at Camp Morton at Indianapolis in 1864 published in the last April number of THE CENTURY under the title of Cold Cheer at Camp Morton, which reply is written by Albert E. Winship, and published at 3 Somerset street, Boston. Winship was one of the guards at Camp Morton at that date and is therefore perfectly capable of refuting the unreasonable lies of the CENTURY writer about the treatment of Rebel prisoners at the Indianapolis prison. He has done it in his little pamphlet in a manner that may lead the ex-Confed to regret that he ever said anything about the matter.

The July WIDE AWAKE is a good number for hammock and veranda reading for old and young, as some of the tempting titles show: A Dreamland Lantern, The Rogue's Path, The Anti-Boy Picnic, Ye Boston Grasshopper, The Wrong Muscles, Amy Robsarts Embroidery at Leicester Hospital, How Teddy Morris made the Weather, My Sea Daisies (natural history article), Pussy in Private Life, Five Little Peppers Grown Up, The Chimney Swallow (anecdotal natural history paper), Miss Matilda Archambeau Van Dorn, Marietta's Good Times, How one Mother is being Brought Up, A Midnight Ride, Grim the Corn-Thief, Guess God won't be angry wis wees. WIDE AWAKE is $2.50 a year; 20 cents a number. A specimen (back number) will be sent on receipt of 5 cents. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

The July number of THE CENTURY is a prime one. There is not an article in it that is not as full of entertainment as an egg is full of meat. Besides that, the work of the artists is very fine indeed. These are a few of the papers: Greeley's Estimate of Lincoln with a portrait which constitutes the frontispiece of the number; A Day at Laguerre's, illus.; Provencal Bull Fights, ills.; Mr. Cutting, the Night Editor; Italian Old Masters; General Miles's Indian Campaigns, profusely illustrated; The Squirrel Inn; The Faith Doctor; Across the Plains in the Donner Party (1846), with many spirited pictures; Arrival of Overland Trains in California in '49; The Force of Example, illus; A Lunar Landscape, and many others. The Topics of the Times, Open Letters, etc., are full of fine things.

HIGHLY ENCOURAGING—$15.70.

The Board of Assessors have finished their annual task of listing the taxable property and making up the books for the City Collector more than two weeks earlier than common, for which the tax-payers will not be slow to give them credit. Evidently they have pushed the business vigorously and allowed no grass to grow under their feet, figuratively speaking, while in the performance of these important public duties. Col. William T Grammer, Mr. John Ferguson and Mr. E. Prior, Principal Assessors, are the gentlemen entitled to this credit.

Their report is a good one and one that will fill with encouragement everybody in Woburn who has her best interests at heart. The material reduction in the rate of taxation is especially cheering. In 1889 it was $17.20 on $1000; in 1890, $16.50 on $1000; and this year it is $15.70 on $1000.

This result has been reached without any "sweating" or other special pains taken by the Assessors to increase the returns of taxable property, and the story which the reduced figures tell are all the more significant and gratifying on that account.

Every leather factory except two in the city returned an increased amount for listing over last year, and from this source considerable of the additional personal property for taxation came. The Assessors found a much larger number of residences put up during the year than they looked for and from this source came the increase in the taxable real estate. So, notwithstanding the considerable shrinkage of personal on two large tanneries, the loss of Warren Academy, and other less important fallings off, there has been found this year an increase in the aggregate of taxable property large enough to reduce the rate from $16.50 in 1890 to $15.70 in 1891—a reduction of 80 cents on $1000.

This is a bright and most encouraging report from the Assessors and will serve as the best kind of an answer to those home growlers and outside slanderers of fair Woburn on the score of her high taxes.

The Assessors also found that, although this has been a hard year for business in this city on account of the general stagnation in the leather trade, we have probably about held our own in population.

MAYOR BEAN AND THE DRUGGISTS.

Mayor Bean's notice to the druggists of this city, which we print in another column of the JOURNAL this week, has produced a fluttering among them and led some of them to say unwise things. Personally the Mayor is a clean, high-toned, moral-minded gentleman but his politics are abominable, and therefore it was not expected he would insist on it that the druggists should obey the laws of the State the same as other people are obliged to do.

The papers appear to be the only ones very much disturbed over Mayor Bean's letter. The people don't seem to be so terribly cast down about it. Nobody, so far as is known, died last Sunday for lack of drugs, and there is no probability that Woburn's mortality bill will very materially increase next Sunday because the druggists and their clerks have resolved to go to the beaches on that day "in a body" (See late issues of Boston papers). The actual fact is that people seldom die for lack of drugs. The blow the dailies are making over the Mayor's letter written in the interest of law and order and in support of a higher standard of morals is far from being a pretty one, and if we were a member of the Apothecaries Guild we should disapprove of it. Mayor Bean is to be commended for his courage and honest course. It will command the approval of the best classes of society, and would it be wise for the druggists to undertake to fight these classes?

There are always two sides to a question, a fact which our friends, the reporters, will do well to take into account while criticising and condemning the course of Mayor Bean.

Then again, when the sober second thought is allowed its full untrammelled sway don't it look just a little bit as though some people were making a tremendous big cry over a very small amount of wool? Mayor Bean has issued no royal order to the druggists; he has made no threats; he merely suggests that a due regard to law be observed. He has ordered no curtains to be drawn, and yet we hear that certain busy-bodies are going about saying that he commands the druggists to violate the laws. We do not so read his letter.

Gentlemen, keep cool and treat the matter in a sensible way.

QUITE ENCOURAGING.

The times are hard all over the country and particularly so in communities dependent on manufactories for their support. Leather industries and interests appear to be more unfavorably effected by the dull wave than any other branch of business, but we hope, and the prospect is, that early fall will witness a different condition of things and one more to the advantage of employers and employed.

Months have elapsed since anything like brisk operations in leather-making has been experienced in this city—the producing centre of that staple in New England; nearly all through the spring the factories here have been running with greatly reduced crews; many people who could not afford it have been compelled to spend a large part of their time in idleness; but as before remarked the signs for the future are more encouraging and our firm belief is that a long period of active and flourishing business will set in by the time fall gets round again.

Apropos of the subject is the following from last week's issue of Shoe and Leather Review:

"The tanneries and currying shops of Woburn, Winchester, Salem and Peabody have curtailed their output some 65,000 sides a week. The crop tanneries of Pennsylvania have curtailed as much, while many of the upper leather tanneries throughout the country have largely curtailed, and it is not unreasonable to believe the present demand is not within 100,000 of hides a week as compared with a year ago. This is by no means a discouraging sign of the times for the leather men. It shows that the trade is working itself into a healthy, promising future. If the shoe business should suddenly assume increased activity this fall, creating a demand for leather, the surplus stocks now in store would grow less, and an activity in tanneries and among hide men would at once show itself. In case of a sharp demand prices would likely strengthen all around."

PROPOSED GUARDIANSHIP OF THE COUNTRY PRESS.

About three weeks ago George A. Marden, State Treasurer; Geo. S. Merrill, Insurance Commissioner; the former one of the Editors of a Lowell paper and the latter of a paper in Lawrence; with other Republican newspaper men, sent out a call for a meeting to organize a State Republican Editors Club, and in due time such a meeting was held. When the score or less of Republican Editors got together in Boston it was found that the movement was nothing more nor less than an impudent scheme hatched in the brain of some impecunious quill-driver out of a job to get up an organization with a view to furnishing Republican Editors with their politics this summer hot from the factory of the State Committee, which scheme, it was also found, couldn't be made to work worth a cent.

It was so manifestly a plan to bring a few Country Editors, with more cheek than brains, into public notice, and to furnish a pretext for an additional hanger-on at the State Committee Headquarters with good pay; and it was made so plain that Republican Country Editors propose to run their own papers in their own way, and are abundantly able to do their own thinking and writing without dictation from Republican clubs or committees, that the whole thing was severely sat down on by all intelligent Editors present, and the affair resulted in a poor, little pitiable fizzle.

THEY DID EXACTLY RIGHT.

When the Governor's Council rejected the nomination of one of the Governor's townsmen for Railroad Commissionor on party grounds they did just what was their bounden duty to do. The Governor nominated his man for partisan reasons solely, and the Council very properly rejected him on the same score.

Nobody pretends to say that Mr. Crocker is not one of the best Railroad Commissioners the State ever had. He is especially fitted for the office and not a word has ever been heard against his ability or integrity. But Gov. Russell wanted to fill the vacancy with a Democrat. The Council didn't, and the latter won the case. Now let the Governor try again.

WILL SERVE ANOTHER TERM.

There is no talk of anybody but Capt. E. F. Wyer to represent this Senatorial District in the next Legislature. From what we hear it is entirely safe to say he will meet with no opposition anywhere except from the Democrats.

The two-term rule entitles Senator Wyer to a renomination, and not only so but it is due to him on his merits.

— The sharper who attempted to play the flim-flam game on clerk Harry Bishop at the store of grocer Curtis last Tuesday didn't quite "make the riffles." When he tackled Bishop and Curtis he was barking up the wrong tree. The chap was soon after arrested.

— An elaborate survey of the liquor laws now standing on the statute books of this Commonwealth and a careful analysis of the same, prepared with considerable labor and much pains by Rev. Hugh Montgomery, is crowded out of the columns of the JOURNAL this week. It will keep.

— Here's another youngster who has got a new watch and earned it by selling tea. His name is Leon R. Vaughn, son of Mrs. Annie Vaughn, and Foster & Co. of Boston were the gents who gave him the fine silver watch for selling 25 lbs. of their tea in 4 days. Wasn't that doing well?

— Miss Annie H. Young of 109 Columbia street, Dorchester, went on Wednesday to North Conway, N. H., where she will remain for several weeks as the guest of Miss Alice Champney, a daughter of Mr. Benjamin Champney, the Woburn artist, whose charming studio annually attracts numerous visitors —Boston Herald.

— Arrangements for opening a cooking class in the Industrial School on Academy Hill are about completed. Competent teachers will be employed. Those who wish to join it can do so by making application to Mr. Frank B. Richardson, Supt. of Public Schools in Savings Bank Block, Pleasant street, this city.

— Judging from the smiles that have wreathed his countenance Mr. Frank Nichols, the honest and popular iceman, has enjoyed every minute of the present "heated term." We say "honest," realizing fully the importance of the word as used in connection with the sale of ice at retail, and of its applicability in this particular case.

— James Weatherbee of Winchester is wanted by the police for forging the signature of Mrs. L. R. Woodruff of Brooklyn, N. Y., to a draft of $157, which was cashed by Alex. Ellis of Woburn Satuaday evening last. Cashier Day of the Woburn National Bank says the counterfeit is an excellent one. Weatherbee has disappeared.

— Mr. W. W. Case, cashier of the Irish National Bank in Meadville, Penn., is a guest at the Eastman House with his wife. Mrs. Case is a daughter of Dr. George A. Hutchins of Woburn, Mass., who was also registered at the Eastman very early in the season, taking his first vacation for many years.—White Mt. Cor. Boston Herald.

Desert, one of the most delightful retreats on the Maine coast. We wish Mr. Folsom much joy of his outing.

— The Bay State League installed the following officers last Wednesday evening: President, James L. Pinkham; Vice President, Alonzo L. Perham; Secretary, Henry N. Deans; Treasurer, Frederic A. Flint; Chaplain Mrs. S. A. Cranstone; Trustees, Zoeth W. Atwood, Edward E. Lynch, Thomas Heartz; Past President, Amariah V. Haynes.

— The druggists of Woburn concluded to try conclusions with Puritanism last Sunday and every one of them closed his store and left the city. If some citizen in an emergency had died for want of timely medicine possibly some of the reported highly elated gentlemen in town might have been singing another tune Monday morning. —Boston Globe. Rot!

— Capt. Edward Parker late Assistant Managing Editor of the City Press has severed his connection with that most excellent, enterprising and prosperous sheet, and became local reporter for the Boston Advertiser and Boston Evening Record. Should favorable conditions present themselves Capt. Parker will probably join the Woburn Press Association.

— Messrs. J. R. Carter & Co. may now be found at 305 Main street at the office formerly occupied by Jos. B. McDonald, at which place they still conduct the coal and wood business under the firm name and style of Carter and Perley.

— Editor Charles S. Parker of the Arlington Advocate condescended to call and tell the JOURNAL man that it was hot last Wednesday, and to rest his weary bones in a soft-bottomed chair in the Sanctum-Sanctorum of the last named hebdomadal for 30 minutes or so. Charley is as fat as a crow this summer, but the Advocate is prospering, as it well deserves to.

— The Woburn Brass Band, T. J. Marrinan leader, gave a very fine concert on the bandstand last Wednesday evening. The biggest kind of a crowd were present to enjoy it. Signs of rain and occasional sprinkling caused the leader to shorten up his "waits" which made it all the pleasanter. Three more concerts will be given by this fine old Band during the season.

— The intelligent reader can't help but be interested in the contents of the outside pages of this week's JOURNAL. They include some things which Dr. March saw in the Orient two years ago, good temperance reading, items furnished by the Woburn Suffrage League, and much miscellaneous matter which will please lovers of good literature. Also the Sunday School Lesson for July 19.

— Rev. Mr. Scott of Somerville, who come here to preach for Rev. Mr. Winn at the First Bapist church last Sunday, got into the Unitarian pulpit on his arrival and did not discover the error until Parson Parker came in and found his place occupied by a stranger. Explanations followed and Mr. Scott went over to the Baptist church where, it is said, he preached a strong, healthy, and most excellent sermon.

— In pronouncing judgment in J. H. Connolly's case the other day Judge Johnson gave an exhibition of that somewhat rare mental quality without which no man can make a good judge, namely, common sense. Finding that Connolly's offense was a technical one Judge Johnson hung it up for future action, if necessary, and it was not his fault that the respondent did not profit by the Court's leniency.

— At a regular meeting of the Woburn Co-operative Bank held on last week Thursday evening there was sold $4,150 at 10 cents a share premium, and $750 at 5 cents a share. Secretary Whitcher informs the JOURNAL that there is a brisk demand for the Bank's money and that a considerable share of that loaned goes into building. There will be issued a new series of shares in October next.

— On Monday morning we received a circular from Rev. C. H. Washburn of Falmouth, formerly pastor of the North Congregational church in this city, which contained the order of exercises at the Falmouth Summer School, of the Faculty of which he is Dean. This school, we apprehend, is modelled after the Chautauqua and is a worthy product of Mr. Washburn's active and fertile brain. He is a live man.

— The following well known Woburn people were among the recent arrivals at the Jerusalem Spring House, Canaan, N. H.: Mr. S. Franksford Trull and Mrs. Trull, Mrs. D. G. Trull, Mr. Elliot F. Trull, Miss Bertha P. Trull, Master Clifford Trull, Miss H. C. Blake, Mr. John T. Trull, Mrs. Charles Trull, Miss Evelyn Trull, and a jollier outing party it would be no easy matter to scare up in the whole State of New Hampshire.

— Frank T. Robinson has been added to the Board of Directory of the Johnston Electric Signal Co., and also elected its General Manager. The reason for this is the chronic illness of Mr. Johnston. The affairs of the Company, which by the way are prospering, could not well be placed in better or more efficient hands than those of Mr. Robinson. The business of the concern is perfectly familiar to him, and he has any quantity of push, without which no enterprise can succeed now days.

— In his sermon last Sunday morning Rev. Lawrence Slattery, assistant minister of St. Charles church, bitterly denounced lawn parties as many of them are conducted at the present time. He will not countenance them—indeed, members of that church who promote or attend them will be dealt with according to their deserts. We are glad to see Fr. Slattery set his face square against the lewdness and intoxication that sometimes characterize these parties which are got up for no other purpose than to sell beer.

— Principal Assessors Grammer, Ferguson and Prior will please accept the JOURNAL's best thanks for valuable favors shown it in connection with their official position. And we beg also to call especial attention to some figures which these gentlemen have furnished us, the same to be found in another column. They tell a good story, and if there is a person anywhere who thinks Woburn is going the other way he is respectfully referred to them. The fact is, our city is growing and will continue to do so notwithstanding the maledictions of fools and foes.

— After tea on these warm evenings, if one would get to feel very comfortable and entirely content with mundane things, let him or her board a North Woburn open street car and take a ride to Winchester and Medford and back. The little trip is very agreeable taken shortly after dinner; and if there is a plenty of spare time a ride down there in the forenoon is cooling and comforting. But we prefer the hours after 7 o'clock in the evening for the modest little outing. Then we get the cooler breezes, the early dews, the vespers of the woodland songsters, the fair sunsets, and the peace and rest of the closing hours of the day. It is a pretty ride. There is no more attractive scenery anywhere than that found between Winchester Common and Medford Square. There are wide and charming views from Symmes's Corner. Neat farms and attractive farmhouses are passed all along the route. On Winchester East Side are many handsome residences, lawns and gardens. Medford village boasts of numerous ancient and interesting landmarks, as well as things new and attractive; and the trip all the way from Woburn to Medford is exceedingly pleasant.

— Miss Alice Champney of Woburn, who is now at her father's summer studio at North Conway, N. H., will be the guest during August of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Taylor, Jr., in their new cottage at Marblehead Neck.—Boston Globe. Miss Champney, who is regarded as among Woburn's best young ladies, and Mrs. Taylor (formerly Marguerite Falck) were great cronies when neighbors here, and separation does not seem to have produced any seriously "strained relations" between them. Miss Alice will doubtless have a splendid time among the sands, breezes and billows of beautiful Marblehead Neck.

— "Charlie" Taylor can't quite yet strike a 2-40 gait but he gets around on his crutches pretty lively all the same. He will go to work in a few days and everything will be lovely once more. Beggs & Cobb have done the handsome thing by him while laid up with his broken leg. Mr. William Beggs of the firm has taken the place of their unfortunate overseer and discharged the duties of the position right along during his absence from his post, and every Saturday evening the week's wages have been taken to Mr. Taylor's home and handed over to him. That comes pretty near to being true religion, if indeed it is not the genuine article.

— A few days ago Mr. Charles Cummings, the wide-awake, go-ahead, and successful farmer and stock dealer at No. 35 Cambridge street, unloded a carload of the finest Canadian horses that were ever offered for sale in this city. They are of mixed sizes, colors, etc. and the lot comprises splendid roadsters, heavy draft, neat and handsome family nags, and everybody says they are good ones. Mr. Cummings is putting a good deal of money into firstclass Canadian horses this season which is all the better for the community as well as for his own pockets. Those who want to buy a fine horse will do well to call at Mr. Cummings's stables at once.

— William Winn, Esq., has a card in this paper whereby he respectfully notifies the public of his resignation of the office of auctioneer which he has filled continuously since 1835. He is now 82 years old and in the 56 years of his auctioneer career nobody ever said that he was anything but an honest one. His business record is stainless. And besides that, many will remember his generous treatment of the families of soldiers away back in 1861-5. He used to have a good many vendues in those days of the effects of the brave soldiers and to these Mr. Winn usually made a present of his professional fees—make out the bill, receipt, and present it to them. In other ways he was known to be a kind hearted, fair, and honorable man.

— What's up? Early on Wednesday morning there was a very unusual sight in front of Holdridge's on Main street. It was a group of Democratic war-horses. Of course to see three Democrats chatting together on the street is no strange thing, but the personnel of this party imparted to it its uncommon tinge. It was composed of a trio of gentlemen, namely: Hon. A. E. Thompson, Dr. Cyrus Lang, and Ald. Jacob Ham. It is perfectly safe to say that these old politicians have not met in this fashion or any other before for five years, and it is probable such a meeting would not now have taken place with the thermometers standing dangerously near the nineties but for the Mayor's strange and very un-Democratic proceeding against the druggists.

— Last Sunday a party of five 'cyclists, which included the champion featherweight belt-winner, Mr. David Ronco, also Harry Hartwell, et als., took a spirt to Bass Point, Nahant, and broke the record—at least, the champion did. Young Hartwell and his companions made the distance from here to Lynn Common in just 62 minutes, and on the score of that unprecedented rate of speed they stopped to bait and breathe a bit. The champion (Ronco) was invisible during their tarry, but when the quartet reached Bass Point they found him lounging there on the rocks, as cool as the centre seed of a cucumber, and smiling ing blandly, as his hot, dusty and profusely perspiring fellow 'cyclists came toiling up to the rocks. The champion featherweight belt-wearer had smashed the record all to pieces and was resting on his laurels and a heap of cool, refreshing seaweed.

— Mr. Arthur A. Fowle, Managing Editor of the Boston Globe, the phenominal success of which has been secured in a large measure by his push, pluck and good ideas, is spending the vacation season in Woburn, and Master Leonard and the rest of the family are with him. Editor Fowle enjoys life out here. He has bought a village cart and a little pie-bald mare to haul it and a bow-whip and a dog under the wagon and-so-forth for the boys and Madam and the balance of them, by whom and him a deal of pleasure is taken in driving around over the fine roads and among the attractive scenery of this old town. Thus enjoyeth life the Editor of the Metropolitan Daily while the Skipper of the poor, struggling, but highly respectable Country Weekly has to work and sweat and fret right along through the vacation season at the old stand and considers himself a lucky dog if he gets three fairish kind of meals a day and two on Sunday. But, all the same, we are glad to see Editor Fowle and his enjoy themselves.

— The business which Messrs. Carter & Perley recently purchased of Mr. Joseph B. McDonald is a very large one. It embraces facilities, territory and good-will second to no coal establishment in Middlesex county. Mr. McDonald bought the business of Mr. Alpheus S. Hayward in 1862, at which date the aggregate annual sales of coal amounted to about 1500 tons. During the succeeding 29 years the trade was increased by Mr. McDonald's energy, good business qualities, and fair deal towards the public, to such a degree that when he sold to Carter & Perley and for some years previously his annual trade amounted from 28,000 to 35,000 tons, not less than 15,000 tons of which was disposed of at retail to individual consumers in this town. In addition to this, his sales to the tanneries and other manufacturing establishments of Woburn and vicinity were large. This great business, built up by Mr. McDonald since 1862 when he was 22 years old—just of age, so to speak—was never more prosperous or growing more rapidly than the day he disposed of it to Messrs. Carter & Perley, by whom, we have no doubt, its good name and large sales will be fully maintained. It is to be regretted that Mr. McDonald thus steps out of Woburn's business circles, but it is pleasant to know that he will continue to make his home here.

Reply to Judge Converse.

WALTHAM, July 10, 1891.

REV. HUGH MONTGOMERY;

Dear Sir: I have read the courteous statement of Mr. Justice Converse published in the WOBURN JOURNAL but the conclusion of Mr. Converse and of the editorial thereon are not justified by the facts nor by the cases quoted. Mr. Converse makes important admissions in the following words ("treating the cases as one"):

1st. "The Government showed that the defendant was proprietor."

2nd. "That sales of intoxicating liquors were made."

3rd. "That doors and screens in some cases existed illegally."

He then asserts: "The government utterly failed to show in any case that the proprietor or his agent or servants were present where the sales were made or that the acts were done by him or them or that he assented thereto."

The answer to this is to be found in the facts:

1st. That in two cases the sales were testified to as made by the defendants who were the licensees.

2nd. That in Maloney's case the sales were made by a brother who it was shown had been regularly employed on the premises since the license was issued to the defendant.

(Who else would employ his brother on his premises?)

3rd. In the Samuel Thompson case it was proven by Mr. Jones the owner that he made his rent bills to Thompson. It was proven that the sales were made over a bar by the man who had testified in the Kerrigan case that he sold whiskey to Kerrigan and others when they returned from Peter Kenney's funeral. He testified "I am bar keeper at the Central House." "I made the sales to Kerrigan in the bar room and on the bar." "I am bar keeper for Mr. Thompson; work for him."

4th. In the Kerrigan case it was proven that the sales were made by his partner, Connolly. That the money went into the till of the bar room licensed by Kerrigan & Connolly. What better evidence of knowledge and assent could be had than announcing to the world that the business was to be done by them which was found being done?

5th. In the Merriam case a witness said that Merriam was in the bottling room of the establishment. The Chief of Police testified that the place had a bottling room and a barroom. The evidence showed that the sales were made by Carpenter. The man whom Merriam joined in a request for a license to sell liquor as Merriam & Carpenter, what better evidence of agency could be had than partnership in the proceeds of the business done there?

And later Carpenter was convicted.

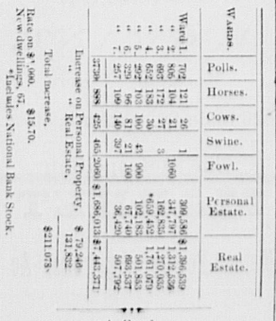
SECOND PART.

As to the citation of Mr. Converse to justify his refusal to convict on a "prima facie case:" What does this mean? It means, "there appears to be a case made by the government which the defendant is called upon to controvert or be adjudged guilty." In every case cited by him evidence was offered by the defendant to meet that of the government therefore it was not left as before him. Applying all the citations and quotations and they do not meet, controvert or weaken the statement which I originally made.

Again I say, on the evidence offered we had proved all the sales to have been sanctioned by the proprietors or made by them, therefore they would in justice have been adjudged guilty.

Yours very respectfully,
B. B. JOHNSON.

Interesting Statement.



A Card.

After 56 years of continuous service as Auctioneer, my first license as such bearing date 1835, and being now 82 years old, I would announce to the public that I have permanently withdrawn from the business and now leave it to younger hands.

In taking leave of the public through the columns of THE WOBURN JOURNAL I desire to express my appreciation of the very large business patronage and considerate treatment that I have never failed to receive from the people of Woburn and vicinity, and to return my heartfelt thanks for the same.

WILLIAM WINN.

Peculiar

Many peculiar points make Hood's Sarsaparilla superior to all other medicines. Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's. Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is now more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever

Mayor Bean's Notice.

Last week Mayor Bean caused the following document to be served on the druggists of this city:

CITY OF WOBURN,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

Dear Sir: Your attention is called to the provisions of law regulating the conduct of business on Sunday which confine within narrow and well known limits the business which can be legally transacted on that day. Complaint is made that these limits are at present disregarded, and you are requested to hereafter conform to the requirements of the public statutes.

You can, of course, adopt such rule relative to opening your store as you see fit, but I venture to suggest that certain hours be agreed upon by the druggists of the city during which you shall be open each Sunday, and in deference to the sentiments of the community, which are offended by the conspicuous throwing open and lighting of the stores, I trust it may be generally agreed in the trade that, when open, you will allow your curtains to remain drawn, and that you will not illuminate the stores more than may be necessary for the convenient transaction of business.

Very respectfully yours,
GEORGE F. BEAN, Mayor.

Woburn, July 10, 1891.

Subsequently the druggists held consultations on the subject the upshot of which was a determination to keep their stores closed all day Sunday and decline to open them for any reason whatever. This was done and the effects of the order were plainly visible in a greatly reduced number of people on the streets both day and evening.

(Written for the Woburn Journal.)

One of Boston's Charities.

A busy scene is presented to the visitor who calls at the Salem St. branch of the New England Kitchen. The Superintendent is Miss Mary Bell Gould, formerly of Woburn. The idea of these Kitchens originated with Mrs. Ellen H. Richards, Professor of chemistry at the Institute of Technology, and through the patronage of Mrs. Quincy-Shaw was carried out by Miss Gould.

The object is to furnish wholesome food to the public at less cost than it could be provided in their homes if expense of time and fuel were included. The kitchen offers for sale soup, mushes and puddings; also beef broth for invalids, and evaporated milk for infants.

The cleanliness of the place gives a restful feeling after a walk in North End, and preaches its own little sermon; then too, the food sent out aids in the moral work, for well chosen and well cooked it satisfies hunger and the thirst for strong drink is more easily curbed. The windows are large and the light adds to the cheer of the place. On the tables carefully covered are loaves of healthy bread and white, and along the walls are cases of drawers and shelves for cooking materials. Beyond are the iron kettles heated by steam by the use of which burning or even scorching is obviated. The stock is made over night in an Aladin oven, on the old fashioned brick oven plan, where the heating is so gradual that the juices are wholely extracted and ready for use in the morning. As three kinds of soup are furnished daily there are three kettles set, and beyond these one much larger and of different shape where the steam enters directly, and where barley, rice and such materials are cooked. From eleven o'clock until seven the kitchen is open to the public.

Miss Gould is now spending a part of her time in Providence where she is starting a Kitchen on the same principle, and in the Fall she goes to New York on the same errand.—H.

Mrs. Marcella J. Young, wife of Mr. Charles Young, who died, Thursday evening, July 9, was a woman well known and beloved in this town where she was born and where the greater part of her life was spent. She had been for many months a sufferer from an incurable disease and death came, like an angel of mercy, to bring her a glad release from pain. Her husband and little daughter with her mother and sisters have the sympathy of the community in this time of sorrow. To them her memory will ever be hallowed and her name will be a cherished household word.

Rev. Hugh Montgomery Speaks.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WOBURN JOURNAL: Dear Sir: In last weeks issue of the News there is a labored editorial of some length in which the writer builds up evidently to his own satisfaction an elaborate house of cards. The answer to the article is a very simple one. On Thursday, the 25th of June, when Judge Convers gave his discision in the Liquor cases he continued Carpenter's case until the 29th and wished me to notify Mr. Johnson. I received a letter from Mr. Johnson stating he would not come, and he also gave his reasons for not doing so. A reporter of the Boston Herald called on me and urged me to give him a copy of the letter the day previous to the trial. At that time I stated to him that I could not give him a copy of the letter for I didn't think it would be fair to have it published when the Carpenter case was pending, but I would let him have a copy of it the next day after I give it to Judge Converse. On Monday morning, the 29th of June, I handed the letter to the Court as he was about to take his seat. He laid it down on the desk and after attending to some business I saw him take the letter and look it over and when the Carpenter case was called I stated to him that Mr. Johnson had refused to appear and his reasons were in the letter that I gave him. And if I remember correctly the Court said the letter was written in anger and he thought Mr. Johnson would regret writing it. He then said "we will go on with the case." The Boston reporter came to me and asked if I had a copy of the letter. I handed him one. A number of other reporters called for one but I did not give them any. After the case was argued the Judge called our attention to Mr. Johnson's letter, and gave reasons for his action on the previous cases at some length and stated that he gave judgment conscientiously upon what he understood the evidence to be. The reporter on the Woburn Press, at the close of the case, asked me for the letter and I told him I had given it to the Court. He then went to Mr. Converse for it and the Judge sent after me and asked if I had any objections to the reporter having a copy. I said "no."

These are the facts in the case, and I had no desire to deceive any one. Mr. Johnson called at my house July the 5th, just a little while before the lecture, and I was telling him how anxious the reporters were to get a copy of that letter before I handed it to the Court. At that moment two reporters entered and broke up our conversation. I don't remember of our speaking about it afterwards hence I may not have clearly explained the matter to Mr. Johnson, but I am sure he wishes not to wrong or misrepresent anybody.

This is all of the story, and this I should have sent to the News had they not already broken faith with me by refusing to publish my reply to Mr. Dudley after stating positively that my letter was in type and would be printed.

Yours truly,
HUGH MONTGOMERY.

Burglars produced quite a sensation in this neighborhood last Sunday night. They circulated around in a very lively manner, not less than five residences being entered by the light fingered and light footed gentry.

Their first essay (whether there were several or only one is not known) was at the residence of Mr. Stillman Church where they didn't secure a haul. They next struck Warren Riley's house and once more failed to make connections. After this they visited the home of Mr. Nason but got scared at Mrs. Nason's screams and decamped without plunder. At Mr. Powerses on Lowell street they met with about the same streak of luck, but at Mrs. Calvin Wyman's on Wyman street they got two diamond rings worth $300, six 5-dollar gold pieces, and a silver fob-chain—a fine haul. If the police have an inkling as to who did the stealing they keep it to themselves.

LESSON III, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 19.

Text of the Lesson, John ii, 1-11—Commit Verses, 1-5—Golden Text, John ii, 11—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

After Andrew brought his brother Simon to Jesus we read that Jesus went into Galilee and found Philip, and then that Philip found Nathanael and brought him to Jesus. If the work had thus gone on, each one finding Jesus, or being found of Him, quickly bringing another, how different the world would be today! Why should not every saved soul bring another to Jesus?

1. "And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee."

This was the town of Nathanael (xxi, 2), and it would not be strange if this was his own marriage.

"And the mother of Jesus was there."

"Blessed among women," Elizabeth said, and "Blessed is she that believed" (Luke i, 42-45). But when another on a certain occasion spoke of Mary's blessedness Jesus replied, "Yea, rather blessed are they that hear the Word of God and keep it." Nowhere are we taught to worship or even to think much of Mary except as a highly honored woman. See Jesus only! Worship God!

2. "And both Jesus was called and His disciples to the marriage."

These disciples were probably the five referred to in the previous chapter—Andrew, Simon, Philip, Nathanael and the unnamed one whom we suppose to have been the writer of this gospel. It is always safe for the disciples of Jesus to go where He goes.

3. "And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto Him, They have no wine."

The revised version says, "When the wine failed." Their need is going to draw forth his fullness; their emptiness will give an opportunity to glorify Him. It is even so still, and always so: His strength is made perfect in weakness. He only asks our nothingness.

"Thou art Simon, the son of Jona; thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, a stone."

Thus said Jesus as He looked upon him. If you have been born from above, you, too, are a living stone in the temple, the church, the body of Christ, the new Jerusalem now being builded.

4. "Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come."

There is no unkindness here, for He could not speak unkindly; neither is there any harshness. If we understood their customs better we would better understand their language, but let no Sunday school scholar even for one moment tolerate the thought that Jesus could speak harshly or unkindly to His mother. The last clause of the verse reminds us that He has an hour and a time for everything.

5. "His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it."

His mother evidently understood Him to mean that He would see to it in due time, and therefore instructed the servants accordingly. Pharaoh said unto the Egyptians, "Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you, do." Jacob's wives said unto him, "Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do" (Gen. xli, 55; xxxi, 16). If the question of our lives concerning everything was "What has the Lord said?" and our determination "That only will we do!" how safely we would walk and how successfully we would work!

6. "And there were set there six water pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece."

It is evident from the next verse that these vessels were empty, and thus we are reminded of the kind of vessels which Jesus can use. To be willing to be empty, clean and always ready to the Master's hand is to be where we will be of some use to Him; it is the privilege of every believer to be "a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work" (II Tim. ii, 21).

7. "Jesus saith unto them, Fill the water pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim."

The servants were ready, the order was given and promptly obeyed. Ready and prompt obedience is required of us and ought to be our constant habit. Vessels must receive before they can give; the use of vessels is to receive and give, not to receive only, but to receive in order to give.

8. "And He saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it."

How very soon the vessels, so recently receivers, become givers—and why not? But ask yourself, dear reader, "Am I a giver?" and if not, "Why not?" "Have I received nothing?"

9. "When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was (but the servants which drew the water knew), the ruler of the feast called the bridegroom."

The water had become wine—"He made the water wine (chapte riv, 46); He who, through the vine, had from the days of Noah made water into wine now does it instantly, for He is the vine, and we know that He can do everything.

10. "And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse; but thou hast kept the good wine until now."

Hear this bridegroom getting all the credit for that with which he had nothing to do and Jesus gets not a word. Oh for this spirit which, conscious of the approval of God, is so abundantly satisfied that nothing disturbs.

11. "This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth His glory."

Here is the Spirit's testimony that this was the first of all miracles wrought by Him, thus putting the stamp of untruthfulness upon all records of miracles said to be wrought by Him before this time. The Spirit also testifies that here He manifested forth His glory—the glory of His power, the glory of His grace, the glory of His humility, the glory of serving unseen and unthanked. And yet it was manifest to some—the servants saw it, the disciples saw it, God and angels saw it. Some having eyes see not, while others can say, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

"And His disciples believed on Him."

This was the first mighty work they had seen done by Him, and they were now convinced more fully that He was the Christ, their long promised Messiah. Are you believing in Him because He makes you happy and will take you to heaven when you die, or is it Himself, His great love, His person, His work that captivates and constrains you?

A WISE WOMAN'S COMPLAINT.

She Is No Use for the Housekeeping-in-a-Flat Young Man of the Period.

An elderly country woman, who has chaperoned two charming nieces through the dangers and delights of a gay New York season, claims to have discovered one of the gravest evils menacing modern society, and gave her views at elaborate length the other day. "The ladylike young man is at the bottom of the mischief," she remarked animatedly, "and so long as he is allowed to flourish of course girls can't and won't marry. Who do I mean? Why, that hybrid housekeeping creature.

"Our first encounter with the new fangled specimen was when cards came asking us to tea at Mr. V——'s rooms. I hesitated about accepting, but yielded and went. Still, I felt for the poor fellow's natural perplexities, and bought a nice bag of jumbles, some lump sugar, and took a few extra spoons along to help him out in a tight place.

"Well, bless your heart, when a neat, white capped maid answered the electric bell, and pushing aside long shadow curtains ushered us into an elegant parlor, I began making every apology, being sure we had stumbled into the wrong place. But, no; here came our host, bowing and smiling, begging us to take off our wraps, and excusing himself for preoccupation—just as I have done a thousand times at home—by saying the kettle refused to boil. Well, while he talked to the girls I began looking round for some place to hide those odious cakes and heard the spoons rattling in my pocket.

"With each survey I took that paper bag grew bigger and the silver jingled under the folds of my dress. But the polished mirrors, bowls of roses, embroidered scarfs and charmingly decorated walls were as nothing to a scene over in the left hand corner next the fireplace.

"There sat the tea table, in all its glory, with Mr. V—— hovering round it like a protecting spirit. He had a lady ostensibly presiding, but no old maid could have kept a sharper eye on the tea cups. He discussed the different varieties of tea with warmth, defended the infusion process, gave his reasons for patronizing a particular bakery, and in the meantime handed round bonbons and salted almonds to his half dozen men and women guests. From confectionery the talk drifted to napery, and with a glow of genuine pride our entertainer exhibited a set of exquisite doilies lately added to his linen closet. He advocated drawn work and the outline stitch in white floss as rather superior style at afternoon functions, and then got on the subject of china, which was evidently his hobby.

"Each fragile cup and saucer was dilated upon in turn, the delicacy and beauty of the porcelain naturally leading to a wholesale abuse of servants. Mr. V—— and a man (?) friend sitting near agreed that they never permitted Biddy to lay a finger on the properties of their pantry. They laundered every piece of china and plate personally to insure safe handling, and used only pure linen towels in order to avoid lint. As you may imagine I sat aghast to hear such conversation between two bearded creatures, and was scarcely surprised afterward, when a woman of the party ventured an opinion on the subject of sweeping, to hear both of them summarily suppress her.

"Now, I want to know who our daughters, sisters and nieces are to marry?" continued the wrathful lady. "Certainly not those finicky Miss Nancys; and there are no longer any bachelors, it appears—nice, jolly fellows, who couldn't tell a mop from a range or a broom from a lambrequin, who went buttonless, and with holes in their socks, till some nice girl took compassion on them; who were lonely and needed companionship, helpless and wanted a woman's hand to keep a neat hearth and warm their slippers.

"Since that first afternoon I have been to twenty teas of the same sort in as many different apartments. New York fairly swarms with this new type of humanity, and with each exhibition of his effeminacy I grow more disgusted. My girls are athletic—ride, swim, hunt and use the horizontal bar. Naturally, when their hosts talk bread and butter they become painfully embarrassed, feel out of their element and make absurd mistakes."—New York Sun.

Repelling Fire with a Drum.

A fire of a strange nature appeared in Wales in 1693. According to the most intelligible account concerning it now in existence, it came up from the sea near Harlech. At several places near that place and all over Merionethshire it did much damage, burning hay, houses, barns, etc. A person writing of it said: "The grass over which it moves kills all manner of cattle that feed upon it. But what is most remarkable is that any great noise, such as the beating of a drum or sounding a horn, effectually repels it from any house."—St. Louis Republic.

Not a Lucrative Office.

The pay of the official watchman of the village of Springstille, in Hessen, has not increased in a century. One hundred years ago this valued official received one cent a day for his services, and "Old Heinrich," the present watchman, aged seventy years, receives the same compensation. Truly the pay is not princely, and the American officeholder will wonder how Heinrich manages to live on it after paying the usual assessments to the party.—New York World.

ARMED BUT NOT PROTECTED.

Not Everybody Who Carries a Pistol Is Able to Use It in an Emergency.

"Carry a gun? No, sir!" he spoke vehemently. "Once was enough for me. I carried a pistol once, and that satisfied me for all time.

"I know it's the ambition of the average young man to 'carry a gun.' He feels safer when he is running around nights. He puts his hand on his hip pocket and feels that he is secure. But, my boy, listen to a man who has been there. When the proper time comes he won't be in it at all. If he's in real tough company he won't shoot as quick as the next man, and if he isn't in tough company he is apt to fly off his base and shoot when there is no occasion for it. Then he'll hang or go to the penitentiary for life. He'll have shot some one who was unarmed, and never thought of harming him.

"But that isn't my story, my boy. That's only what my experience has taught me. Now listen to my tale of woe:

"I struck Leadville unarmed. I never had carried a revolver, but somehow I felt that it was a necessity there. So I bought one. Then I was all right. I loaded it carefully, put it in my hip pocket and felt that I could walk the streets in safety. I was armed.

"Well, about 8 p. m. that day—the same day that I had bought that gun, mind you—as I was passing an alley I felt something cold against the side of my head. Pull my gun! No, sir! I threw up my hands as I was ordered to. I wasn't thinking of my gun at all; I was thinking of the one that was pressed against my head and wondering if it would go off. It didn't, but one man held it there while another went through me. He took my watch, my money and my new gun.

"I remember when he found the latter he suggested that it was of no use to me, and I heartily agreed with him. It wasn't of the slightest use to me, and I was willing that he should have it, but I did object to losing my watch and my money.

"I should say, my boy, that it took me fifteen or twenty minutes to get the pallor out of my face and to get over trembling. Then I found that I had some change left and I went in a saloon. There were two men there, and they kept looking at me and laughing, and I am still convinced that one of them had my gun in his pocket.

"That's the only time I ever carried a gun and the only time I was ever 'held up.' Hence my remark that a gun is of no use to the average man. If he gets time to use it it's ten to one that he's in company where it isn't necessary. If he's in company where it is, it's ten to one he won't have time to use it, and an attempt to do so may give murder the color of self defense. The other man will feel justified in using his. I got mine simply for self protection, and it didn't protect worth a cent. It started on a career of crime inside of five hours."—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Gladstone's Correspondence.

Mr. Gladstone, who at one time when in office received thirty thousand letters a year, has always been remarkable for personally attending to his correspondence, and his autograph is, perhaps, more familiar than that of any other English statesman. In every department of state with which he has had anything to do he has left behind him a tradition for order and regularity, and it is said that he perfected the science of getting a maximum of work out of private secretaries.

When in office he kept six sets of pigeon holes constantly going, and he would have all his own letters copied, even those he wrote from the house of commons to the house of lords. He also, of course, in common with most other men in his position, got his secretaries to go through the daily papers and extract such items as it was necessary he should see.—London Tit-Bits.

Works Both Ways.

To honor one's ancestors is an excellent and praiseworthy thing, but pride of ancestry is a very poor basis upon which to build one's whole life. A man who had never done anything for himself was boasting one day in the presence of a self made man of the distinction of his ancestors.

"There is nothing," he said, "like having respect for one's ancestors to keep one out of degenerate ways."

"It is a very good motive," said the self made man, "and you do well to be proud of your ancestors; but I think that my respect for my descendants is about as good a motive."

"Respect for your descendants! What do you mean?"

"Why, you see I want them to be proud of their ancestor!"—Youth's Companion.

Estimating Manuscript.

To estimate the number of words in a manuscript count half a dozen lines on the fourth or fifth page, and multiply the average number of words in a line by the average number of lines on a page, and that product again by the number of the pages in the manuscript. Ordinary typewriter copy on letter size paper will average twelve words to a line. Editors do not care so much to know the exact number of words in a manuscript as how much space it will occupy. Accordingly half lines at the end of paragraphs are counted as full lines.—Cor. Writer.

A DRUMMER'S ROMANCE.

Two Young Lovers Imposed Upon Each Other, but It Ended in Marriage.

Sunday morning several traveling men were discussing the strange and ludicrous things found in the columns of matrimonial advertisements in the papers of that morning. One told this story:

"I have a friend who until a year ago resided in Chicago, but who now lives at Sioux City, whose marriage was brought about by a matrimonial advertisement, but it did not occur in just the way such unions are supposed to. He inserted an advertisement in one of the Chicago papers for the same purpose many do—just for the fun of the thing. He represented himself to be a young lady wishing to correspond with a young gentleman matrimonially inclined. Several young men answered the advertisement, and he derived not a little quiet fun in the deception he was practicing. One of his correspondents wrote a beautiful hand and the letters were models of composition.

"The 'old, old story, ever new,' was repeated in those elegantly written and delicately perfumed letters in a manner that would have won the heart of a princess. My friend half regretted at times that he was not really what he had represented himself to be, for he believed that the author of the letters was a young man whose love any lady might be proud of. At first he laughed at the letters, then he admired them, and later on he was sorry he had carried the deception so far, for he felt that he had interested a heart that was too deep, too pure, too earnest for trifling.

"My friend personated the ideal young lady as nearly as it is possible to do by letter. Finally an exchange of photographs followed. My friend sent the photograph of a young lady of perfect beauty, and received in return that of a handsome young man. My friend waited patiently for the young man to propose a meeting, and marveled much that he did not do so.

"A few strong hints written between the lines had the desired effect, but the correspondent strangely expressed no desire to call at the home of my friend, but named the lobby of a certain theater as the place of meeting. At a certain hour each should appear there wearing a yellow rose for a boutonnier. At length the farce was to be ended, and my friend repaired to the rendezvous, secretly hoping that he would not be recognized. With a sense of guilty trepidation he reached the appointed place. There were several gentlemen there, but none wore a yellow rose.

"Just then he came face to face with a young lady wearing the flower indicated. They looked into each other's eyes while their faces colored up painfully. My friend was nonplussed, but finally stammered, 'Is this Mr. A?' She answered by asking, 'Is this Miss B?' Both confessed their identity, and—well you can guess the rest. Those love letters were not written in vain, and they are as happy today as two cooing doves, and they have several dovelets in the home nest too."—Chicago Herald.

They Waited Until the Parson Left.

In a neighboring town where there is one central church in the village the good old custom of appointing cottage prayer meetings through the week at different houses still prevails. At one house where the neighborhood meeting is usually held there is a piano, and the light minded young folks have contrived to turn the evening sessions for prayer into an occasion for social pastime, after the more devout have gone home, rounding up the evening with a dance. The parson gained some inkling of what was going on, and remained one night after the meeting until 10 o'clock to keep an eye on the lambs of the flock. The young folks outstayed him, however, all burning with impatience, and after he had gone home the giddy strains of the dance struck up and joy was unconfined.—Springfield (Mass.) Homestead.

A Mushroom's Growth.

A mushroom's method of growth and propagation is popularly considered to be a first class mystery. It is not such, however, from the scientific point of view. On the contrary, it is very well understood how the seeds or spores are developed on the under side of the fungus, microscopic and of vast numbers, a single agaric often having as many as 10,000,000. These myrid germs, when they land upon suitable grounds, send forth numerous fine cottonlike threads, which bring nourishment to the spore. Fattening upon the food it gets from the earth in this way the embryo swells into a fleshy kernel, like a knot amid the network of filaments about it. From this kernel the mushroom in all its parts is developed before it shows above the ground.—Washington Star.

The Duke of Fife has about a dozen suits in constant use, and he never wears the same clothes twice the same week. "Guess" for "Think."

It has come to be almost proverbial that the Yankee is known the world over for the use of "I guess" for "I think." "Guess" is by no means a synonym of "think," as it is used in this sense. While this error is more common in conversation it is often to be noticed in print.—Cor. Writer.

The Drunk Law.

The bill relating to the punishment of drunkards which has passed the House of Representatives should become a law. Fining a man for getting drunk never deterred a man from getting drunk again, and in many cases simply inflicts a hardship upon his wife and family. Under the proposed law a man arrested for drunkenness must be kept until sober, and he may then file a declaration that he has not been arrested for drunkenness twice before for 12 months, and request to be released. The officer receiving the statement may then release the prisoner from custody if he believes the story to be true, or may refer it to the probation officer, who shall make inquiries and report upon the truth or falsity of the statement. Those who lie about the matter and those who have been twice convicted of drunkenness and again come before the court may be punished by imprisonment in jail or reformatory. In short, the drunkard and not his money is to be dealt with if the bill becomes a law. This should meet hearty approval and be given a trial. If the fine system does not avail there is but little risk in the step.—Boston News.

Privacy of Millionaires.

The majority of the very rich men live in comparative simplicity. I was chatting with one the other day—a man whose estate, to use the colloquialism of the bank, would probably "cut up" not less than $5,000,000, and he asserted that almost all of the busy men who had accumulated enormous fortunes were so exhausted by the effort which was required to get possession of so great an amount that in their private life they courted nothing but repose.

The strain of social entertainment on a large scale is very great, and there are few men who are equal to it unless they give up entirely their business relations. It is a marvel to many business men how Cornelius Vanderbilt, for instance, can attend as steadily and faithfully as he does to the business of the New York Central railway system, and to the very great demands made upon him to secure a satisfactory reinvestment of his income, and yet devote so much time as he does to social entertainment.

The only explanation which occurs to busy men is that Mr. Vanderbilt is still young, and that he finds some recreation in giving elaborate dinners and in dancing until the small hours of the morning. He will not continue this, however, very long. As the years weigh upon him and the care of his enormous estate increases he will be compelled either to abandon active daily business or to give up his social recreation.—New York Cor. Philadelphia Press.

A Far Seeing Business Man.

I got aboard the cars at a small station in the interior of Pennsylvania, and after I had settled myself comfortably in the seat I noticed a man immediately in front of me whom I had seen in the town where I got on the train. Presently a well dressed, studious looking young man advanced from the rear of the car and took the seat with the man in front of me.

"Excuse me," said the young man; "I am a stranger to you, but I have some notion of locating in L——" (naming the town he had just left), "and I thought perhaps you could give me some information about the place."

"Are you a lawyer?" asked the other.

"No, I am a physician," replied the young man.

"Is that so? Well, sir, I'm glad to hear it. Go right ahead and hang out your shingle, and I'll start up there too. I'm not a resident of L——, and know nothing about the place except what I learned while looking around there today, but if you locate there I'll start up my business within a week."

"May I inquire what your business is?" asked the young man.

"Oh, certainly; I'm in the tombstone business."—Toledo Blade.

Ancient Chimney and Fireplace.

The first chimney was built in a house in the Fourteenth century. It was the fireplace of today, with scarcely a variation. In some cases the halls and lodges of the great lords were provided with a banqueting room in which one whole end of the apartment was taken up by the chimney. This was largely for the purpose of cooking, and a whole ox was often roasted in sight of the table on which it was later served. Distant portions of the room were cold, but, as the people were warriors and roughened in fiber by constant exposure, they were supposed to get along with an occasional turn in the warm end of the room while the feast was preparing.

But if a pilgrim, a palmer, a man who had been to the Holy Land, should come along, he was a favored guest and was allowed to sit in the place of honor at the side of the great fireplace and to regale himself on the choicest of the viands and the best of wine, repaying the host for the entertainment later by singing or chanting an account of his experiences in the land of the Saracens.—Chicago Herald.

An Emperor's Opinion.

In Germany the telegraphs are the property of the government. The proprietors of a large number of daily newspapers, believing that they were required to pay too high a charge for their telegraphic messages, petitioned the government for a decrease of the press rates. The petition was referred to the Emperor William. He considered it a few moments, and then wrote upon the margin: "The present rate is not too high. The useless dispatches that the newspapers publish every day prove this superabundantly." — San Francisco Argonaut.

French Theaters.

Almost everywhere in France the principal theatre of the town belongs to the municipal council, which partly recoups itself for the capital sunk by the rents charged to the temporary lessees. The object, however, of a French town council is not to make a profit out of its theater business, but to provide the ratepayers with a handsome, commodious building where they can go to see a play without fear of being stifled, and which they can point out to strangers with some feeling of civic pride.—Exchange.

A Paradox.

Probably every reader has quoted the proverb "There is an exception to every rule" several hundred thousand times during his or her life, and never thought that the proverb contradicted itself. For, clearly, if there is an exception to every rule there is an exception to this proverb. Therefore there is a rule without an exception.—New York Tribune.

It is the best medicine in the world for difficulties of the kidneys, liver and bowels.—A. J. Gifford, Lowell, Mass.

LIQUOR LAWS.

At the request of many I give the analysis of the liquor law of this State. First, by way of introduction, let me say, it is said by some, "I don't like his methods." My method is to bring comfort to the drunkard's home so far as I am able, by feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and doing what I can to heal the wounds that have been made by drunkards, and when I have found out where they have got their liquor illegally I have done my utmost to have the rumseller punished for the glaring and open violations of the law. In his last ruling given June 29 commenting on the cases brought before him, Judge Converse said: "Mr. Montgomery has not done or said anything unbecoming a minister of the Gospel or a Christian gentleman," and with but one exception this has been true of every Judge that I have appeared before for the last thirty-two years, and in this exception the court afterwards saw his error and took it back and became my warm friend.

My methods for the last two years in Woburn have been to help the City Authorities in a fair, unbiased enforcement of the liquor laws and when we got defeated last fall and the city went for license many men who believed in high licenses said to me, Now let these men have a license and make them live up to it. So when the Mayor and Board of Aldermen took their oath of office I called their attention through my pulpit and the press to the provisions of the license law. In addition to this I had the privilege of meeting some of the Aldermen and explaining it to them personally. Before any licenses were granted I asked the Aldermen to give us a hearing and they did so. At that meeting we had a large number of representative men. Every section of the law relating to licenses was carefully explained and an earnest protest was made to granting a license to any criminal we felt according to the spirit and letter of the law was not qualified to receive one. That our request was treated with contempt is evident in the Kerrigan case. He plead guilty on the 28th day of February, 1891, of keeping a common nuisance and paid his fine. In less than a month from that date they voted to give him a victuallers license which would qualify him to receive a liquor license. At the same meeting we earnestly exhorted the liquor dealers not to take out a license unless they intend to live strictly according to the spirit and letter of the law. We turned to the Aldermen and said we should expect them to ridgidly enforce the law. We then appealed to the liquor dealers and said to them if the city officials fail to do this we shall. For we shall put men in to watch you just as soon as you receive your license. I make this statement so that the public may know my methods in regard to these liquor cases and if any of my critics will show me a better way of dealing with it I will be glad to follow them.

The very first sentence of the law is as follows: No person shall sell or expose for sale spiritous or intoxicating liquors, except as authorized in this chapter." Chap. 100, Sec. 1.

The matter of granting licenses is entirely in the hands of the Aldermen.

A "Yes" vote gives the power to license or not as they see fit. The Public Statutes chapter 102, section 24, say: "Nothing contained in the chapter shall be construed to require the Mayor and Aldermen or Selectmen to grant either of the licenses aforesaid (that is innholders and common victualler) when in their opinion the public good does not require it."

Chapter 323, Acts of 1887, Section 8, says: "the Mayor and Aldermen or the Selectmen may at any time refuse to issue a license to a person whom they deem unfit to receive the same. But nothing herein shall be so construed as to compel said Mayor and Aldermen or Selectmen to grant licenses."

Let us see how the law restricts the sale of intoxicating liquors by dividing the licenses into six classes; First, the innholders and victuallers license which is to accommodate strangers and travellers only. In the Massachusetts reports Vol. 135, Page 536. His Honor Judge Allen says, "A person licensed as a common victualler to sell intoxicating liquors to be drank on the premises may be convicted of keeping a public bar within the Public Statutes Chapter 100, Section 9, Clause 5, if he sells and delivers not in connection with food, intoxicating liquors, indiscriminately to such persons as may call for them." Now let us see how this is guarded. Public Statutes Chapter 102, Section 8, "No common victuallers license shall be granted or issued to any person unless at the time of making application therefore he has upon his premises the necessary implements and facilities for cooking, preparing, and serving food for strangers and travellers." So this power lies in the hands of the Mayor alone as was seen in the case of Martin and Rafferty when he was brought before the Supreme Court to compel him to grant a victuallers license. The court ruled that he could not be compelled.

In the case tried it was clearly shown that no one outside of the hotel keeper was qualified to receive a license.

Mass. Reports, Vol. 140, Page 289. Commonwealth vs. Patrick Hagan says, "What does guest mean? What does the word imply? A guest is first, one who comes from a distance and is entertained; secondly, a visitor entertained. Who is the guest of an Inn? Suppose people go to this house, and the defendant says, 'I cannot supply you unless you sit down and eat some cold tongue, or beef or some salt fish; if you will eat that, then I will let you have some liquor.' Does this make them guests, in the common acceptance of the word? If they are not guests, he can no more sell them liquor, under this evasion (if it is an evasion) . . . . . If the real transaction was to sell liquor, an attempt to disguise it is no defense." So the Court instructed the Jury to find the man guilty, if they found these men were not guests. To this the defendant took exceptions and carried it to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court overruled the exceptions.

Now let me call your attention to Chapter 102, Section 2. "A Mayor, Aldermen or Selectmen may refuse to sign a license to a person who in his opinion has not complied with the provisions of this chapter; and any such officer who signs a license granted contrary to the provisions of the chapter shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50." Section 6 of the same Chapter says, "Every common victualler shall be at all times furnished with suitable food for strangers and travellers." Section 11 "When in the opinion of the Mayor and Aldermen of a city or the Selectmen of a town a person holding a license as an innholder or common victualer ceases to be engaged in the business he is licensed to pursue, or fails to maintain upon his premises, the implements and facilities required by this chapter, they shall immediately revoke his license."

I ask has this been done? Does not every intelligent and thinking man know that the law is a roaring farce? I am told by good authority that in years passed the rumsellers have gone to stove shops and hired second hand stoves without lining or grates to be set up in their shops for a few weeks while their application for a victualer's license was pending and after they got their licenses the stoves ware removed.

Chapter 100, Section 10, 4th class. "To sell liquors of any kind not to be drank on the premises." This gives an opportunity to all who wish liquors in their homes the same as they would have tea and coffee. Both the spirit and the letter of the law show that the design of the law was to break up the tippling shop. The law nowhere gives a man the authority to sell liquors to be drank on the premises except accompanied by food. Lawyers have taken exceptions to Judge's rulings on this point in every possible form and every time without fail the Supreme Court has overruled their exceptions.

You will see in Chapter 100, Section 13 "that no license shall be issued until the license fee has been paid to the Treasurer of the city or town by which it is to issued and until he has received a satisfactory bond payable to him as such Treasurer in the sum of one thousand dollors, signed by the licensee and sufficient surety. No bond given under the provision of this said chapter shall be accepted or approved until each surety has made and subscribed a sworn statement that he is worth not less than two thousand dollars, over and above all liabilities and indebtedness." Now any violation of his licenses makes his license void. Some of the violations are as follows: Opening a back door, a screen at the window, selling to a man that has been supported in a whole or a part by public charity within a year, selling to a common drunkard knowing him to be such, selling to miners or allowing them to loiter on his premises selling impure liquors, or making sales before six in the morning or after eleven at night.

Chapter 100, Section 43. It says in relation to the provisions of the enforcement of the liquor laws calling our attention to the various officers in cities and towns "The several officers afore said shall enforce or cause to be enforced, the penalties provided by law against every person guilty of violation of any law in relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors of which they can obtain reasonable truth." I ask has this been done? When we ask for these laws to be enforced the cry comes these men have paid their money for the privilege of selling liquor and this creates a great sympathy for them. It must be remembered that these men were not asked to take out a license, neither are they under any obligations to do it, they do it of their own free will and at their own peril and they should be compelled to respect their own law for it must be remembered distinctly that they prefer this to prohibition. But some say I am a crank on this law; if so the Supreme Judges of the United States are cranks as the following statements will clearly show:

The U. S. Supreme Court has said in the case: Stone vs. Mississippi. "No Legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants." Again the Supreme Court has said in the case of California vs. Christiansen. "The Statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributed to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source." Again it says in the case in Kansas in more emphatic language that the saloon is the mother of nearly all crime

The Hon. Lot M. M. Morrill said, "The drink traffic is the giant crime of crimes against humanity."

The Hon. Richard Cobden said, "Every day experience tends more and more to confirm me in my opinion, that the temperance cause lies at the foundation of all social and political form."

We could fill pages with similar quotations from leaders in all lands and in almost all generations. These utterances come from men of science, of letter's and jurisprudence. In a word it is the universal barrier to all that is good. HUGH MONTGOMERY.

Increasing Use of Rubber Tires.

The application of rubber to wheel tires has proved a great boon to bicyclists, and the increase in this branch of industry is remarkable. There are 100,000 bicycles made every year in this country, and 40,000 more are imported. As all these have tires of the best rubber, it can be seen that a good percentage of the world's supply is absorbed in this way. Each tire weighs on an average between three and four pounds, and this, together with renewals, involves a yearly consumption of not far from 1,000,000 pounds.

The solid tire was first used, but the cushion and the pneumatic are now the popular forms. Each of these, however, is being further modified and improved, and the comfort of bicycle riding is being daily increased. The cushion tire is not liable to puncture, and takes the jar well, but its weak point at present is its liability to crack at the sides in the interior. The pneumatic consists of a rubber tube jacketed in a stout canvas sack, which prevents its being burst from overinflation and other accidents. The whole is covered with a larger incasing tube of rubber.

The canvas sack is cemented to the outer rubber tubing, and the interior is inflated by an air valve. This form of tire, which is not yet perfected, has the advantage of being easily repaired by the rider in a few minutes by the road side. The repairing outfit consists of a hidden pressure tube filled with quick drying solution, rubber for patches, and a supply of canvas. These adaptations of rubber enable the rider to travel long distances day after day, with but little ill effect from the concussion which once affected so materially the health and comfort of the bicyclist.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Teasing a Lion.

In a field at Lati, a village about three miles distant from Prabhas Patan, a lion, the largest ever seen in those parts, made its appearance one morning. The villagers of Lati and the police from Prabhas Patan, on hearing this, went in the direction of the field. Among the lot was a young Rubari, who told the people that the lion was his mama (uncle), and had come on a visit to him only. Saying so, the man advanced, and, standing at a distance of some fifteen or twenty paces from the animal, threw a stone at him, notwithstanding the dissuasions of the villagers. This the lion did not mind, and quietly lay stretched on the ground at its full length.

Encouraged by this the man threw another stone. This also the lion did not mind. On his throwing the third stone the lion gave a terrible roar, at which the villagers, including the nephew, took to their heels. At a bound the lion pounced upon the man, who, being too near him, could not clear away as the others did, and, inflicting only a slight injury on him with his paw, he hurried away to a cotton field, where a large number of women and children were picking cotton. He passed by some children who were taking their food, and rolling awhile on a large cotton heap, majestically stalked out of the field and disappeared in the Gir forest.

The injured man expired the same evening about 8 o'clock. The villagers of Lati, Kadver and Harnosha had all assembled, but no one dared to approach the lion.—Kathiawar Times.

Furniture on the Installment Plan.

There is no business in which credit is so universal now as the retail furniture trade. The time payment plan has, of course, led up to the present condition of affairs, but it has also increased the sales of furniture far more rapidly even than the city has grown. A few years ago young married couples had to save for a considerable period before they could go to housekeeping but now it is quite usual for earners of small wages to buy and furnish a house on time and then secure a mistress for it.

The sales of furniture on the installment plan are now very large, amounting to many hundred thousands a year, but the bad debts or seizure of furniture are very rare. Mechanics in steady work are the best pay as a rule, and if they get a little behind in winter they pick it up quickly in the spring and are never behind in summer. Colored people are also good pay. Actual losses on trades of this kind are very rare in deed, and in about 95 per cent. the bargain is carried out and the last in stallment met on or before maturity.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

At the Theater in Tokio.

At church, the theater and other assemblies the Japanese take off their shoes. "At the large theater in Trukiji, Tokio," says a correspondent, "the rush for shoes is sometimes tremendous. Imagine 2,000 people after a matinee crowding and elbowing and pushing to get at their shoes, so as not to be late for their supper! Further, imagine what anxieties and distress of mind the attendants must undergo who have in charge the task of getting the multitude properly shod. The famous problem propounded by Carlyle in the opening chapter of 'Past and Present' of 'getting the thousands of shirts on the thousands of backs' doesn't offer more difficulties."

One of the causes that leads us to misfortune is that we live according to the example of others.

THE LADY AND THE MIRROR.

Perplexity of a Tired Shopper While Trying to Dodge Her Reflection.

Many jokes—good, bad and indifferent—have been poked at the ladies for their devotion to shopping. Some one once said that a woman has been known to forget her own name while engaged in the fascinating pastime, and the statement has found many believers, always, of course, among the sterner sex. Whether all the ladies are equally oblivious to everything is by no means certain, but a happening in a large down town store may be taken as having some bearing on the subject.

The store, which is one of the finest in the city, has a large mirror completely covering the rear wall, serving the double purpose of ornamentation and protection by enabling the floor-walkers to watch the ever moving crowds. The lady had been examining and pricing fabrics until her brain was in a whirl, moving from one counter to another, and all the while gradually approaching the rear of the store. At the last counter, after seeing everything that was to be seen, she heaved a sigh of regret and bethought herself of leaving.

And just here the fun occurred. Her mind was busy with the problem of whether shrimp pink or pea green would be a match for her complexion providing she could purchase either, and she was not aware of her proximity to the rear. Rather, she had an idea that she was near the front, and that the large and magnificent mirror was the door. She approached it, and thinking she saw some one coming toward her stepped to one side. Her reflection, of course, did the same. She stepped back. Ditto the reflection. Then she got angry.

"Excuse me," she said in the clear, cutting tones peculiar to her sex when they wish to be sarcastic, "are you so fond of dancing that you must indulge in it here? If you let me pass I'll be obliged."

No answer.

"Well," said the now thoroughly aroused woman, "I'm going out, so you'd better stand aside."

Suiting the action to the word, she took one—two—three steps, and landed up against the mirror. A little scream, a blushing woman hurriedly going in the right direction this time, a general titter from the customers and clerks, and the comedy was over.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

An Estimate of England's Future King.

To American eyes, especially those through which I look, Albert Edward occupies a very unique position. His strength is felt everywhere, and in relation to everything. When he becomes king he will have no more power than now, except the ability to sign papers and appoint a few friends to office. If he has been merely a leader in social life, he has managed to impress himself so well upon his people that there is not a man nor woman in England who would not be glad to see him the ruler. That is saying much for one who has been surrounded with great temptations from childhood, and who had no political power to endow him with heavy responsibilities.

His very position forced him for the moment to take upon himself the lighter obligations of life and meet his people on the field instead of viewing them from the throne. He could only weigh himself and be weighed outside of official life. Yet he rose above that position, step by step, until he made his influence felt all over the kingdom by means of the knowledge he gained by personal contact with the world in almost every walk of life. If this does not evidence a strong man, then what does?—Frank Burr in Lippincott's.

People Buy More Flowers.

"One of the most encouraging things I see," said the confirmed optimist, "is that the dwellers in great cities are coming to regard flowers as a necessity and not merely a luxury. Until a year or two ago few flowers were grown in winter, and many of these withered in windows, as the florist was obliged to charge great sums for them. Now everybody buys flowers, and even those who deny themselves the delight of purchasing have the pleasure of seeing them offered in the streets."

"It always hurt me so in those old days," said a gentle voice in the optimist's audience, "to think, when I bought a bunch of roses, that I was paying for at least one other bunch which had faded unsold. Now that so many flowers are bought, very few

WHY SUCH HASTE.

The Governor's Council are acting queerly this summer. For example: Why should the appointment of Col. Coveney for Gas Commissioner have been so promptly confirmed while that of Mr. Smith for Railroad Commissioner was as promptly rejected? As a Gas Commissioner Hon. A. B. Coffin has shown himself a true servant of the people of this Commonwealth and for a Republican Council to make such haste to get a member of their own party off from the Board by accepting a rank Bourbon in place of him was unseemly to say the least.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican State Committee at a meeting held at Republican Headquarters on School street, Boston, last Wednesday, voted to hold the State Convention in Tremont Temple, Boston, on Sept. 16. Congressman Henry Cabot Lodge was unanimously chosen to be President of the Convention, and Hon. Francis W. Rockwell of Pittsfield, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions.

COUNTY TREASURER.

The term of County Treasurer Hayden of the Somerville Journal will expire this year and it is fair to presume he will decline a re-election. He cannot be oblivious to the fact that there is a strong undercurrent of opposition running against him, and being sensible of its existence he will doubtless conclude that "discretion is the better part of valor" and, when the time comes for it, step down and out.

WHAT IS IT FOR?

We have read over quite carefully the declared "objects" of the Republican Editors Club and yet are constrained to ask, what is it for?

The meeting held at the Parker House last Wednesday to perfect its organization was not a very large or enthusiastic one according to all accounts.

☞ The Worcester Gazette, a leading and influential newspaper, sets the seal of its condemnation on the efforts of Major Merrill and other crotchety brained people to organize a Republican Editors Club in this State with a view of making it a tail to the State Committee kite, or an annex to something or other. It handles the scheme to manufacture ideas for and tongue-tie the Editors without gloves.

☞ In about a month from now the Boston Journal, that staunch old organ of New England Republicanism, will change its form from a "blanket sheet" to the modern style of make-up and as many pages as there may be a public demand for. The Journal always keeps step to the march of modern improvement.

☞ It is gratifying to be informed on reliable authority that the new morning paper of Boston, the News, is forging right along at a winning gait. It is a staunch, clean-cut, wideawake Republican daily—the best one in Boston by all odds.

☞ It is very evident that the Peabody Press takes no stock in the attempt of a few persons to organize a Republican Editors Club. The Press is too bright a paper and has too much good sense to favor such folly.

— Mr. William H. Mathews, the Senior of the Woburn letter carriers, will represent his official associates at the Letter Carriers National Convention in August.

— The alarm between 12 and 1 Tuesday morning was for a fire at O'Rouke's pool room corner of Main street and Lake Avenue. It got well riddled this time.

— A pair of Nichols's ice-cart horses got on their metal the other day and skedaddled. Mr. Arthur Ellis got the breaks on in a hurry and put a sudden period to their flight.

— Mr. James Skinner has been chosen Chairman of the Board of Sewerage Commissioners, and Mr. Nathaniel S. Watson has been elected Clerk of the same.

— There was a pleasant mid-summer party at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Andrus's at Central Square last Wednesday evening. All hands passed a happy evening.

— Mr. John Henry Cass, Mann's Block, 502 Main street, keeps a fine stock of pictures and picture frames for sale, and manufactures the latter to order with neatness and despatch.

— Mr. J. Howard Nason and wife have returned from the State of Maine and are once more comfortably settled in their Main street home. Mr. Nason is engaged in the insurance business.

— Mr. Mark C. Felch has bought the "Cash Market" in Dow Block of Mr. Sylvester and will continue the business there. He has a plenty of capital and will run a firstclass market.

— Rev. Mr. Parker will preach his final sermon before vacation next Sunday. He proposes to pass the month of August chiefly at home in driving around the country, to the beaches, etc.

— Editor W. F. Kenney's son William Peter is only a little more than 10 days old but father and mother are in perfect accord on the point that William Peter is a bouncer and a beauty. No doubt of it.

— Jones's barges conveyed a big party of the employees of P. Calnan & Son, shoe stock manufacturers, to Revere Beach last Friday for their annual picnic. They had a glorious good time.

— Mrs. Mary W. Poole and sister, Miss C. A. Sawyer, returned this week from a three weeks visit with their sister, Mrs. Collins, at Rocky Hill, Amesbury, which they enjoyed very much indeed.

— Miss Alice O'Brien, the accomplished music teacher of Church Ave., gave her pupils an icecream and cake reception last Friday evening. Besides a nice treat there was fine piano music, and a general good time.

— An esteemed contemporary tells a pathetic story of a fruitless search for soup on the far side of Horn Pond by a party of luckless chaps of this place the other day. The yarn might have been touching had it been better told.

— We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend a meeting at the Parker House, Boston, last Wednesday, to help organize a Republican Editors Club. We were conspicuous by our absence. Thanks for the invite, all the same.

— Mrs. F. H. Tarbell and her bright little daughter Miss Angie, whose home is on West Madison street, Chicago, are visiting their mother and grandmother, Mrs. Mary E. Sweetser, at 42 Union street, and having a royal good time.

— The Baptist Christian Endeavor Society have elected the following officers: President, Thomas A. McLean; Vice President, Edward E. Wier; Secretary, William Merrill; Treasurer William Brown; Recorder, Mrs. Asa Sheldon.

— Rev. Louis Albert Banks, DD., well known as an earnest reformer and whose sermons on the iniquities of the "sweating traffic" have attracted such widespread attention, will preach at the Methodist church on Sunday evening next at 7 o'clock.

— Mr. C. R. Fish, ex-Supt. of the Woburn Electric Light Co., is safely installed in a responsible and lucrative situation in an electric establishment in Boston. He still resides here where he was very popular with the patrons of the Woburn E. L. Co.

— Mr. John W. Francis, the Public Library stand-by, is taking his vacation chiefly at home. Possibly he may drop down to Kittery P'int, the old boyhood stamping ground, for a day or so, but largely he will not wander out of sight of the Library towers.

— Piles and piles of people visit every evening Boston's biggest summer show, Paine's "The Last Days of Pompeii," and everyone is delighted with it. Many Woburn people have been in to see this new spectacular exhibition and they speak in the highest terms of it.

— Master Fred Davis, son of Ald. Davis of Ward 1, thinks the JOURNAL's knowledge of horseflesh must be exceedingly limited or else it wouldn't have called Master Len Fowle's roadster a "piebald mare" when everybody knows that it is an Indian pony. We stand corrected.

— Mr. Thomas J. Feeney of the Boston Herald Reportorial Staff will probably take his summer outing at Lubec, a quiet and secluded village on the coast of Maine, near which the sun makes his regular morning bow to the public according to popular belief of the outside world.

— Why don't the clothing and dry goods dealers resume the anti-4th-of-July habit of closing their stores on Monday evenings as well as Wednesday and Friday? Their salesmen need a little breathing spell about Monday evening and are waiting for the proprietors so speak out.

— Editor W. F. Kenney of the Boston Globe will go to Hampton Beach next week for a short visit introductory to going to the White Mts., where he proposes to tarry some time. He has been putting in some hard work on the Globe of late and needs the rest which he expects to find in the mountains.

— Mr. John Flynn of Cambridge is a well known engineer in that section and a very competent one. His directions for preserving steam boilers from rusting are valuable and if followed would assure a material saving of money in the use of them. He knows steam and steam boilers from one end to the other.

— All the City Press needs to make it happy is a larger variety of industries carried on in Woburn, and something done to the weather-vane on the Rumford school building in the way of reforming its habits as a wind indicator. These are modest demands and the City Council ought to do something about it.

— The sewing classes of the Woburn Industrial School will give an exhibition of their work at the Academy on Warren street some day early in August, and it will doubtless attract a large number of spectators. It cannot but prove an interesting exhibition and valuable as showing the progress made by the girls in needlework.

— We don't know which "local contemporary" our good friend and intelligent correspondent "Well-wisher of the Journal" alludes to in his communication in this paper, but if he means that pestiferous Democratic organ in Hart's block he couldn't have hit the nail squarer on the head if he had tried a month of Sundays.

— Mr. Haggerty don't quite agree with Mr. Ronco in some of his accounts of speed attained in bicycle outings. He and that gentleman seem to view some things from different standpoints, or else some memories about here are quite faulty, or some tongues not careful enough in expressing things. At least, that is Mr Haggerty's idea of it.

— Charles Cummings has left of his car-load of fine Canada horses a pair of the best and handsomest coach animals that can be scared up in this section of country. Besides this splendid span of matched high-steppers Mr. Cummings has several draft and road horses left which can be bought at a bargain. His stables are at No. 35 Cambridge street.

— Auctioneer Gregory will sell at 2 o'clock on next Friday, July 31, the entire stock in trade, shop fixtures, etc., of William Granfield, butcher, No. 154 Main street corner of Porter, the particulars of which are given in Gregory's advertisement in our business columns, to which especial attention is called. The sale will be positive and in every case the highest bidder will take the goods.

— There was a little celebration of the 75th anniversary of Rev. Dr. March's birthday at Supt. F. B. Richardson's residence on Montvale Ave. last Tuesday. It was a modest affair, but a good dinner, prepared for the occasion, was enjoyed by the Doctor, Dea. Gage, and family, the Richardsons etc., which was accompanied by agreeable friendly intercourse.

— A Woburn man was weighed at the Winchester railroad station on one of those cent-in-the-slot balances and kicked the beam at 137 pounds; when he got down to Prospect Hill in Somerville he tried it again and weighed 124; when he got back home he weighed himself once more on a scale that had just been sealed by Lynch, and was correct, and tipped the beam at 116! So much for some kinds of steelyards.

— Hot or cold, Mrs. Jennings proposes to attend strictly to business during the vacation season and stand as an unerring guide, as she has for years past, to direct the best of domestic help where to find the best places to work—in other words, to conduct the most reliable Intelligence Office in the country, and at the same time fill Young America with joy and gladness by selling just such things as they most ardently long for.

— The Woburn druggists are watched so close that they have closed up their stores on Sunday, hoping by this extreme step to turn popular sentiment against those who are seeking to enforce the law.—Somerville Citizen. That's all in your eye, Cap. Our druggists shut up on the 12th, but finding out that nobody cared anything about it one way or the other they opened up again on the 19th and went on as usual.

— Mrs. W. D. Wright has gone to Waterville, Me., to visit her mother and aunt, the former 95 years old and the latter 97. At the close of her visit there and at other points in the Pine Tree State, of which she is a native, Mrs. Wright will join her husband at Titusville, Pa., where he has been engaged in the manufacture of shoe stock for several months, and where it is probable Mr. and Mrs. Wright will make their future home.

— Mrs. Fogg, head of the millinery establishment in Dodge's block, will leave for Kennebunkport about Aug. 1, and remain there during the balance of the summer. Quaint old Kennebunkport is one of the most delightful seaside resorts in New England. It is patronized largely by literary people, artists, and folks of that ilk, a large number of whom occupy cottages on its fair beaches every vacation season and would not exchange them for any others.

— The druggists had their stores open last Sunday just as though nothing had been said. The better way for them to do would be to accept the advice of Mayor Bean and manage to make their Sunday trade a little less open, obtrusive and distasteful to right minded people—that is, if they have resolved to keep open on Sundays at all. The Mayor's head was quite level on the subject and the druggists wouldn't lose any friends by acting on his suggestions.

— At a meeting of the Commission appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court of this State to apportion the sum to be assessed on the different towns and cities which are to reap the benefits of the Metropolitan Sewer held in the Green Room of the State House on last Tuesday Judge Charles D. Adams, City Solicitor, represented Woburn's interests and will look out for them as the business proceeds. He is a good man to have the charge of such interests.

— A tug-of-war will come off on Aug. 1, between the Hudson and Highland Clubs for $50. It will be the culmination of a long and hot wordy contest between those famous athletic organizations and will probably settle for some time to come the question of superior skill, strength, agility and sand between them. Doubtless the event will attract large crowds of people by whom intense interest will be taken in the struggle as both Clubs are immensely popular with the public.

— Mr. Gordon Parker, a brother of Mr. Charles S. Parker and of John L. Parker, formerly owner of THE JOURNAL, a regularly educated pharmacist, has bought of Mr. D. W. Kelley, the new drugstore in Mechanic Block and will hereafter carry it on. He was some years ago a resident of Woburn but for 13 years has been in the apothecary business at Brockton. Mr. F. G. Sutherland, an experienced and careful druggist who has been in the employ of Mr. Kelley, will continue with Mr. Parker. Success to all hands!

— One of the best temperance lectures, or sermons, that a Woburn public have had the privilege of listening to for a long while was that delivered by Rev. Dr. March at the First Congregational Lecture Room last Sunday evening. Christ's first miracle, the turning of water into wine at the marriage in Cana of Galilee, which was also the Sunday School lesson of that day, was the text on which a very interesting and solid discourse on the all-important subject of temperance was based. There was no rant or buncomb or egotism or other unseemly feature about it, but the words and ideas of the Doctor were calculated to take right hold of the understanding and conscience and do good individually and collectively. More people ought to have heard this sermon that its benefits might have been more widely diffused.

— Mr. Levi W. Cooper of Union street, this city, has accepted an invitation from the Management of the Yarmouth Steamship Company to take a trip to Nova Scotia and will set sail for that far-away Down East region next Tuesday on either the "Boston" or "Yarmouth," both ocean palaces sailed by true gentlemen from the Captain down to the scullion. From Boston to Nova Scotia in either of those splendid steamers is one of the most delightful sea trips that can anywhere be found on the Atlantic Coast. Mr. Cooper anticipates a charming voyage and visit. He expects to be gone 10 days and on his return to go to Goose Rocks, Kennebunkport, Me., a very popular seaside resort.

— We hope never to witness a wilder commotion than that which Sam Lewis and Lemuel Frond created on Church Avenue last Wednesday. By their mysterious conduct they got Mr. Waterman Brown, two policemen, and nearly a dozen women so wrought up that some of the cooler heads didn't know but that the militia would have to be called out. The crowd knew absolutely that Sam and Lem were burglars spying out the chances for a big break into a tenantless house near by; policemen were summoned; the whole neighborhood thrown into a ferment; and while it was all going on the young men, who were on fun bent only, slipped away, leaving Mr. Brown and his excited auditors in a worse state than ever. It was a big scare.

— Mr. Freeman A. Loring, the well known Winchester tanner and recent purchaser of the large Bryant & King leather establishment in this city, through the efforts and agency of Mr. Gilman F. Jones and Mr. Benjamin Hinckley, a couple of gentlemen who, in an unostentious way, have done not a little to increase the population and business of Woburn, has just sold 80 acres of land lying between the Old Line and the Woburn Loop of the B. & L. Div. of the B. & M. Railroad, and between Cross and Swanton streets, to a syndicate of Boston gentlemen who will cut the tract up into residence lots, and have already commenced operations on that line. It is a fine piece of real estate that has been very much improved by Mr. Loring's Superintendent for many years, Mr. John P. Delaney, and will make residence property as desirable as any in Winchester or Woburn. We are informed that Mr. Loring made a handsome spec in the purchase and sale of this large tract of real estate, and it is thought by good judges that the syndicate who now own it will also clear big money on it. Mr. Loring is a permanent guest of the Vendome, Boston, while his wife is traveling in Europe.

— Up to date City Clerk D. F. Moreland hasn't even cast a longing eye towards outing resorts either by sea, in grove, or on mountain-top. He is attending strictly to his official duties which is one of the best methods that can be taken to secure public approval and keep the office from passing into other hands. Clerk of Common Council Lounsbury is to be seen at the Municipal Building every day in the week, Sundays excepted, where he continuously welcomes the visitors who call, which also is worthy of warm public approval. Water Registrar Barrett slips down to the beach once in a while just to "rest his weary bones," as the poet so felicitously puts it, but the major portion of his working hours is devoted to filling out water receipts for the next half year. The Assessors Room echoes to the gentle footfall and hushed vocal notes of Commodore John Ferguson, Col. W. T. Grammer and Auctioneer E. Prior (all of them Principal Assessors) during the quiet hours of the day as they go about finishing up the odds and ends of the excellent job of listing property and laying the tax of 1891, now about through with. Miss Wyman, Assistant City Treasurer, may be seen during business hours blithly handing out checks, bank notes and coin to the city's creditors, as calm and peaceful as the close of a summer day—always cordial and obliging and anxious to please—looking all the while as though she wished there were a great deal more of the checks, bank notes and coin—and just more than delightfully cool on the hottest day. And Mrs. Phillips, the accomplished Assistant City Collector—she too is at her post of duty enjoying her seabreezes and mountain scenery at second hand or with the aid of a vivid imagination, and appears contented and happy. Indeed, the duties of her office do not permit any other condition of mind and heart. The heads of these Departments are more or less absorbed in the active duties of life at the present time and decline to say whether they seriously contemplate a vacation outing or not. Chief McIntosh don't trouble his head much about summer vacations. He has his hands full of business which demands constant attention and the Chief is not the kind of an officer to neglect his duties. Officer McDermott and the rest of the force will take their turns at a fortnight's play, while Lock-up Keeper Connolly, Probation Officer Simonds, Judge Johnson, Clerk Bond, and all the other inmates of the now quiet and almost solemn old M. B. hope to eat clams and drink lemonade at the beaches before snow falls again.

Words of Commendation.

WHEREAS, Our Pastor, Rev. D.D. Winn, after a pastorate of more than seven years standing, has resigned, as a token of our appreciation of his faithful labors with us and of the estimation in which we hold him as a Minister of the Gospel, a Christian, and a man, it is hereby

Resolved, That from Mr. Winn during all the time that he has been with us the church has ever had able sermons, faithful expositions of the Gospel and of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, tending to the edification of the church and the upbuilding of Zion.

Resolved, That while he has been with us his walk has been that of a Christian, such as becometh a true disciple of Christ; that he has been ever ready to help those in need; sympathetic with the sorrowing; a true friend and Pastor to all;

Resolved, That Mr. Winn has ever been an earnest, zealous worker in the Master's vineyard, unselfishly devoting himself to the interests of the church and its people;

Resolved, That we extend to Mr. Winn and his companion the assurance of our appreciation of all that they have done for our spiritual and temporal advancement and of our best wishes for their future welfare and the blessings of our Lord and Master may attend them in whatever field they be called to labor;

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions be spread upon the records of the church and that a copy of the same be forwarded to the Pastor, and also published in the Watchman.

Voted unanimously on Sunday, July 19, 1891.

A true copy. Attest:

A Fire Alarm.

Mayor Bean created a big commotion among the firemen last Saturday evening. After he had gathered around him at his fine residence on Montvale Ave. a knot of choice spirits irrespective of sex, religious creed, or political bias, namely: Judge E. F. Johnson and lady; Ald. W. F. Davis and Mrs. Davis; and Alderman Pushee; Councilmen Waldron, Bowers and O'Donnell; Clerk of Council E. H. Lounsbury, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Blodgett of Providence, R. I., Miss Emily Brown, and perhaps some uncollected names—when this party had assembled as aforesaid, at the hour of 10.35, post meridian, the Mayor gave a fire alarm from box 43, and that was what created the commotion among the firemen. It was a test alarm, but the "laddies" did not know it and there was great scampering for the scene of the conflagration. The following is the order of the arrivals of the companies and the time they made;

"An Honest Man is the Noblest Work Of God."

About 50 years ago the late George Winn and I sold to D. D. Hart of Woburn a lot of cordwood for $500, for which Mr. Hart gave us his promissory note. He was then a young man and the first business engaged in by him was teaming wood to Boston and expressing goods and merchandise from Boston to Woburn. Teaming was done mostly by oxen there being but few horses in those days. Mr. Hart worked early and late, but he was unfortunate and did not succeed in his first enterprise. He became involved and finally failed.

At this time he came to my house late one evening in a great hurry and said to my wife: "Aunt Abby, I have called on a very unpleasant mission," and then passed me a paper with a request that I would sign it. It was an agreement that we, the creditors of D. D. Hart, would take 50 percent on our claims against him. I signed the paper.

In a short time Mr. Hart came and paid me 50 percent and I gave him his note.

Some years after that, Mr. Hart came to my house again about the same hour in the evening and said: "Uncle William and Aunt Abby, I feel different from what I did when I came here 9 years ago." He handed me a roll of bank bills and the old note with the remark: "you cast the interest on the note up to this date, and then see if this roll of money, with the 50 percent you received, don't pay it in full." I said to Mr. Hart that the proceeding was unusual. Hart's reply was: "I mean to pay my debts. After you and I are dead and gone your children can't say to my children, 'Your father paid my father only 50 percent of what he owed him.'"

The writer of this being 82 years old and having lived all his life within two miles of Woburn Centre has known many young men who did not at first succeed in business; who failed, and compromised with their creditors by paying a percent of their debts; and after this the most of them went into business again and became successful, and had everything that heart could desire, and in the enjoyment of it they never stopped to think whose money they were spending, nor seemed to care.

I have never known of but one man in this community in all these 82 years who failed and compromised with his creditors and afterwards regained his financial footing who came forward and paid the balance of what he honestly owed, and that man was D. D. Hart of Woburn. When he died, after a long, active and successful business career, he owed no man a dollar

I have many times wished there were more D. D. Hart's in this community.

Republican Press Club.

An adjourned meeting of the Massachusetts Editors who projected the organization of a Republican Press Club was held at the Parker House Wednesday afternoon. Mr. A. M. The objects shall be to promote the success of Republican principles and the election of Republican candidates. The annual fee shall be $1. Regular meetings shall be held on the first Wednesdays of July, August, September and October, and special meetings may be called by the Executive Committee.

It was desired especially to draw attention to the following, which was adopted under the heading of Article 4, as showing the harmonizing of editorial freedom with mutual counsel:

North Woburn.

It would be no easy task to convince Supt. Sewell of the N. W. St. Railroad Co., Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Bond, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel S. Watson, Mr. Jonathan Tidd, Captain Rufus Poole and lady, that Nutting's Pond in Billerica is not the finest camping-out grounds in North America, for they have tried it and know whereof they speak. They have been occupying their rustic cottage up there this week and albeit the mosquitoes are large and numerous and the frogs unmelodious in that neighborhood these good people solemnly aver that they never had such a good time in all their lives as they have had there. Knock off a good sized percent from their statements for the enthusiasm of it and probably a fairly correct result would be reached as to the actual amount of pleasure these denizens of the North Village enjoyed during their late camping visit to Nutting's Pond.

This village deeply sympathize with Mr. Andrew R. Linscott in his recent loss of a dearly beloved wife, and his children in their loss of a kind and indulgent mother. Mrs. Mary H. Linscott, wife of ex-Alderman Andrew R. Linscott of Ward 6, died at her pleasant home here on last Saturday morning after an illness of only a few days of typhoid pneumonia. The sad event was unexpected and therefore a heavy blow to the deeply bereaved family and every member of this community, by whom she was highly esteemed and greatly beloved. She had but lately returned from a European trip, an event which the JOURNAL recorded only a week or two ago. She was warmly welcomed back by family and friends, no one of whom could have dreamed that her days on earth were so soon to be ended. But who can tell? Mrs. Linscott was a lady of many sterling virtues. She possessed superior intellectual gifts which had been well cultivated in her youth and strengthened in mature years by study and observation. She was a woman who under any circumstances would exert a wide and beneficial influence, and command respect for her mental traits and accomplishments. Better than these, Mrs. Linscott possessed a warm heart and a benevolent disposition; she exercised charity towards human failings; she cheerfully made allowances for the frailties of human nature—and every body loved and esteemed her. In their sore bereavement Mr. Linscott and family may be sure that they have the warmest sympathy of everyone who has any acquaintance with them or ever had with the lamented wife, mother and the kindest of friends.

The funeral of Mrs. Linscott took place last Tuesday afternoon the services being held in the Unitarian chapel, North Woburn. The chapel was entirely filled and numbers could not gain admission. Beside relatives and neighbors there were present delegations from Burbank Woman's Relief Corps, 84; Unitarian Ladies Sewing Society; the whole of her large Sunday School class; and several members of Company K, 39th Mass. Infantry Association, of which Mr. Linscott is a member. The service was conducted by Rev. H. C. Parker of the First Unitarian church in this city, and Rev. Leander Thompson. The Ladies Schuman Quartet rendered three appropriate selections. The bearers were George W. Barker, Daniel W. Bond, Elijah Rollins, Nathaniel S. Watson, Rufus F. Poole, Edward Munyan. The floral offerings were numerous, and among the set pieces were a pillow inscribed "W. C. T. U.;" cross from Boston friends; Maltese cross from Woman's Relief Corps 84; star, inscribed "Teacher," from Sunday School pupils; harp, Ladies Sewing Society, and an anchor from relatives. The ceremonies were very impressive.

Home for Aged Couples.

One of the most beautiful of Boston's charities is the Home for Aged Couples at Roxbury. The entrance is on Walnut Ave., between Seaver and School streets, and the approach through winding avenues is very pleasing. Built as it was for a private residence the building is a real home in appearance. The wide hall and staircase is of old time design, and an air of comfort pervades. On the left of the hall is the reception room where we are welcomed by the pleasant little matron who after we have rested a little shows us over the Home.

On the right hand is the long parlor where meetings are held. Among the names of ministers who have given their services is that of Rev. Geo. H. Young, at one time pastor of the Unitarian church at Woburn.

The rooms above, spacious and well furnished, are the homes of eight refined and pleasant aged couples, who through sorrow have lost their own homes and are here cared for as by their children. There are six others who though their partners in life have died here still continue to find it a home.

The grounds around are beautiful, with lawns and shaded avenues in front and a garden in the rear where flowers, fruits and vegetables are raised.

This charity is sustained by a corporation of which Elizabeth Abbott Carleton, M. D., is President and has entered upon its eighth year.—H.

This town met with a great loss in the death of Mr. Charles H. Dunham which occurred at his residence last Tuesday after an illness of a few weeks. He was a prominent townsman and also a well known Boston business man; a man of marked individuality, great integrity, and commanded the respect of everyone. He held many posts of trust and honor in the affairs of Winchester, and his death will be deeply lamented.

The Star deserves to be talked to severely for advocating the erection of an ice fountain in our streets. Don't the man at the helm of that most excellent paper know that ice taken internally is about as sure death as ratsbane?—that it is rank poison?—Where has he been for the last few years? Why, Sir, icewater went out of fashion nearly half a dozen years ago, and yet you are insisting that this community shall pay money to scatter this poison broadcast over the land!

Literary Notices.

THE COTTAGE HEARTH for August is a very attractive and interesting mid-summer number of one of the best magazines published in the country. Generally speaking the idea is to slack up a little in vacation time, but the publishers of THE COTTAGE HEARTH are not given that way very much—they keep right on doing their best all the time. Bear fresh in mind, Reader, that we give THE WOBURN JOURNAL ($2 per an.) and THE COTTAGE HEARTH ($1 50 per an.) for $2, paid strictly IN ADVANCE.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for August 1891, contains many papers well fitted for summer reading. Among these are: New Chapters in the Warfare of Science, The Value of Statistics, The Development of American Industries Since Columbus, Hypocracy as a social Debaser, The Practical Outcome of Science, Dress and Adornment, Prof. Huxley and the Swine Miracle, Illustrations of Gladstones controversial Methods, Head-flattening as Seen Among the Navajo Indians, Ginseng in Common, Editor's Table, Literary Notices, etc. Published by D. Appleton & Co., N. Y., at $5 per annum.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for July 18th and 25th contain Social Aspects of American Life, and The Bombardment of Iquique, Archbishop Magee, A Diligence Journey in Spain, The Simian Tongue, Jewish Colonies in Spain, On the Swiss-French Frontier, Moltke as a Man of Letters, The Rise of British Dominion in India, by Sir Alfred Lyall, and Extracts from some Unpublished Letters of Charlotte Bronte, Richard Jefferies, and The Marriage of Frances Cromwell, Richard Jefferies, The Inns of Court, Statesmen of Europe, Austria, with instalments of Two Old Men, Melissa's Tour, Miss Winter's Hero, and Madame La Commandante, and poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty four large pages each (or more than 3,300 pages a year) the subscription price ($8) is low. Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

In these warm days when one feels inclined to spend a good deal of time in keeping cool and quiet, it is restful to sit down with a good periodical to read; and no better one can be found than the midsummer number of PETERSON'S MAGAZINE. Unlike the PETERSON of old days, which consisted entirely of stories, the new PETERSON offers numerous features, which appeal to the entire family circle. It is profusely and handsomely illustrated, and got up in a manner that makes it rank with the four dollar magazines in appearance, as it has long done in merit. Its stories and poems are from the pens of many of our leading authors and its illustrated articles and miscellaneous papers are always as interesting as they are varied. Everybody should read the illustrated paper on Spoons and Spoon Cases; it is exceedingly entertaining and full of useful information, and the photogravures of souvenir and historical spoons are admirable. The August number is a capital specimen of this fine magazine. Terms, $2.00 a year; $1.00 for six months. Address, PETERSON'S MAGAZINE, Philadelphia.

The Local Newspaper.

The public have little appreciation of the value of well conducted local newspapers. Their offices of beneficence to the community are so common that they are unnoted, but none the less no town or city can advance without its newspapers are in the forefront of advancement. They are the life of the community. They must lead in every effort to invite capital, enlarge industries and enthuse the people in the use of their advantages.

The local newspaper is the one newspaper that should command the patronage of the community. If only one journal can be taken in a family it should be the one published at home. There is now little excuse for any person of ordinary intelligence not taking a city daily with the local newspapers, since the best can be had for a nominal cost; but there should ever be the heartiest accord and sympathy between the local newspaper and the community.—Philadelphia Times.

CHRIST AND NICODEMUS.

LESSON IV, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 26.

Text of the Lesson, John iii, 1-17—Commit Verses, 14-17—Golden Text, John iii, 16—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews."

He belonged to the most religious sect among the Jews, and we may hope that he was an exception to the description given by the Saviour in Math. xxiii, 5, 28.

2. "The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto Him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these miracles that thou doest except God be with him."

See him now in the presence of Jesus, probably a sincere, upright, religious man, but a man without Life (I John v, 12). But he is interested, and he is thoughtful and inquiring. He has seen some of the wonders wrought by Jesus, and he is persuaded that Jesus is no ordinary man.

3. "Jesus answered, and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

Regardless of Nicodemus' flattering words He sees the need of his heart, and at once tells him the only way by which it can be met; he must be born from above (margin), or anew (R. V.). Not religiousness nor outward reformation, but a new creation (II Cor. v, 17).

4. "Nicodemus saith unto Him, How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born?"

This reply proves that Nicodemus is only a natural man; he does not understand spiritual things, they are foolishness unto him (I Cor. ii, 14). He has not yet learned the A, B, C of true religion. There are multitudes now of religious people, members of churches, like him.

5. "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God."

It is probable that Nicodemus, like Joseph of Arimathea, was one of those who waited for the kingdom of God, or, in other words, like Anna, "looked for redemption in Israel" (Luke xxiii, 51; ii, 38), and because he was a good religious Jew thought that of course he must be a child of the kingdom; but see Math. viii, 11, 12. Jesus now repeats what He had said before, but enlarges by explaining that the new birth is by water and the Spirit.

6. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit."

If a person could be born again in a natural way a dozen times he would be no nearer the kingdom, for ever since Adam sinned all, without exception, are born in sin, and are by nature children of wrath.

7. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

When God says "must" there can be no other way. He has therefore forever settled it that every soul not born from above is excluded from the kingdom.

8. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

"He bringeth the wind out of His treasuries." "He causeth His wind to blow." "The stormy wind fulfills His word" (Ps. cxxxv, 7; cxlvii, 18; cxlviii, 8). The wind is His messenger, doing His work as pleaseth Him, and is visible only by its effects. So the Spirit of God works in the soul.

9. "Nicodemus answered and said unto Him, How can these things be?"

He is still a natural man trying to see spiritual things; a blind man wondering what the light is like; an earthly man puzzled over heavenly things; an intellectual, religious man lacking the one thing needful; but thank God he is inquiring.

10. "Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master (the teacher—R. V.) of Israel, and knowest not these things?"

As a teacher of Israel he should have known that God regarded the heart more than the outward appearance.

11. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness."

In another place He so speaks of His oneness with the Father, and of the Father's speaking the words and doing the works through Him (John xiv, 10), that I conclude that the "we" here refers to the Father and Himself.

12. "If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you heavenly things?"

The very first requisite to believing heavenly things is to receive Jesus as the Son of God and our personal Saviour.

13. "And no man hath ascended up to heaven but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man which is in heaven."

In chapter i, 18, John spoke of Him as "in the bosom of the Father," and here He speaks of Himself as "the Son of Man which is in heaven." Although now seated at the Father's right hand in heaven, yet wherever two or three meet in His name He is in the midst.

14. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up."

Here is another "must," and if this "must" had never become an accomplished fact the new birth had been an impossibility.

15. "That whosoever believeth in Him, should not perish, but have eternal life."

Israel murmured at God's way and God's bread (Num. xxi, 4, 5). He then sent serpents that bit them, and much people died. Moses prayed, and at God's command erected a brazen serpent upon a pole, and all who looked upon it lived. The serpent lifted up on the pole would suggest that which had bitten them as dead and harmless.

16. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Let every one write out this verse, inserting their own name instead of the words "the world" and "whosoever," gratefully receive the glorious fact, and thus by the Word and Spirit be born again.

17. "For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved."

Reader, are you saved? Are you glad that you shall never perish? Are you thankful to Jesus, who came from heaven and suffered in your stead that you might have eternal life? Do you believe that people in Africa, India, China, Japan and the Islands of the sea might have eternal life, too, if they could only hear about this wondrous Love of God and wonderful Jesus? If so, what are you doing or willing to do about it? Tell Jesus.

TIRED.

What though we're tired, my heart and I,
It matters not—there's more to come;
We must live on, we cannot die,
Must rise and gird our armor on.

We must be strong, my heart and I,
For heavy burdens weigh us down,
They press so hard, yet they must try
To lift the cross who'd wear the crown.

We must be brave, my heart and I,
We have no time to give to tears
For broken hopes, that ruined lie
Along the pathway of the years.

We must look up, my heart and I,
Straight on, where Faith and Hope are seen,
With eager step and earnest eye,
With steady trust and steadfast mien.

Look up, not down; look on, not back,
And grasp the hand of Faith secure,
For "not a good thing shall he lack"
Who thus "through all things shall endure."

"Tired out," you say; nay, nay, not so!
For "as the day, thy strength shall be,"
And he who bids you "Rise and go,"
Has also said, "Come, follow me!"

He does not ask that we should tread
A path he has not gone before;
Then follow, without fear or dread,
For he will guide you, doubt no more.
—Lucy Leggett in Good Housekeeping.

The Duty of Not Getting Tired.

Are you one of the women who say, "I am perfectly well, only I get tired easily?" If you do you are one of thousands. And yet, little woman, don't you know that getting tired easily is just of itself a disease? It shows a letting down of the vital forces that requires attention and toning up. You need first of all more rest, not necessarily more hours of sleep at night, but little half hours of rest snatched here and there in your hours of work.

And by rest isn't meant simply the physical rest that comes from lying down. Don't lie down to think over your plans for economy, or for entertaining, or for anything else. When you lie down to rest shut your eyes and stop thinking. Ten minutes of this is better than an hour of the other.

Then you need more food probably. Not more food at meals necessarily, but food taken oftener. Instead of waiting until luncheon take a cup of beef tea during the forenoon. In the afternoon take a glass of milk and a biscuit if that agrees with you, or an egg lemonade if that suits you better.

And then get a little fresh air every day. Get it any way, if you have to cut short manicuring your nails or saying your prayers to do it. And get it in the exercise of walking if you can.—New York Evening Sun.

A Scared Hired Man.

A native of the verdant isle, who had newly arrived in America, was hired by a gentleman as a gardener. The country place on which he was to work was on the shore of Long Island sound, the waters coming to within a few rods of the house. Besides his care of the garden, Pat was supposed to be the custodian of an ancient donkey, who had many eccentricities, and who Pat declared to be the "cleverest baste that iver wore a tail." One evening, as the family were at dinner, the Irishman came tearing up the veranda and into the hall. "Come quick, sor!" he cried, through the open door. "Come quick. The ass is in the say, and a-lepping to get out." And hurrying his master to the shore he pointed wildly to the creek, where, in the placid summer waters, a school of porpoises were rolling in uncouth gambols, looking really not unlike an enormous beast struggling in the waves.—New York Tribune.

Shrewd Delivery Boys.

The boys who deliver packages for the dry goods stores have a shrewd trick by which they make a few extra pennies. As every one knows, dry goods are never sold for even money, but foot up bills that always end with either fifty-seven, forty-nine or twenty-seven cents. The boys are always given a generous supply of small coin to make change with when they deliver goods sent C. O. D. They pretend, however, never to have it, and, as there is seldom the right change in the house, they get the odd pennies.

And the little fellows deserve them.—New York Herald.

Done by a Mean Man.

The meanest man on record lives in Union county. He sold his son-in-law one-half of a cow, and then he refused to divide the milk, maintaining that he sold only the front half. The son-in-law was also required to provide the feed the cow consumed, and compelled to carry water to her three times a day. Recently the cow hooked the old man, and now he is suing his son-in-law for damages.—Vandalia Gazette.

In 1821 was taken the first complete record of the population of the United Kingdom. The population was then 21,272,187. In 1831 it was 24,392,485; in 1841, 27,057,923; 1851, 27,745,949; 1861, 29,321,288; 1871, 31,845,379; 1881, 35,246,562.

Experiment has proved that if a delicate piece of lace be placed between an iron plate and a disk of gunpowder and the latter be detonated, the lace will be annihilated, but its impression will be clearly stamped on the iron.

It is estimated that $50,000,000 of the government's paper money supposed to be in circulation has been lost or destroyed. By the sinking of one vessel off the Atlantic coast some years ago $1,000,000 in greenbacks was lost.

A sugar, fifteen times sweeter than cane sugar and twenty times sweeter than beet sugar, is reported by a German chemist to be made from cottonseed meal. It cannot be sold to compete with the ordinary article.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. F. E. Lovell, Druggist.

BITTEN BY A VENOMOUS COBRA.

Rapidity with Which the Poison Courses Though a Victim's Veins.

The African cobra is known as the "spitting snake" on account of its power to throw its venom quite a distance into the eyes of its enemy. It is a lazy reptile, save when stirred to anger, when it cannot be equaled for swiftness and accuracy in spitting or biting its victim.

The spitting is accomplished by expelling the breath sharply through the mouth, so that the soapy venom flies straight as a pea thrown from a pipe into the victim's eyes.

This cobra attains the length of six feet, and is large and powerful. It is doubly formidable from the fact that it can swim in the rivers very swiftly, and has no fear. In swimming the cobra moves along very rapidly, with its snout and beady eyes just above the water's surface.

"When I was stationed with my regiment in Ceylon I had experiences with the Indian breed of cobra that were very exciting," says Lieutenant Jephson.

"My servants rushed into the bungalow one morning, begging me to save the life of a man who had been bitten by a cobra. I hastened out on to the veranda, to find a crowd of men and women bringing in a man in a state of semi-unconsciousness. They showed me two deep red spots in his instep, where the serpent's fangs had been.

"I felt of his legs, and found that they were already 'stone' cold, although the man had been bitten but ten minutes before.

"Drawing my knife from my pocket I opened the sharpest blade and proceeded at once to cut deeply into the man's instep around the bitten part and cut the flesh away. Meanwhile I had sent in for a redhot poker.

"When the iron came I pressed its glowing end forcibly against the wound, searing the flesh about the instep. Then I poured a quart of whisky down the poor wretch's throat as rapidly as possible.

"He was so paralyzed from the effect of the swift poison that he suffered no pain from the searing of his flesh, but murmured only:

"'Burn, Dory, burn!'

"I watched him anxiously for half an hour, when he was able to open his eyes. Then I gave him more whisky, and found that his pulse was much better. Another hour found him able to rise, after which I had the servants exercise him as much as possible in order to counteract the deadly coma which constantly came on.

"The next morning the man was quite well save for the deep wound in his instep. I am sorry to say that he was always lame afterward, for it seems that I had severed a cord in his instep in my surgical attempt. But he became a sort of a pensioner in my bungalow, following me around as a grateful dog would do.

"I used to point to him with pride when my guests were present and say, I cured that man of a cobra's bite.'

"There is a vine which grows in India called the aristolochia indica which has cured many persons bitten by cobras, I am informed. They say that they crush a young leaf and apply it to the wound as soon as possible after the bite is inflicted."—San Francisco Examiner.

To Tell When a Car Is Loaded.

A device that will enable a railroad employe to determine when a car is loaded consistent with safety or with economical wear has been a "long felt want" in railroad circles. An apparatus has been invented to supply this demand, and owing to its simplicity it is likely to come into general favor. The device consists of two distinct parts, the upper part being attached to the truck above the spring on the side of the car, while the other part is fixed below the spring.

An adjustable pin is carried by the top part, and the bottom end of this touches the index finger that works over the dial of the bottom piece. When the apparatus is once adjusted the index, as the car is loaded, will indicate on the dial "full load" or "overloaded," as the case may be.—Exchange.

Slang in 1832.

In 1832 Coleridge, in his "Table Talk," spoke of the word talented as follows: "I regret to see that vile and barbarous vocable 'talented' stealing out of the newspapers into the leading reviews and most respectable publications of today. Why not 'shillinged,' 'farthinged,' 'tenpenced,' etc.! The formation of a participle passive from a noun is a license which nothing but a very peculiar felicity can excuse. If mere convenience is to justify such attempts upon the idiom, you cannot stop till the language becomes, in the proper sense of the word, corrupt. Most of these pieces of slang come from America."

California's Model Constitution.

California's first constitution was adopted in 1849, and the state has had a new constitution since then. It was adopted in 1876, and furnishes an admirable illustration of the manner in which people who do not enjoy the benefit of the town meeting provide for the most minute and intimate subjects in the fundamental law of the state.—Henry Loomis Nelson in Harper's.

TWO CITIES COMPARED.

New England Cities Make the Best Showing Because of Public Spirit.

The cities of Worcester, Mass., and Syracuse, N. Y., illustrate generally the differences between New England and Middle states city governments. In 1880 the two cities were nearly equal in population. They are both manufacturing cities, situated in the interior, and surrounded by agricultural communities. In 1880 Syracuse had 92 miles of streets, 17 3-4 miles of which were paved. The annual cost of maintaining these highways was about $35,000. For the same cost Worcester maintained 197 miles of streets, all of which were paved.

The water works of Syracuse were owned by a private corporation, those of Worcester by the city. Syracuse had no parks, unless a small square or two may be thus dignified; Worcester had about thirty-five acres of parks. The drainage system of Worcester was much more elaborate and perfect than that of Syracuse. While it cost Syracuse from $10,000 to $12,000 a year to clean its ninety-two miles of streets, it cost Worcester only $3,300 to clean its 197 miles of streets.

The police force of Worcester was larger and more expensive than that of Syracuse. On an expenditure of $104,896 the New York city maintained eighteen schools, in which were taught about 7,000 pupils; the Massachusetts city maintained thirty-six schools and instructed 9,000 children for $139,722. The fire department of the one consisted of four steam engines, one fire extinguisher, one hook and ladder truck and five hose carriages; that of the other had five steam engines, twelve hose carriages, one extinguisher and three hook and ladder trucks. The annual cost of the first was $31,589, of the second $38,840.

A similar story might be told of almost any two cities taken indiscriminately from New England and from any other section of the country. The abode of the vigilant citizen in the United States is in that part of the country where the town meeting breeds a fine public spirit. Boston, with all its drawbacks and limitations, is governed with a higher regard and a more jealous care for the rights of private citizens than is any other city of its size in the Union.—Henry L. Nelson in Harper's.

The Secret of Keeping One's Temper.

A merchant in Alexandria had a dispute with a fellah, as a peasant is called, about the settlement of an account. The merchant was determined to bring the question to the court, to which the fellah objected. Desiring to make a last effort, the fellah called at the merchant's office one morning and asked the servant if his master was in. The merchant, hearing the inquiry and knowing who it was, called aloud from the office:

"Tell that rascal that I am not in."

The fellah, looking up toward him, calmly said:

"Well, sahib, God put thee in a better mind."

The merchant was struck with the meekness of this reply, and having looked more carefully into the matter he became convinced that the fellah was right and he in the wrong. He sent for the fellah, and after acknowledging his error he said:

"I want to ask you one question. How were you able to bear my abuse with such patience?"

"Sahib," replied the fellah, "I will tell thee. I was naturally as hot and violent as thou art. I knew that to indulge this temper was sinful, and I found that it was imprudent. I observed that men in a passion often speak loud, and I thought that if I could control my voice I should repress my passion. I have therefore made it a rule never to suffer my voice to rise above a certain key, and by carefully observing this rule I have entirely mastered my natural temper."—Philadelphia Times.

Hectic.

It was a cheap little clock, warranted to run three years, but it actually did keep on for six, and then, one morning, suddenly refused to do its duty longer. It was wound, shaken and then given up in despair.

Another series of efforts disclosed the fact that it would start for a moment and then stop.

"There!" said grandma, in one of its active intervals. "I think it's all right now."

"Oh, no, indeed," said Charlie. "It will stop in another minute."

"I don't know about that. It's ticking."

"Yes, but you can tell by the sound that something is the matter. This isn't a good, healthy tick. It's only a sort of a hectic."—Youth's Companion.

The Bargain Was Not Closed.

"He that will not when he may," is likely to repent his indecision for many a long day afterward. A lady who had spent a weary hour in "beating down" the salesman at a Turkish shop in Paris, returned the next day prepared to purchase. "I believe you said twenty francs," she began, taking out her purse. "Ninety, madame!" answered the smiling Turk. "But you came down to twenty!" "Ah, that was yesterday, madame! Everything goes up again in the night!"—Youth's Companion.

She Had a Good Cook.

A stout and very red faced woman of middle age, liberally besprinkled with diamonds, alighted from an oppressively new victoria the other day in front of a swell jeweler's shop on Broadway. She stared long time at a collection of odd spoons in the window, and then sailed in and up to the nearest clerk.

"What kind of spoons are thim?" she demanded, sticking a pudgy forefinger at the articles in question.

"Those are souvenir spoons, Madame," politely replied the clerk.

"Indade," said Madame, drawing in her breath. "Well, you may just do me up a dozen of thim. Our new Frinch cook makes lovely suveneer."—New York Times.

It's Larceny to Cheat the Publisher.

A newspaper in Ohio recently brought suit against forty-three men who would not pay their subscriptions, and obtained judgment in each case for the amount of each claim. Of these twenty-eight made affidavit that they owned no more than the law allowed, thus preventing attachment. Then, under the decision of the Supreme Court, they were arrested for petit larceny and bound over in the sum of $300 each. All but six gave bond, which six went to jail. The new postal law makes it larceny to take a paper and refuse to pay for it.—Toledo Blade.

Superstition.

If we could search into other persons' minds in the majority of them we should find ideas and theories dating back to the ages of superstition. If parents are so unfortunate as to be superstitious they should the more earnestly endeavor to keep their little ones' minds free from a similar taint. We have enough trouble to endure in our journey through life without seeing it ahead of us before we come to it. Often after a great deal of low spirits and worry over imaginary coming trials they never come, and had we met them unexpectedly we should not have had any more fret or grief than we have already suffered, since we had, or fancied we had, the omen which foretold them.

I know persons who will be miserable for days after a bad dream, constantly expecting some evil to befall them; others are always endeavoring to ascertain the future significance of every present event. Why should we burden our little ones' minds with such nonsense? It can be but an incubus at the best to think that one knows what is going to happen. The child who is thus taught is cruelly wronged, and given a weapon which can hurt none but the possessor (unless he, too, transmits it to his childen); but upon him it can work grievous evil and cloud many hours which otherwise might have been entirely care free and happy.

Among the uneducated superstition often runs riot, and one sometimes meets with ideas that are fairly bloodcurdling. It would be wise if mothers would pay rather more attention than they usually do to the fancies their little ones may be imbibing from nurses and servants.—Mrs. S. H. Snider in Housekeepers' Weekly.

America's Inexhaustible Coal Supply.

To get an idea of the probably inexhaustible coal supply, compare America with England. Some years ago an investigation was made to ascertain how long the supply of coal would last in that country. The drain upon the mines there is not alone for the manufacturing in Sheffield, Manchester, London and the other cities, but English coal is exported to far away countries.

In 1874 the output of the mines of the world was 260,000,000 tons, of which England furnished 125,000,000 tons, or about one-half. Investigation showed that the supply, within 4,000 feet of the surface which was available, was so great that at this average of 125,000,000 tons a year it would not be exhausted for 1,120 years. England has a coal area of 12,000 square miles, while in the United States the area is 120,000, or ten times as great. Consequently, if one-half the output for the world were to come from mines in this country at the rate of consumption when the investigation was made the supply would last 11,200 years.

But it has been found that as the world grows the consumption of coal increases in a geometric ratio, so that this period cannot be counted on as the time when the supply will be exhausted. It is enough to say that the supply in the United States is practically inexhaustible, and that as a coal producing country the United States is without a rival.—Interview in New York Times.

Gettysburg and Chickamauga.

It was at Gettysburg and Chickamauga that our American armies were at their best and did their best. Never were they—either before or after those memorable engagements—so strong, so well officered, so fierce, so determined to win, so resolved not to yield. They were then, we repeat, at their best—containing none but seasoned troops under veteran officers, inured to war, both armies confident of victory, and pretty nearly, taking all things together, equally matched. And no one can read the story of those great battles without being proud of his country and his race, for never was there more resolute and obstinate and gallant fighting done, nor ever were severe losses more unshrinkingly borne.

Nor can it be truly said of either of these battles that the beaten army did not fight as hard and as long as its more successful antagonist. There is glory enough for all. Hence it is fitting that both fields—Gettysburg and Chickamauga—should be dedicated to the perpetual remembrance of the great battles so worthily fought there.—John C. Ropes in Scribner's.

Profitable Sea Dream.

Turning dreams to commercial account is the peculiar advantage possessed by a Maine sea captain, a native of Phipsburg. He asserts that on the night preceding his arrival in any port he invariably has a vivid dream. In his vision he sees the entire layout of the harbor, the number of vessels in port, and is given to understand just where his location is to be. In case the harbor is a strange one he becomes acquainted in this mysterious way with all the approaches, and when his vessel sails up to her anchorage he shapes her course with all the confidence born of certain knowledge.—Lewiston Journal.

Original Emancipation Proclamation.

The original draft of the emancipation proclamation was lost in the great Chicago fire of 1871. The only other document in the handwriting of Lincoln which proves his acts in reference to the abolition of slavery is in the collection of C. F. Gunther, the Chicago candy dealer.—St. Louis Republic.

Of the old people in the United Kingdom above the age of sixty, rich and poor alike, one in seven is at the present moment in receipt of parish relief.

Short Work of a Troublesome Case.

One day I was taken with Paralysis of the Bowels. The stomach and other organs lost all power of action. Although opposed to proprietary medicines, I tried Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. To make a long story short, it saved my life. It is the best medicine in the world for difficulties of the kidneys, liver and bowels.—A. J. Gilford, Lowell, Mass.

The Woburn Journal

"WHO COMES HERE?"

"Halt! Who comes here?"

"Friends with the countersign!"

"Advance one and give me the countersign!"

It was the relief going the rounds to change the pickets, and I was dropped out at post No. 7. We had fought Lee all day long on the strangest battlefield of the whole war—in the Wilderness. From right to left flank, from front to rear, we were hemmed in by forest and thicket. There were swamps in which lizards and serpents lurked, thickets in which the coy whippoorwill built its nest, dense spots of forest which seemed never to have echoed the ring of the woodman's axe.

We had fought from tree to tree, from thicket to thicket, from glade to glade, pushing back the gray lines here, baffled and compelled to give ground at other points. Lee's lines barred the way. Never a man in his whole army whose musket barrel was not hot that day. Never a man who did not feel that he was fighting for the life of the Confederacy.

How the forest shook and trembled as the great guns sent their deadly missiles crashing through the foliage! How the thickets blazed up in flames, the severed limbs crashed down, the sunny glades turned dark as night with the powder smoke settling over them! The dead outnumbered the bushes. The wounded wailed and cried as I never heard them before or after. There was something so sombre—so grewsome—so unearthly in fighting a foe unseen in the semi-darkness that the shouting and cursing usually heard in the lines gave place to silence and pale faces.

Darkness had come at last, and the roar of battle had died away to a low growl. Grant had failed to drive Lee. We knew that from flank to flank. If he could not force a passage through those gray lines he could flank them. Before the sun went down we knew that he would do it. It was not yet night when the movement began, but my division would be one of the last to move, and we must hold our ground and prevent the Confederates from discovering what was taking place. It was a curious coincidence of war that Lee was also moving by the flank, both armies marching in parallel lines from a battlefield which had yielded neither victory nor defeat to either side.

Post No. 7 was under a large tree on the edge of a thicket. To the south there was a strip of open ground, then a thicket, then an old field in which stood a log cabin. It was a lonely place, well away from the camps, the dead and the dying, but I was glad to be alone. All along the lines there was a growling of musketry; but this was but a bluff—a bit of acting to cover the real design. I had been nearly an hour on the post without anything happening to alarm me, when I heard a person moving in the thicket across the open strip.

Was it a person? Riderless horses had galloped about that day almost without number; this might be one which had found shelter in that thicket.

Rustle! Rustle! Step! Step!"

It was a cautious movement. Who ever it was hoped to reach me without discovery, but there were dead leaves under foot, and the thicket was dense. A hare could not have moved without betraying its presence.

Rustle! Rustle!

Kneeling down so as to see under the darkness, as it were, I suddenly made out a black object against the dark back-ground. It is neither horse nor mule; it is a human being. A scout from the enemy's picket post, only a quarter of a mile away? A wounded man hobbling about to find succor? One of our own scouts returning?

"Who comes here?"

There is a silence of fifteen seconds, and then a woman's voice answers:

"I can't find the place! It is so dark I can't find it place!"

And it was a woman's voice, and it had a sob in it too. A woman there in the darkness between the hostile lines—with powder smoke still in the air, with stray bullets darting through the thickets with a whizz, as of some great insect stirred with anger!

"Who comes here?"

"I wish it wasn't so dark! I am so tired—so tired!" And then she came across the open strip toward me, making no stop, never hesitating, walking straight up to me as if she could see as well by night as in the sunshine of day.

"I can't find the place" she sobbed, as she came to a stop within arm's length.

"Good God, woman! but what are you doing here?" I gasped, almost terrified at her presence.

"See! see!" she replied, holding a bundle out toward me. "One time I saw a beautiful spot in the woods, and said to myself that if he died I would bury him there, but I can't find it—I can't find it!"

"What is it, woman? What have you got there?"

"See! see! Don't be afraid. He's dead. He can't speak or move. Take him!"

She put a bundle into my arms, and I cried out and let fall my musket. It was the body of a baby about a year and a half old. 'Dead? Yes! Dead from a cruel bullet which had pierced its little body and left a great wound which looked horrible to me in the dim light! Dead and cold and bathed in its own blood! Dead for hours! And when I reached out and touched the shawl or wrap worn by the mother my fingers burned at the feel of blood!

"I have carried him such a long, long way," she moaned, "and I have seen so many dead men and heard so many guns! You'll help me won't you—help me to find the place and bury poor baby?"

"Was it your baby? Did you live in the cabin beyond the thicket?" I asked, still holding the little corpse.

"He was so happy!" she said as she patted the little bare head with a motherly hand. "And I was so happy too! He won't never laugh and crow again, will he? I've got to find that beautiful place and bury him, haven't I? And you'll help me; yes, I know you will, for you don't swear and curse at me."

She had lost her mind. Think of it—an insane mother wandering over a bloody battlefield with her dead child in her arms! She had but one idea—to bury it in a beautiful dell which she had once visited—a dell in which Federal or Confederate were doubtless then burying their own dead.

I knew not what to do. I could not leave my post, and I did not want her to go wandering further. I was trying to soothe and quiet the woman when she suddenly cried out:

"Ah! It is not so dark now, and I can find the place. I'll go on ahead and dig the grave and do you follow on with baby. Poor baby! He won't know that he is buried, will he? I can find the place and you"—

"Come back! Come back!" I called to her as she fled away in the darkness, but she was 200 feet away as she answered me:

"I'll find the place! Poor, poor baby!"

And when the relief came I told the story and pointed to the bundle resting on the ground beside me.

"God pity her!" whispered the sergeant as he lifted his cap."

"God pity her!" echoed all the others as they stood uncovered around the poor little corpse.

Time meant human lives that night. Grant was moving by the flank; Lee was moving by the flank to match him. The morrow was to witness more slaughter—make thousands of other widows and orphans.

"Dig here," said the sergeant, and with our bayonets we scooped out a shallow grave in scarcely more than a minute's time.

"Carefully, now! Poor little thing! Now fill in. That will do. God knows where it lies. Fall in—forward, march!"

And yet men write of the glory of war.—New York World.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town says: Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50c, a bottle, at F. E Lovell's Drug Store.

To Increase the Supply of Rubber.

A resident of the Malay Peninsula, writing to a Ceylon paper suggests that it might be profitable if those owning properties in Ceylon would scatter broadcast a few bushels of seed of the Ceara rubber tree in the belts or useless jungles adjoining their estates. The Cears grows rapidly and thrives in jungle, while there is every probability that India rubber will increase in price to a considerable extent. A German syndicate propose to establish a large plantation in Mexico, in part of which the Ule tree flourishes, and an average-sized specimen yields twenty gallons of "milk," equivalent to forty pounds of dried rubber.—English Mechanic.

An Important Matter.

Druggists everywhere report that the sales of the Restorative Nervine—a nerve food and medicine—are astonishing; exceeding anything they ever had, while it gives universal satisfaction in headache, nervousness, sleeplessness, sexual debility, backache, poor memory, fits, dizziness, etc. L. Burton & Co., Troy, N. Y.; Ambery & Murphy, of Battle Creek, Mich.; C. B. Woodworth & Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind., and hundreds of others state that they never handled any medicine which sold so rapidly, or gave such satisfaction. Trial bottles of this great medicine and book on Nervous Diseases, free at Charles H. Buss.

To Cut Glass With Scissors.

One can cut glass with a scissors as easily as though it were an autumn leaf. The entire secret consists in plunging the pane of glass into a tub of water, submerging also the hands and the scissors. The scissors will cut in straight lines without a flaw. This result is achieved in consequence of the absence of vibration. If the least portion of the scissors is left out of the water, the vibration will prevent the glass cutting.—Post Dispatch.

"Don't Care to Eat."

It is with the greatest confidence that Hood's Sarsaparilla is recommended for loss of appetite, indigestion, sick headache, and similar troubles. This medicine gently tones the stomach, assists digestion, and makes one "real hungry." Persons in delicate health, after taking Hood's Sarsaparilla a few days, find themselves longing for and eating the plainest food with unexpected relish.

Dr. Nansen, in his recently published volume, says that his experience during the crossing of Greenland led him to "take a decided stand against the use of stimulants and narcotics of all kinds, from tea and coffee on the one hand to tobacco and alcoholic drinks on the other."

"HOLD THE FORT."

The War Incident That Suggested the Popular Hymn to P. P. Bliss.

Your letter of inquiry as to the origin of the hymn "Hold the Fort" was duly received. The following newspaper clipping contains the facts in regard to the matter so far as I have been able to ascertain them:

"When Sherman was holding Atlanta and stripping his army for his famous 'march to the sea,' Hood's army was suddenly thrown on Altoona pass, which was defended by a fort commanded by General Corse. The position was nearly fifty miles from the headquarters of Sherman, and its vital importance was known in both armies and to its gallant commander.

"When the enemy (General Johnston) approached, General Corse made up his mind that the position must be held at all costs, and he told the men that there would be no retreat nor surrender. Kenesaw mountain overlooked the pass, and on the summit was a signal station, and after General Corse had sent a message informing Sherman of the attack and his purpose of making a desperate defense, he addressed himself to the work at hand with a vigor which will always be the theme of song and story.

"The attack began early in the morning, and the heavy masses of the Confederate troops were pushed with great determination close up to the works, and at one time entered a small redoubt, but were driven back at every assault. About 10 o'clock at night, as one who 'was there' well remembers, the signal station flag gave a message which was not clearly distinguished because of the heavy smoke which hung over our lines, but in a few moments the assault slackened a little, and as the smoke blew away the message was read, 'Hold the fort; we are coming.' The message was repeated to all the regimental commanders, and was read in every battery, and it was received everywhere with great cheers.

"It was the only message received that day, but Sherman ordered it repeated from time to time during the day, and whenever the immediate duty would permit or the smoke would allow the flag to be seen, every eye was turned to the white flag, with its crimson square standing out boldly in relief against the clear sky, and it always said, 'Hold the fort; we are coming.'

"It was from this event that the burden of Sankey's religious song was taken, which has been sung in all great religious meetings wherever the English language is spoken. General Corse got a severe wound, and the losses in his command were heavy, but in the afternoon the assault was discontinued."

Five years after the close of the war Major D. W. Whittle made use of this incident in an address delivered before a Sunday school convention in Illinois. Bliss was leading the singing. The relation of the story and the manner in which it was used by the speaker made a deep impression upon Mr. Bliss, who at once composed the words of the famous song, and on returning to his home in Chicago wrote out the music, and a short time afterward it was published and given to the world. This was in May, 1870. A few weeks before the death of Mr. Bliss, in talking with him about his popular songs, he remarked to me that he hoped that he was not to be remembered in the future only as the author of "Hold the Fort," as he thought that he had written many songs much better than that one.—Ira D. Sankey in Christian Union.

An Eye Snail.

Did you ever hear of an eye snail? It is found on the coast of some of the South Pacific islands, a product of the sea, and in appearance not unlike the half of a dry English pea. The flat is slightly concaved, and by close inspection the numerous small legs can be seen in readiness for business, closely folded together.

Now comes the most singular part of the story: Place the little animal under the lid of the eye, and he springs off, running all about and around the ball apparently in search of anything of a foreign nature, which, should he find, he will seize, and come out of the eye evidently satisfied with having performed his duty.

Stranger still, the thing remains lifeless in the pocket until immersed in a little vinegar, whereupon it begins jumping about, signifying its willingness to work.

Although the thing resembles the half of an English pea, there is nothing irritating about it in the eve. Whites are made acquainted with its use by the natives, who frequently get grains of sand in their eyes while diving.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Little England in China.

Hong Kong is a little England, the creation of English energy, enterprise and industry. Forty years ago it was a barren rock, inhabited by a few squalid fisher folk. Today it has a population of 160,000 souls and a revenue of £250,000 a year. Of late years it has added sugar refining to its other industries, and what with its banks, its manufactories, its newspaper, its tramway and its docks, it is one of the most thriving places in the world.—London Tit-Bits.

Unreasonable.

She—I really don't think it was nice of you to borrow money of papa so soon after we became engaged.

He (greatly surprised)—Why, you are the first girl who ever objected to it in all my experience!—Munsey's Weekly.

All Aroken Down.

Is it not sad to see so many young men every day of whom this can be said? Young man, take my advice. Stop all indiscretions which you have practiced, keep good hours, retire early, and build un your shattered system by using Sulphur Bitters, which will cure you.—Old Physician.

Trouble in a Country House.

An uptown clubman, who is very much in trade and keeps an eye always on the main chance, came to grief the other day through inviting to his country house a visitor who was visiting the city to spend a lot of money in a business way. The clubman merchant wanted the visitor's custom and took this hospitable way to secure it. The visitor found at his host's a company who were laying plans for horseback rides and other bucolic sports. In order to make himself congenial to such a company he appeared at dinner wearing spurs. His host's friends were unable to repress their amusement. This proved so embarrassing to the visitor that when soup was passed to him he upset it, spilling the scalding liquid in his lap.

The mishap was too ludicrous to excite sympathy. Its reception in a spirit of levity decided him to leave the table. Doing so in some haste, one of his spurs caught in the tablecloth, and in less time than it takes to tell it he had hauled the cloth off, dragging with it to the floor the soup of the guests and a jumble of cut glass, silverware, cutlery and other table appointments. The visitor did not stop to apologize. His room was handy, and before the debris could be removed the host and his guests spied their friend, luggage in hand, hat set back on his ears and his spurs flashing, bound down the road toward the railway station. That was the last seen of him to date.—New York Times.

Indians of Terra del Fuego.

Rousson and Willems have explored the northern part of the island of Terra del Fuego between 52 deg. 30 min. and 53 deg. 30 min. south latitude, traveling all along the north coast and across the island, about sixty miles south of the Straits of Magellan. They mapped all the little rivers, and found that the Cullen river, which empties into the Atlantic ocean, is quite an important stream. The valley of this river is a fine country, and the rich herbage afforded abundant nourishment for the horses upon which the party rode. They met the Ona Indians all through their journey. Quite a number of them were 6 feet 6 inches high and very muscular.

They are nearly naked, wearing only over their shoulders ill made capes of guanaco skin. The only ornament which they possess consists of a bracelet or a collar of shells. These Indians inhabit about two-thirds of the island. The men occupy themselves wholly with procuring food. Their bows and arrows are always with them, and they use flint arrow heads. Much of their time is given to making weapons of the chase and war. They are continually in trouble with the Indians to the w t and south of them, from whom they differ greatly.—Chicago Times.

Illuminating Walking Sticks.

A novel experiment of the chloride of silver battery has been made in the manufacture of the electric light cane. Four cells are placed end to end in a small tube of cardboard and inserted in a hollow cane. The silver wire at one end is connected to one end of the carbon filament of a small incandescent lamp, snugly placed at the head of the cane, and a small brass strip or spring is extended upward from the zinc bottom, so as to make contact possible with the other end of the carbon filament.

When a bright light is required, pressure on a small push button on the side of the cane closes the circuit and ignites the lamp. The head of the cane is solid silver, which makes a good reflector for the light, and a very thick lens is fitted into the top. These canes have been used with great success for theatrical purposes, and have a very pleasing effect.—New York Telegram.

A Wonderful Bronze Pagoda.

A missionary who has settled in the province of Sz-Chuan, central China, and who has visited the great Buddhist peak, Mount Omei, describes the temples around the base as still showing many wonderful works of art. Near the foot of the mountain there still stands a pagoda of bronze fifteen stories high, believed to be upward of a thousand years old. From the ground to the polished ivory tip this immense structure is literally covered with delicate figures of men, beasts, birds and reptiles. Of figures of Buddha there are no less than 4,700 within the province, most of them in the immediate vicinity of the sacred peak.—St. Louis Republic.

Snakes and Toads for Medicine.

Dried snakes, the Chinese believe, are good medicine where a complaint is difficult to diagnose, for the reason that the serpent in life inserts itself into all sorts of holes and crevices, and is likely after death to seek the uttermost parts of the body. Such concretions of limy matter as are formed in the gall bladders of cows cure St. Vitus' dance and smallpox. These same concretions are the very things that are known by ignorant people in this country as so called "madstones," used for applying to snake bites. The orientals believe in the effectiveness of dried toads as a tonic, and think caterpillars a sure remedy for bronchial troubles.

Salted scorpions, they assert, are admirable for smallpox, and silkworms, as well as the skins which locusts leave on trees on vacating them, are supposed to have wonderful medicinal virtues. Bones of the cuttlefish or sepia are believed by them to have virtues in the treatment of cancer. They think that the sepia is a bird transformed into a fish. They use clam shells for a cathartic and maggots to cure dysentery. Powdered fossil crabs are, in the opinion of their physicians, an antidote for poisons of all sorts, and seed pearls cure troubles of the heart and liver.—Washington Star.

WOBURN AS A HOME.

One would have to travel far to find a pleasanter place to live in than Woburn. Its steady growth in population proves that other people think so too. Naturally, its territory is fair to view. Its surface is richly diversified with hills and meadows, woods and plains. It is one of the most picturesque spots in the near neighborhood of Boston.

We said that Woburn is a growing place, and so indeed it is. This too in spite of the many hard things that a few indiscreet people say about it. It is all the time forging ahead. Does that show that it is an undesirable city for homes?

The proverb says: "it is a very mean bird that fouls her own nest." And so it is. But there are some of that kind of a bird in our midst and they are all the time railing out against the city and people. They say rum rules here. That isn't so. The consumption of rum is no greater in Woburn than in any other town or city of its size. It is the incessant howl which these people keep up over the business that gives us a bad name among those who do not stop, or care too little about it, to investigate the matter. Rum drinking is indulged in as moderately here as anywhere else, and as to other prevailing vices, our place is much freer from them than many others we wot of with a population considerably less than ours.

It is the hue-and-cry that is made over our sins of omission and commission, albeit no more numerous or of a graver character than among our neighbors of more virtuous pretensions—the hue-and-cry made by these same birds who "foul their own nests" instead of a really bad moral condition that hurts us as a community. Our growth would be much larger if the citizens would turn to and join in a general chorus of commendation and praise instead of condemnation and efforts to pull down and destroy.

Oh, your objectionable population! Your ignorance, poverty, vice! Well, there are no more of these objectionable features about Woburn than about any other place of its size. There are men and women here whose absence would improve the city. What town or city near Boston hasn't them? We have rum-selling and rum drinking. Who has not? And in the way of antidotes for these we'll venture to say no community can boast of being better provided than this.

GOOD FOR BOSTON'S SUBURBS.

In this issue of THE JOURNAL is published the main points of a circular sent out by the Rapid Transit Commission to the Railroad Companies of the State whose lines terminate at Boston with a view of obtaining information respecting facilities which they give for suburban passenger traffic, fares, etc., and to organize meetings for hearings on the same.

Here is presented a fine chance for Woburn's Board of Trade to demonstrate its utility as a business organization and show its regard for the interests of our city. The Rapid Transit Commission should be consulted as to the date of the hearings on this important subject and then they should be attended by the ablest men we have among us.

This matter deserves to be kept prominent at the meetings of Board and a plan of campaign should be agreed on in season to enable the committee to act intelligently at the hearings proposed. Now is the time for Woburn to be up and doing.

LAUNCHED.

The Massachusetts end of Grover Cleveland's presidential boom was successfully launched at Sandwich on the Cape last Saturday.

While it was in process of incubation the Democratic spider said to the Republican fly, "walk into my parlor," in innocent response to which a few guileless Republicans, who were old enough to know better, were caught in the trap and contributed to the success of the launch.

The safest thing for a Republican to do at this season of the year is to give meetings engineered by Democrats a wide berth, no matter by what name they are called.

A GOOD OFFICER.

A recent receipt of documents from him reminds the JOURNAL to express publicly the opinion that Secretary Hayes of the Republican Club of Massachusetts is the right man in the right place. He is a faithful doer of the work, and if the Republicans of this Commonwealth become thoroughly educated on the vital issues of this fall's campaign it will be due to Secretary Hayes's indefatigable labors to that end.

Yea, verily, Secretary Hayes is the right man in the right place.

AN ENCOURAGING OUTLOOK.

The Republican party of this State are well united and bid fair to present an unbroken front to the enemy in November. It is true that considerable speculation as to who the candidate for Governor may be is indulged in, and concerning it opinions and preferences vary; but a disposition to yield these, or to make concessions to the opinions and feelings of others, everywhere prevails, which insures harmonious action, a pulling together, and a handsome victory in the fall.

COUNTY TREASURER

Middlesex County has a County Treasurer to elect this fall. It is a fat office and there are likely to be numerous aspirants.—Winchester Star.

To some one of whom it is expected the present incumbent, Mr. Hayden, will yield without a struggle.

— Last Friday the wife and boys of Mr. C. M. Munroe left this city for Wakefield, N. H., where they will remain through August. Mr. Munroe will join his family up there among the mountains later on.

— There are only 16 inmates of the almshouse. This is an uncommonly small number even for this season of the year. It shows that people are getting on quite comfortably notwithstanding the slack times.

— Miss Adelaide Richards and her "Western Cousin" are visiting relatives in Littleton, N. H., and may much comfort and happiness be theirs while they are up there in that most attractive section of the Granite State.

— A chap jumped from a train near Mr. Waterman's place on Church Ave. the other day and came pretty near going where the woodbine twineth. He landed on his head and shoulders and was evidently considerably hurt.

— It is reported that the meeting of the Bay State League, a bond and certificate organization recently established or about to be established here, was far from being a satisfactory one except in the way of a spread, which was fine.

— Brother C. W. Nute very sensibly prefers to stick to his bench rather than to go wandering away among unfamiliar scenes after alleged vacation pleasures with the thermometers ranging all up and down among the 90s. Sensible!

— Rev. W. E. Bates of Haverhill will preach at the First Baptist church next Sunday morning. He will also lead the praise service at 7 o'clock in the evening. The Society have arranged for preaching on the next six Sundays.

— John E. Gilcreast writes from Pottsville that in trying to describe the pleasure which his present Western trip is giving the English language is an utter failure. He and his brother Frank are making the most of John's Pennsylvania visit.

— Mrs. Hart, wife of the popular B. & L. conductor, O. J., returned from a very nice visit to Lynn, Nahant, Swampscott, etc., last Saturday evening. She was away a week, a large part of the time being spent with her mother at Lynn.

— Everyone who heard it said Rev. D. D. Winn's farewell sermon at the First Baptist church last Sunday was an excellent one. His opponents were treated kindly, charitably, and in a Christian spirit, and the final leave-taking was affecting.

— Miss Mertena L. Bancroft, who enjoys a good deal more than a local reputation as an organist and pianist, will leave to-morrow on her vacation outing. She closed her classes a few days ago and will resume them about the middle of September.

— John E. Gilcreast left here last Thursday week for a visit to his brother at Pottsville, Penn., and regions in the West. He will go over about the same ground that his father, Mr. John Gilcreast, Superintendent of the Woburn Gaslight Co., travelled last year.

— A few days ago a party consisting of the wife and children of Auctioneer E. J. Gregory, his sister Miss Henrietta Gregory, and Misses Nellie and Mamie Moore, daughters of Mr. Thomas Moore, merchant, left here for Salisbury, N. H., for a vacation visit.

— Thanks are due Rev. Hugh Montgomery for copies of The New Bedford Evening Journal containing accounts of liquor raids and prosecutions in that city. It appears that the saloonists are finding "Jordan a hard road to travel" down in New Bedford as well as in Woburn.

— On Aug. 10 the Bunker Hill Encampment, I. O. O. F., of Charlestown, will go to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, to lay the corner-stone of a handsome Lodge Building, and have engaged the Woburn Brass Band to accompany them and furnish music for the occasion.

— Lawyer Franc P. Curran, Mistress C., and the juvenile Currans will use up the remainder of the heated term in little jaunts of a day to the beaches, sails on salt water, and short drives countryward. Lawyer C. has the business of many clients to look after these days.

— Brakeman Edwin J. Hart and Robert H. Fuller were examined a few days ago for promotion to full fledged passenger conductors and were perfect on every point. It is probable that each of them will soon be given a train, especially as they do considerable conductor work now.

— Mr. Edward Blanchard, who successfully travels through New England and Canada for Morrill's celebrated inks, has moved from Summer st. to a fine residence owned by Miss Woodman on upper Main st. handy by the Woburn Park. It is one of the prettiest places in this city.

— We have often wondered why a handsome fountain has never been set up on our pretty little Common. An artistically designed one would be exceedingly ornamental to the village. Do you mind how fine Winchester's fountain looks throwing jets of pure water all over the emerald grass plot at its base?

— Co. G, 5th Regt. M. V. M., were welcomed with open arms when they returned from the Framingham muster field last Saturday. The boys were tolerably well beat out, for they had done a hard week's work, and seemed to be glad to get back again. They acquitted themselves honorably at the muster.

— Mr. Robert J. W. Phinney of Academy Hill and Mrs. Phinney left this city last Saturday for a vacation of two or three weeks. They went directly to Wentworth Hall, Jackson, N. H., one of the pleasantest and most comfortable resorts in New England, and there they will remain nearly all the time while away.

— The Sewing class of the Woburn Industrial school will give an exhibition of their handiwork at the Academy on Warren street at 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, Aug. 3, next, under the direction of the Lady Managers of the School. Samples of the work done by the class will be suspended from the walls of the school room for general inspection and besides that a working exhibition in sewing will be given. All of which will doubtless prove of great interest to the spectators. The Managers wish it distinctly understood that everyone interested in this work is cordially invited to attend this exhibition of the class.

— Last week the Woburn Gaslight Company held their annual meeting and elected the following Board of officers for the ensuing year: President, Benjamin Hinckley; Clerk and Treasurer, Richard J. Monks; Directors, Benjamin Hinckley, Richard J. Monks, John Johnson, Charlie A. Jones, Gawin R. Gage.

— Mrs L. F. Hurd has been in business many years in Woburn and has never yet failed to give satisfaction to her customers. [See her card in another column]. She has the confidence of the people of the city, and as for her ability to do first class work no one has the least question. She enjoys a large patronage and richly deserves it.

— Nobody can transform men's well worn and rather shabby clothes into suits that look as neat as new ones quicker, nicer or cheaper than Mr. W. G. Waldon of Walnut street, just off from Main. He does his work in the most faithful and skilful manner, and we are right glad to know that people are patronizing him, for he seems to be well worthy of public confidence and esteem.

— Deputy Fred Perkins and suite recently installed the following officers of Woburn Commandery, O. G. C.: N. C., John E. Osborne; V. C., Christopher A. Blackburn; Prelate, Mrs. Dorcas Cook; W. H. William A. Crocker; K. of R., John J. Dixon; T., Hiram Whitford; W. of I. G., Andrew J. Simonson; W. of O. G., John A. McLaine; V. N. C., George W. West.

— We trust the Fourth Middlesex District Court will not turn to ridicule the new probationary law as the Cambridge Police Court and officers are doing. There they arrest intoxicated people on charges of "disorderly" which the Court allows them to sustain on the weakest kind of evidence. It is done to evade the new "drunk law," as it is called. The way they do it in Cambridge is a shame and disgrace to the police department and Court of that city.

— Mr. Chester R. Smith, salesman for Mr. C. Willard Smith, will probably leave here about Aug. 7 for Lubec, Me., at which quiet and delightful seaside resort he proposes to pass his vacation. Quite a large company of Woburn people are already there and word comes that they are enjoying life very much. Lubec promises to become in the near future one of the most popular, as it is already one of the most charming, summer resorts on the Maine coast.

— The JOURNAL has been saying for three or four years past that Capt. Horace N. Conn ought to be appointed Military Instructor in our public schools, but the School Board have failed to see it in that light until last Friday evening when at a meeting held by them the appointment was given to him on his merits. He has served a term as Captain of the Mechanic Phalanx and is thoroughly educated in the use of arms. A better appointment could not have been made.

— Cooper & Rand are enterprising real estate agents and dealers and are doing a good business notwithstanding the dull times. They have offices in this city and Boston. They are young men of firstclass business ability, honorable in their deal, and successful in land transactions. They have a large amount of residence property in their hands for sale, and also do a fine business at leasing houses, stores, etc., for the owners. The firm have a good standing among real estate people.

— Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Tidd of North Woburn, the most extensive travelers we have in the city, will start to-day for their regular summer vacation, and this time they go to the banks of the Hudson, a river that is well termed "The Rhine of America." They expect to visit Newburg, West Point and other places on that beautiful river and vicinity, and will return home by the way of Albany, N. Y., the famous Berkshire Hills, etc. The address of Mr. and Mrs. Tidd for the present will be Cornwall, N. Y.

— Supt. Wentworth of the East Middlesex Street Railroad Company says the number of daily visitors to Pine Banks Park in Malden is very large and rapidly increasing. A considerable proportion of them come from Boston, Chelsea, Charlestown, Somerville and round about that region of country. The better the beautiful Park, with its 600 acres of wooded hills, its ravines, its piles of granite, its smoothe roads and pleasant paths, become known the bigger and more frequent the crowds of people who visit it.

— President Charles H. Washburn (formerly pastor of the North Congregational church in this city) of the Falmouth Summer Institute has issued an attractive order of exercises for the 10 days term of the same, which will open on Aug. 4. A large number of eminent professional men and educationists are connected with the school, and in the programme Rev. Daniel March, D.D., pastor of the First Congregational church in this city, is announced to lecture at 8 o'clock P. M. on Tuesday, Aug. 4, on "Light in the East."

— Madame Bryant of Pullman, Illinois, wife of Mr. Edward F. Bryant, son of Mr. Oliver F. Bryant of Salem st., this city, for some years connected with the Woburn First National Bank and now Secretary of the Pullman Loan and Savings Co., is a guest at the Lakeside House, Weirs, N. H. She was a New Hampshire girl before her marriage and is therefore on or not far from her native heath. It is expected that the other member of the domestic copartnership will put in an appearance later on.

— Meaning always to bestow praise where it belongs we desire to state that the reduction in the rate per $1,000 of taxation this year is largely due to the appropriations and the good business methods employed by Mayor Bean in figuring them out, for if we remember correctly the Mayor's estimates and figures were adopted by the Board without change. Of course praise is due the Assessors for ferreting out and getting the property to list and the public will give it to them, but Mayor Bean too must come in for a fair share of encomium.

— There are men of unusual level heads in this city who firmly believe and are bold to say that it is their opinion that in less than 10 years from this date there will not be a tannery or currying shop in Woburn. They expect to see this become a residence city ultimately and at no very distant day either. "Westward" leather making, like "the Star of Empire makes its way," and it will not be long before its manufacture in New England will cease altogether. The men we speak of believe this, and it is no easy thing to gainsay their arguments.

— There is a decided better feeling regarding business among the manufacturers, although as yet little has been done. Duncan is finishing about 400 a day, a very small part of his usual output. At Dow's things look busy, as well as at Beggs & Cobb's two big establishments. Mr. Loring is getting under way in his new purchase. There are 29 leather manufacturing establishments, upon which the men of Woburn depend for labor.—Boston Globe.—There is a better feeling all along the line and it looks now as though there was to be a material revival in the leather business this fall.

— Major S. B. Phinney, the veteran journalist and staunch old Democratic warhorse of the Cape, father of Mr. Robert J. W. Phinney whose beautiful home ornaments Academy Hill, the "Court End" of this city, was an honored guest at the grand reception and superb banquet given to Grover Cleveland at Sandwich last Saturday in honor of that distinguished gentleman becoming a summer resident of the Cape. Although rising 80 years of age the old Democratic leader is as bright as a dollar, and enjoyed the Democratic glorification at Sandwich as heartily as the youngest of them.

— Lawn Tennis continues to be a popular out-door amusement in this city. Judge Johnson's tennis court does not lie idle very much. We are pleased to be able to state on reliable authority that Clerk Lounsbury of the Common Council is playing a stronger game than usual this season. Hitherto his achievements at the nets have not been such as one would be apt to point to with pride. It is stated to his credit, and with an appearance of perfect honesty, that Mr. L. has within the past fortnight "tied" a well-known amateur in this city in a game, over which fact his friends were quite jubilant.

— The drugstores wore a modest and unobjectionable air last Sunday night. It was much better than the way they appeared formerly. The JOURNAL does not believe in the right or expediency of apothecaries or anybody else doing a general merchandize business on the Lord's Day, by day or artificial light; it believes in obeying both the laws of God and the State; perhaps it is a crank on such things; but if our Woburn druggists will do as well and show as much regard for public feeling right along as they did last Sunday and the Sunday before we'll guarantee that not much fault will be found with them.

— According to the reports of the neighbors there was quite a commotion on Elm st. last Wednesday evening on the arrival of Lawyer Blank's new mule there. The animal was purchased that day and brought to town with considerable pride on the part of the Squire, but the difficulty experienced in getting him from the station to Elm street by a considerable body of volunteer juvenile assistants gave that pride something of a fall. The mule was bought for the use and pleasure of Mr. Blank's quartet of bright little boys, but whether he can ever be utilized for that purpose is a question. He is a very small specimen except his ears which are of phenominal dimensions even for a member of the mule family. A large procession of rollicking lads, led by the Student, followed in the wake of the obstreperous little brute and presented rather a pleasing spectacle as they went howling up the street. Every known means was resorted to by them to aid and accelerate the animal's locomotion; violent twisting of his tail, that old fashioned and generally efficacious remedy for balk in mule, was resorted to in spite of one of the finest exhibitions of the capabilities of the mule's working end and a pair of the most vicious looking heels in America; nevertheless his progress was slow to an aggravating degree. However, patience and perseverance on the part of the boys at last won the day and the mule was safely landed on Elm st., and carefully laid away in a "Welcome" soap box which providentially turned up in just the nick of time—except his ears.

— The Bohemians have their rendezvous in one of the queer little nooks of Wade's block and when the room is reached (if at all) one or more of them are generally found in it. They are a literary lot, their immediate means of support being derived from daily contributions to the columns of the Boston newspapers of what, by way of courtesy, is dubbed local news, and a very comfortable sort of a living it is that these fellows thus obtain. Their roll of membership does not exceed six and even this small number find it hard to occupy the "den" at the same time being barred by lack of room and no less by lack of other accommodations. Narrow serpentine alleyways with gently undulating floors lead to the entrance of the little corner occupied by the Bohemians in which it is an easy matter for a stranger to become hopelessly bewildered and finally lost. The room is about 7x9 feet, the same size as window panes (in inches) were before the advent of your abominable "modern improvements"—7x9. On second thought, perhaps the dimensions of the tucked-away nook should not be given as above, because no two of its walls are of the same length or height, this diversity giving it a somewhat ancient and peculiar appearance. When the Bohemians are engaged in getting off their reports for the afternoon papers, all seated on the improvised stools mainly flour barrels sawed in two, with plenty of cob pipes lying about loose, bent over their writing pads and vigorously shoving lead pencils, they make a very picturesque group. A photograph of them then would richly illustrate the pages of a leading magazine, or appropriately adorn the portrait gallery of a police station. The Club is named "The Press Gang," a term which has descended from the time of the war of 1812, and originated in the reprehensible practice of the British authorities of sending "gangs" out to "press" victims into the marine service of that nation. "Press Gang" is a very pretty and appropriate name for the Club. A distinguished characteristic of the "Press Gang" is the reliability of their daily reports of local news to the papers on which they are engaged. Their veracity is proverbial. Everyone relies implicitly on these reports and some people go so far as to set their watches by them. A member of the "Press Gang" can easily be recognized when on the street. He comes up to the citizen, tenderly caresses the citizen's ear, presses the lappel of the citizen's coat between his thumb and forefinger, and softly whispers into the citizen's ear: "Well, anything new?" If the meeting is repeated 60 times in 60 minutes the Bohemian goes through just the same formula, asks the same identical question, and does it in precisely the same tone of voice. The Bohemians enjoy quite an enviable reputation as watermen and it is generally understood that the Club own a dory which was lately launched from near our Common into the Merrimac river across country by horse-power. The "Press Gang" possess other personal and professional virtues which we have neither space nor time to treat of now. On another occasion we may have more to say about the Bohemians of Wade's Block in this city.

A Golden Wedding.

The celebration of the 50th anniversary of the wedding day of Mr. and Mrs. John Burke which was held in the M. E. Church last Tuesday evening, was one of the pleasantest social affairs that has ever taken place in Woburn. It was attended by a large number of the warm personal friends, neighbors and townspeople of the venerable couple and everyone enjoyed it in the highest degree.

Mr. John Burke (formerly senior member of the shoe manufacturing firm of Burke & Mundy of this city) was born at Valenciennes in France on March 14, 1817; his wife was born Elizabeth Nelson Faulkner at Halifax in Nova Scotia on May 1, 1817; and they were joined in wedlock on July 24, 1841, at Halifax, N. S. They have been highly respected residents of Woburn for many years.

The Golden Wedding was a very happy affair for all concerned. The reception held by the remarried couple was at 8 o'clock, at which hour the ladies' parlor of the church was well filled with people from home and abroad. The nuptial ceremonies were pleasing. They opened by singing "Auld Lang Syne" by the company, and were continued by short speeches appropriate to such an interesting occasion. At the proper moment Mr. Hubbard Copeland, in a few well-chosen words, in behalf of the church, of which Mr. and Mrs. Burke are active and worthy members, presented the venerable couple with a generous sum of money and an elegant bouquet. Then Mr. Cyrus Lamb, in behalf of many good neighbors and friends, presented them with a well-filled purse and accompanied the gift with kind, cheery words. Many congratulations were extended to Mr. and Mrs. Burke; many blessings invoked; many more years of happiness bespoken; in all which the JOURNAL desires to be counted.

Richardson—Christie.

On Monday forenoon, July 27, at the home of the bride, Mr. Philip K. Richardson, a prominent and highly esteemed young gentleman of this city, and Miss Roxana B. Christie, an accomplished and popular young lady also of Woburn, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony in the presence of a select company of relatives and friends.

The nuptial ceremony was performed by Rev. Daniel March, D. D., pastor of the First Congregational church of this city, immediately after the close of which the happy couple started for Fort Popham on the Maine coast below Portland, where they will spend their honey-moon.

The JOURNAL extends congratulations and best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Richardson.

Very Much Afraid.

Certain Editors seem very much afraid that those who join the Massachusetts Republican Press Club will have padlocks put upon their lips, irons upon their wrists and shackles upon their feet. To relieve their anxiety the Club has voted to pass no motion that will in any way infringe upon the right of any member to act in public matters according to his best judgment.—Somerville Citizen.

Not nearly so afraid of padlocks as the Editors were to go on with their original design.

A child is not nourished in proportion to the bulk of food he receives into his stomach; he is only nourished by the food he can digest. Every atom of Mellin's Food is assimilable and nourishing. It contains in proper proportions these nitrogenous and phosphatic matters which are so essential for the healthy growth of a child.

City Council.

On the evening of July 24 special meetings of the Board of Aldermen and Common Council were held. All the Aldermen were present except Fowle of Ward 4. Petitions were received from John Harkins and Owen McLaughlin for State aid; John J. Skinner and others for electric light on Main street, at the corner of Charles. Each referred to committees.

The following Order was adopted: That a new four-room school building be constructed on the Page Eaton lot, so called, at Central Square, in accordance with plans and specifications submitted by J. Merrill Brown, architect, and that the joint special committee on Central Square schoolhouse, be and is hereby authorized to make a contract or contracts for the completion of the same and do anything by them deemed necessary to the proper execution of this order.

The following was also adopted: Be it ordered, That the City Treasurer be authorized under the direction of the Joint Standing Committee on Finance to hire the sum of $20,000 to defray the expense of building the new schoolhouse at Central Square.

The Overseers of the Poor reported for the month of June, 33 families of 130 persons assisted, the total disbursements for the department being $614 29.

The Common Council met as soon as the Aldermen adjourned, and concurred in the action of the upper branch.

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing, by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation, curative power superior to any other article. A Boston lady who knew what she wanted, and whose example is worthy imitation, tells her experience below:

To Get

"In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten days' trial; that if I did not like it I need not pay anything, etc. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I knew what Hood's Sarsaparilla was. I had taken it, was satisfied with it, and did not want any other.

Hood's

When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable, suffering a great deal with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly stand. I looked, and had for some time, like a person in consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me so much good that I wonder at myself sometimes, and my friends frequently speak of it." MRS. ELLA A. GOFF, 61 Terrace Street, Boston.

Opportunities for Stay-at-Homes.

The large class of people known as stay-at-homes, can if they are so inclined, find much enjoyment and amusement at their very doors, in rides about the suburbs or excursions down the harbor. Of course, those who go away from home to pleasanter places for the summer months will take advantage of their opportunities, but a great many of those who go away from home do not go to places that are really pleasanter than home might be if they made the best use of its advantages, and there are many others who cannot get away from home at all. There are countless opportunities of pleasure around Boston for those who know of them, and take advantage of the opportunities that are afforded. If people are content, however, to live the same humdrum life all the year round, they will probably never realize how many opportunities of this kind there are.

Bro. Hobbs of THE WOBURN JOURNAL is of the class that can't get away, but recognizing that a change is necessary, he says:

"After tea on these warm evenings, if one would get to feel very comfortable and entirely content with mundane things, let him or her board a North Woburn open street car and take a ride to Winchester and Medford and back. The little trip is very agreeable taken shortly after dinner; and if there is a plenty of spare time, a ride down there in the forenoon is cooling and comforting. But we prefer the hours after 7 o'clock in the evening for the modest little outing. Then we get the cooler breezes, the early dews, the vespers of the woodland songsters, the fair sunsets, and the peace and rest of the closing hours of the day. It is a pretty ride. There is no more attractive scenery anywhere than that found between Winchester Common and Medford Square. There are wide and charming views from Symmes's Corner. Neat farms and attractive farmhouses are passed all along the route. On Winchester East Side are many handsome residences, lawns and gardens. Medford village boasts of numerous ancient and interesting landmarks, as well as things new and attractive; and the trip all the way from Woburn to Medford is exceedingly pleasant."

This trip can be continued to the beach if desired, making a most enjoyable ride.

Suburban Transit Facilities.

The Rapid Transit Commission has issued a circular directing the committee on railroads to communicate with the several railroad companies having termini in this city to arrange, if possible, interviews with their representatives, in order to see what co-operation, information or suggestions can be had respecting the subject of determining in what manner and to what degree existing steam or street railroad facilities do or do not accommodate the residents of the suburbs included within a circle of 20 miles in diameter, having its centre at the State House.

Investigation will be made in the following particulars: Number and time of trains, time occupied in transit, rates of fare, way stations, freight facilities.

The various railroads and street railways, says the circular, should be requested to furnish the Commission with a complete statement of the services they now perform, including the particulars above, and the number of passengers supplied by each station, also arrangements made as to the receipt and delivery of local freight and the rates charged therefor. Attention will be paid to the improvements within the last 10 years, and what improvements are probable or in contemplation.

Hearings on the above material, also says the circular, given to those living on the lines of the several railroads and street railways, shall be so arranged as to consider common interests at the same time.

At these hearings it is directed that the residents on the lines of these various roads shall be asked to state what objections, if any, they have to the existing methods, and in what way, in their opinion, improvements could be made in any or all of these particulars, and at hearings relating to the system of any of these corporations the representatives of the company shall be invited to be present, and be given the privilege, if they wish, to question the witnesses.

Worlds Fair Notes.

An exhibit from Alaska will be collected under the auspices of the government's Indian bureau and geological department, provided Congress appropriates money for that purpose, as it is expected it will.

Kwong Wo Chiong, a Chinese merchant, in Hong Kong has applied for space for an exhibit of Chinese goods. Applications for space are getting to be very numerous, and already many have been sent in from foreign countries.

McKeesport, Pa., has decided to make a special exhibit at the Exposition, and is now engaged in raising money for that purpose. The News of that city inaugurated the movement, and the common council selected a committee to make arrangements. The industries of McKeesport are allied to those of Pittsburg in character.

Commissioner Hersfield of Montana has asked of Director-General Davis that 200 by 300 feet of space be reserved for Montana. He said that $100,000 would be spent on the building alone, and that the State contemplated constructing a mountain to illustrate placer mining, miners' camps, geysers, waterfalls and other adjuncts of mining regions.

As soon as they can be prepared 100,000 copies will be issued of a fine water color lithograph representing a bird's eye view of the Exposition buildings and grounds. The work will appear in sixteen colors. Charles Graham, the artist of Harper's Weekly, has made the sketches. These lithographs will appear in public places throughout the world.

Burlington.

Rev. C. F. Hersey has returned from his vacation.

The Young People's Society which has recently been formed among the younger attendants of the church and Sunday School has met with a large measure of success and now numbers between thirty and forty members. Last Tuesday evening they met for organization and elected the following list of officers:—Rev. C. F. Hersey, President; W. W. Skelton, Vice President; Miss Cora McIntire, Secretary; Miss Hattie Marion, Treasurer; Rev. C. F. Hersey, F. C. Marion, Miss A. D. Sewall, "Look-out" Committee; Misses S. Endicott, A. Bennett and E. Carter, Mrs. B. Moore and J. Richardson, Prayer Meeting Committee; Miss Carrie Reed, Mrs. E. I. Getchell, R. Waldron, Miss E. Wood and Mrs. F. C. Marion, Social Committee; Misses Lizzie McIntire, Marietta Endicott, Florence Foster, Lottie Rollins and F. C. Pearsons, Flower Committee. After the election of officers a bountiful collation of cake and ice cream was served. A prominent feature of this was a "Young People's Society" cake contributed by Mrs. B. Moore.

So Led Astray.

Brother Hobbs, we are sorry to learn that so staunch and fearless a Republican paper as THE WOBURN JOURNAL should have been so led astray in the matter of this new Republican Club. Why, bless you! Didn't you know that the Democratic Boston Herald, as is its custom, gave a one sided, ridiculous report of that gathering? The country editors who join this club can run their papers as free and do their own thinking just the same as if they were not members. As for the talk that an editor sells his opinions to the State Committee, is bosh of the most audacious kind. The club has been "sat upon" only by the Herald and Globe, and instead of the affair resulting in a "poor, little, pitiable fizzle," it started off Wednesday with a membership of over 20 Republican papers, represented by men of intelligence and "brains," the Democratic press to the contrary, notwithstanding.—Winchester Star.

Twenty members does not strike us as a very big thing to start off a Republican Editors Club for the whole State of Massachusetts with. Likewise, we failed to find in the list of names more than a mere handful of representative newspaper men of our political faith. It didn't seem to us such an "alfired fat dog," after all.

But as they abandoned the original design and organized just a common kind of a Club the JOURNAL hasn't a word further of criticism to offer; contrarywise, it approves of its existence and may conclude to join it one of these days.

Parnell has not been in Parliament since he was married, although important Irish business has been up.

Literary Notices.

THE GARDEN AND FOREST is the leading Horticultural, Landscape and Forestry journal in the United States and is authority on all questions in its special field of literature. Its literary contents are always from the pens of the ablest writers, while its illustrations are by the best artists. Each number contains a deal of useful learning on horticulture and kindred themes. Published by the Garden & Forest Co., N. Y.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for August is a splendid mid-summer number both as to literary contents and illustrations. Some of the articles are New Zealand with 18 illustrations from photographs and drawings. The Visitantes of California, Idaho and Montana. Glimpses of Western Architecture with 9 illustrations taken in Chicago. Nihilists in Paris. London. Some American Riders. Fourth Paper. fully illustrated. Lord Byron's Early School Days. Peter Ibbetson. An Imperative Duty. Luck. In A High Tower. Editorials, Reviews of Books, etc.

HARPER'S is sold by the New England News Co., 14-20 Franklin street, Boston; and by Sparrow Horton at the Old Woburn Bookstore.

THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE for August is an uncommonly bright and attractive number, its table of contents embracing many papers of more than ordinary interest to its thousands of New England readers. Sons and daughters of the Green Mountain State cannot but be greatly pleased with "The State of Vermont," written by Albert Clarke and illustrated with many spirited pictures and portraits from the pencil of Lamont Brown. The paper is an entertaining one even to the general reader and must prove very much more so to the loyal Vermonter. "The Literature of the White Mountains" by William Howe Downs and illustrated with drawings by Sprague is another interesting article. Indeed the entire number is full of good things from cover to cover. In the character of its literature and art productions no periodical in the country excels THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE and only a very few can at all be regarded as approaching anywhere near successful competition. It is a New England product for New England consumption and deserves the best wishes and largest patronage of New England people. Published by the New England Magazine Corporation, 86 Federal Street, Boston.

Sarah O Jewett contributes the leading story of the August WIDE AWAKE, a delightful reminiscence of Lafayette's last visit to America, Peg's Little Chair, The Bride's Bouquet, a charming story, is by Grace W. Soper of the Boston Journal. The Silent Lie, an admirable school story for young folk, by Francis E. Leupp of the Washington Star. Pokeberry Juice and Mullein is a tale that reveals some of the toilet secrets of country girls a generation ago. Mr. Brown's Playfellow, Shells of Sea and Land, The Poppy Bee, and How to Dry Starfishes, are good articles for the lovers of natural history. How the Cossacks Play Polo is a terrible story of a Russian field-sport indulged in by officers of the Imperial Guard. Charlemagne's Housetop Gardens, is a curious bit of mediæval history. Very Old Toys, by Emma B. Day, relates to finds in old Eastern lands. What Seven Indian Boys Did is a true account of some knowledge-loving Alaska boys. Margaret Sidney's Peppers serial has all the interest of a good novel. Miss Matilda Archambeau Van Dorn, is full of amusing developments. Marietta's Good Times are really good times. Men and Things pages abound with original anecdote. The poems are by Kate Putnam Osgood, Maria Johns Hammond, Eli Shepperd, Jane Ellis Joy and Richard Burton. Three especially good things for veranda reading are the Margaret-Patty Letter and An Unominous Opinion and the fine ballad by Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford, Pope's Mother at Twickenham. WIDE AWAKE is $2 40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

The August ARENA is a number that should read. Its table of contents presents a rare literary treat. The failure of a young lady to enter Yale, after signally proving her intellectual capacity to cope with the most brilliant young men with whom she would come in contact, has called general attention to the essentially conservative character of our great educational institutions, where above all places we should find progress and liberality. As if in answer to the hostility of conservatism brought to woman's progress in the intellectual or educational sphere. THE ARENA for August presents no less than eight leading papers from representative thinkers among women of America and Europe, discussing political, educational, social, sociological, economic, and scientific themes, together with two literary papers, one by Miss Amelia B. Edwards, the famed Egyptologist and novelist, who in a most delightful paper writes of her own home life. An excellent portrait of Miss Edwards accompanies this paper. Some of the papers which THE ARENA furnishes are Old Hickory's Ball, The Unity of Germany, Where Shall Lasting Progress Begin? by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, whose fine portrait constitutes the frontispiece of the number; Individuality in Education, Working Women of Today by Helen Campbell; Prisoners of Poverty, A Decade of Retrogression, The Independent Party and Money at Cost; well-filled Editorial Departments, Literary reviews, news and gossip, etc. It is evidently the settled purpose of the management of THE ARENA to make that review a busy man's library. The August ARENA is brilliant and unique.

Political Jottings.

Ex-Senator Farwell of Illinois follows up his violent attack upon President Harrison by a glowing eulogy of Quay.

The American public is in a state of mind when it would give a good deal for an honest, unprejudiced, straightforward statement of the situation of the situation of affairs in Chili, and the probable fortunes of the war.

It matters little what is or is not in the Massachusetts Democratic platform—a Democratic victory in Massachusetts would be heralded through the country next November as a triumph for the party of free coinage, free whisky and free trade.

The favorite free trade humbug that protection "stifles" foreign commerce will now have to be laid away in innocuous desuetude with that other humbug which Mr. Edward Atkinson has so clearly exploded, that the tariff is a tax.

With some of the most conspicuous Democratic organs in Massachusetts booming a free coinage man for Speaker of the National House of Representatives, who is willing to vouch for the financial soundness of the Bay State Democracy?

It is a striking confession of the woful intellectual weakness of the Democratic party in the Northern States that not a single Northern Democratic Congressman is any longer considered worth mentioning in connection with the Speakership.

Sir Henry Parkes continues in power for the present in New South Wales by virtue of an alliance with the labor representatives, to whom he has made important concessions. But he cannot hold this alliance together to sustain a free trade policy.

For the year ending June 30, 1891, the exports of Crefeld, Germany, to this country fell off nearly 18 per cent. The decrease was mainly in plush goods, which fell off 52 per cent. Three-fourths of the shrinkage in the value of the exports occurred in the last quarter of the year.

CHRIST AT THE WELL.

LESSON V, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 2.

Text of the Lesson, John iv, 5-26—Commit Verses, 13, 14—Golden Text, Rev. xxii, 17—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

5. "Then cometh He to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph."

After the passover Jesus and His disciples tarried in Judæa, and many came to Him and were by His disciples baptized (chapter iii, 22; iv, 1, 2). John hearing this rejoiced greatly and was in no way jealous, for his joy was to have people follow Jesus (iii, 29, 30). Jesus, leaving Judæa for Galilee, and passing through Samaria, stops at Sychar. Here was Abram's first resting place and altar in the promised land, and here the Lord appeared to him (Gen. xii, 6, 7). Here also the bones of Joseph were buried (Josh. xxiv, 32). It is about thirty-four miles north of Jerusalem.

6. "Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with His journey, sat thus on the well. It was about the sixth hour."

See the true humanity of Jesus. He was a real man; a long walk made Him tired. His body, although sinless, needed food and drink and rest, just as ours do. He was touched with the feeling of our infirmities and can have compassion on us (Heb. iv, 15; v, 2). When you are weary just tell Him, for He has not forgotten how it feels, and He feels for you.

7. "There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water; Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink."

Jesus knowing all people and all people's hearts, knew just how to approach each of them. He asks this woman to do Him a favor by giving Him a drink of water, while in His heart He thought of the living water which she needed.

8. "For His disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat."

Although he had fed millions of people for forty years with bread from Heaven, and could have commanded birds or an angel to bring food, as in the case of Elijah, yet we never find Him working a miracle for His own benefit.

9. "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans."

The woman is surprised at His request, and gives this as her reason.

10. "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water."

Thus replied Jesus, not heeding her question and statement, but, as in the case of Nicodemus, regarding only her soul and its welfare.

11. "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep—from whence then hast thou that living water?"

We see here the same blindness that was manifest in Nicodemus, proving that the natural man cannot understand the things of God.

12. "Art thou greater than our father Jacob which gave us the well?"

13. "Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again."

Heedless of her foolish questions He keeps to His subject, contrasting the natural water, of which she knew, with the spiritual or living water, of which she knew nothing.

14. "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst."

Or, as He said in chapter vi, 35, "He that cometh to Me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst."

"But the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

It is Himself, the fountain, that He gives to all who receive Him.

15. "Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw."

She is becoming interested, she forgets the barrier between Jew and Samaritan; she asks of Him, but she knows not what she asks, for she still thinks only of this water and this well.

16. "Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither."

Having asked for the water which He had to give, He will now prepare her to receive it, and the first step must be conviction of sin in order to the acceptance of Himself as God's righteousness.

17. "I have no husband. Jesus saith unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband."

She thought to deceive him, she knew Him not, nor for a moment imagined that He could read her inmost thought.

18. "For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband; in that saidst thou truly."

All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do.

"Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet."

Her conscience has been aroused, her eyes are being opened; she finds that she is talking with no ordinary man.

20. "Our fathers worshiped in this mountain; and ye say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship."

She would fain turn away from the subject of her own sin and lead the conversation into another channel.

21. "Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh when ye shall, neither in this mountain nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father."

He does not insist that Jerusalem is the place. He directs her away from places of worship to the great and only object of worship, even God the Father. Neither place nor sect are the all important points, but an honest, humble heart.

22. "Ye worship ye know not what. We know what we worship, for salvation is of the Jews."

God was pleased to reveal Himself in Israel and through Israel to other nations.

23. "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship Him."

Notice the words "and now is" in verses 21, 22.

24. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

What a word is here for us, with our fine church buildings, and splendid music, and attractive ritual which we call worship!

25. "I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ. When He is come He will tell us all things."

Perhaps wondering in her heart, even as she said it, if she had not found Him, for no one had ever talked to her like this.

26. "Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am He."

Now, it is all told, the Father is revealed in the Son, and she has seen the Saviour, the Christ, the King of Israel. He laid bare all her sin, and yet did not condemn her, for He came to save, not to condemn.

THE POPULAR SIDE.

Drifting along with the current strong,
Questioning not be it right or wrong,
Asking not, "To what does this tend?
Where are we going, and what is the end?"

Sailing along with the rising breeze,
O'er placid river or rolling seas,
Yielding all to the current's force,
Using no compass to mark the course.

Drifting along on the sea of the world,
With rudderless keel and sails unfurled,
On the popular current how easy to ride,
With hundreds of others side by side!

Throw away purity, honor and truth,
Sterling integrity taught in youth;
They are but comfortless, old fashioned things;
Sometimes the conscience is waked by their stings.

Merrily onward our bright boats glide,
Pleasure notes sounding on every side,
But silent and deep is the undertow,
Hate and hypocrisy hidden below.

On with the current and over the seal
Does any one know where the landing will be?
'Tis easy to sail in the current's wide track,
But we'll do some hard pulling before we get back.

—Cora Reynolds in Woman's Journal.

Only a Simple Question.

Senator Zeb Vance, of North Carolina, while at the Palace hotel, San Francisco, with a party of friends, noticed a young man with a slight limp walk across the corridor and pause to glance at the register. The senator eyed him for a moment, and turning to a reporter said: "You didn't know that I limped for years, did you? Well, I was hit in the leg by a Federal bullet that caused me no little inconvenience. I got around pretty well; but while standing in Jackson, Miss., I noticed a long haired countryman eying me pretty closely, and he finally approached me.

"'Look here, my friend,' he said, 'I don't want to appear curious, but I would like to know if you're really lame.'

"I replied that I was.

"'Well, you'll excuse me, won't you? I just kinder thought I'd ask, reckonin' you wouldn't get riled about it. Wounded, I suppose, in the war?

"'Yes, I was wounded,' I said abruptly.

"'You see, I don't know, and I'd like to ask you another question,' still eying me critically.

"'Go ahead. What is it?

"'I'd just like to know if you was shot runnin' or caught in a trap?'

"Everybody roared who heard it."—Louisville Post.

A Modern Jenny Geddes.

A startling incident occurred at the anniversary services of the West United Presbyterian church at Kirriemuir, entirely without a parallel in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. On Sunday afternoon the minister was calmly preaching his sermon, when a modern Jenny Geddes, infuriated at one of the male members of the choir being asleep, hurled her Bible at the head of the delinquent from the gallery where she was sitting. The Bible missed the sleeper, but struck the shoulder of another man in the choir, who started up amazed.

The minister became pale, paused in his discourse and exclaimed, "What's wrong?" "The Bible struck the wrang man," she cried, rising up in her pew, although her friends vainly attempted to hold her down, "'twas meant to waunken the sinfu' sleeper. "Strange to say, all present retained their gravity, not the ghost of a smile becoming apparent on the faces of the astounded congregation.—London Tit-Bits.

A Club Where Waiters Get No Fees.

A friend of mine asked me over to the Hanover club to take dinner, and when we had finished he gave the waiter a cigar. Said he: "Waiters who accept fees in this club are subject to instant dismissal, and we have found that the rule works very well. When the fee expecting waiter is more busy watching the man who, after eating his dinner, is about to leave than he is attending to the wants of newcomers, it must follow that there is a good deal of dissatisfaction. Now, when the waiters know that they have nothing to look for, they are equally obliging to all and do infinitely better than when on the constant lookout for tips. I gave my waiter a cigar because he would have risked his place had he accepted money, and I certainly did not want to let him run that chance."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Perhaps the best known pearl necklace in London, England, is that of the Countess Tolstoi, wife of the sturdy Radical, Philip Stanhope, M. P. The gems are not only large and perfect in shape, but are nearly black, a peculiarity which, though some think does not add to beauty, is, by reason of its rarity, exceptionally valuable.

HOW TO STUDY BOTANY.

The First Thing to Do Is to Learn the Names of Common Wild Flowers.

Most young people find botany a dull study. So it is, as taught from the text books in the schools, but study it yourself in the fields and woods and you will find it a source of perennial delight. Find your flower and then name it by the aid of the botany. There is so much in a name. To find out what a thing is called is a great help. It is the beginning of knowledge; it is the first step.

When we see a new person who interests us we wish to know his or her name. A bird, a flower, a place—the first thing we wish to know about it is its name. Its name helps us to classify it; it gives us a handle to grasp it by; it sheds a ray of light where all before was dark. As soon as we know the name of a thing we seem to have established some sort of relation with it.

The other day, while the train was delayed by an accident, I wandered a few yards away from it along the river margin seeking wild flowers. Should I find any whose name I did not know? While thus loitering a young English girl also left the train and came in my direction, plucking the flowers right and left as she came. But they were all unknown to her. She did not know the name of one of them, and she wished to send them home to her father too. With what satisfaction she heard the names! The words seemed to be full of meaning to her, though she had never heard them before in her life. It was what she wanted. It was an introduction to the flowers, and her interest in them increased at once.

"That orange colored flower which you just plucked from the edge of the water, that is our jewel weed," I said.

"It looks like a jewel," she replied.

"You have nothing like it in England, or did not have till lately; but I hear it is now appearing along certain English streams, having been brought from this country."

"And what is this?" she inquired, holding up a blue flower with a very bristly leaf and stalk.

"That is viper's bugloss or blueweed, a plant from your side of the water, one that is making itself thoroughly at home along the Hudson and in the valleys of some of its tributaries among the Catskills. It is a rough, hardy weed, but its flower, with its long, conspicuous purple stamens and blue corolla, as you see, is very pretty.

"Here is another emigrant from across the Atlantic," I said, holding up a cluster of small white flowers each mounted upon a little inflated brown bag or balloon—the bladder campion. "It also runs riot in some of our fields as I am sure you will not see it at home." She went on filling her hands with flowers, and I gave her the names of each—sweet clover or melilotus, probably a native plant, vervain (foreign), purple loosestrife (foreign), toad flax (foreign), chelone, or turtle head, a native, and the purple mimulus or monkey flower, also a native. It was a likely place for the cardinal flower, but I could not find any. I wanted this hearty English girl to see one of our native wild flowers, so intense in color that it would fairly make her eyes water to gaze upon it.

Just then the whistle of the engine summoned us all aboard, and in a moment we were off.—John Burroughs in St. Nicholas.

A Question That Startled Mr. Clews.

Coming out of the court room one day two lawyers were conversing.

"That was a very bright reply, indeed," said one, "and did it ever occur to you that often such things lead to success in business, as much so as some subtle maneuver in trade? Apropos, quick repartee is a wonderful weapon. Many a man who imagined he was soaring to the very heights of eloquence has been cut down by a word. I remember of hearing that on one occasion at a dinner Henry Clews was making a speech, in the course of which he referred to himself as a self made man.

"'Gentlemen,' said he, 'I am a self made man.' Shaking his head vigorously, which is as innocent of hair as the outside of an egg, he repeated, 'a self made man.'

"He paused a moment, when William B Travers, who was present, said to him with that well known stutter that gave point to his utterances:

"'W w well, Clews, w w when you m m made yourself w w why didn't you make some hair."—New York Press.

Some Odd Comparisons.

A railway train, at a continuous speed of forty miles an hour, would pass from the earth to the moon in a little more than eight months; to the planet Venus, in seventy-one and a half years, and would reach the sun in two hundred and sixty odd years. A ray of light will pass from the moon to the earth in a trifle over a single second; from Venus to the earth in a little more than two minutes, and from the sun to this little sphere of ours in about eight minutes. If this same comparison were applied to the fixed stars it would be still more startling.—St. Louis Republic.

Assisting the Parson.

A preacher, raising his eyes from his desk in the midst of his sermon, was paralyzed with amazement to see his rude boy in the gallery pelting the hearers in the pews below with horse chestnuts. But while the good man was preparing a frown of reproof, the young hopeful cried out:

"You 'tend to your preaching, daddy; I'll keep 'em awake."—London Tit-Bits.

Failures in Life.

People fail in many ways. In business, in morality, in religion, in happiness, and in health. A weak heart is often an unsuspected cause of failure in life. If the blood does not circulate properly in the lungs, there is shortness of breath, asthma, etc.; in the brain, dizziness, headache, etc.; in the stomach, wind, pain, indigestion, faint spells, etc.; in the liver, torpidity, congestion, etc. Paine in the left side, shoulder and stomach is caused by heart strain. For all these maladies Dr. Miles' New Cure for the heart and lungs is the best remedy. Sold by Charles H. Buss.

STORY OF AN EX-BRAKEMAN.

Driven from His Position by Horrors Incidental to His Calling.

"I was a brakeman on the Harlem road before I entered the ministry," said a well known Brooklyn preacher to me, "but it was only for a little while. It proved to be a horrible calling. It was only a few days after I had been installed in my position when I received the first shock to my nerves. We were just on the point of crossing a small bridge that spanned a shallow stream of water when I heard the whistle blown for 'down brakes.'

"I put on the brake as hard as I could and then looked ahead of the train. I was just in time to see a man running for his life across the bridge on a narrow board footway. The train was slowly losing its momentum, but it was too late to save the man from death, for just as he had about reached a place of safety the engine hit him and he was knocked over into the water.

"When the train had been stopped we went down and recovered the poor fellow's corpse. His skull had been cleanly split in two and the water had washed out his brains. The body was placed in the baggage car, on which I worked, and I was forced to gaze upon the ghastly spectacle until we reached the next station, where the dead man was turned over to the authorities.

"As if that were not enough to produce a lasting horrible impression upon my mind, I received another and perhaps more frightful shock two weeks later. It was on the same bridge. I again heard the dreaded signal for 'down brakes.' This time I put all the strength I could command into my effort and keyed the brake up to the last notch I was able to force it to. The next instant the chain broke, and the train, which was gradually being halted, bounded forward with new impetus and another man was killed.

"It seems that he had tried to save himself by clasping his hands over one of the ties and hanging below the train until it had passed. He had succeeded in locking his hands around the timber, but did not have time to duck his head before the cowcatcher struck his neck, cut off his head close to the shoulders and tossed it into the water. When we went back to recover the body we found, to our surprise, the headless corpse of the man with its hands still linked in the grip of death around the railroad tie.

"That settled it with me, and I resigned my place forthwith. I have not touched a brake since that day."—New York Herald.

Sorting and Cleaning Wool.

The wool comes into the mill dirty, greasy, burry, sometimes washed by the farmer, but generally just as it is sheared from the sheep, a filthy an dunwholesome thing, giving little sign of the beautiful, white and flossy substance into which it is soon converted. It must first be sorted, each fleece containing from six to eight qualities of sorts, which the careful manufacturer separates, devoting each quality to the purpose for which it is best suited. No skill in carding, spinning, weaving or finishing can possibly produce a soft or fine piece of goods from a coarse, hard fiber.

When a woolen thread is to be spun to the length of 15,360 yards to a pound, or in the case of a worsted thread to twice that number of yards to the pound, everything depends upon care in the selection of the fleece and in the sorting. The sorts are impregnated with a greasy substance called the yolk or suint, caused by the animal secretions and the perspiration of the skin, a compound of potash and animal fat, which must be completely eradicated. The elimination of the yolk, dirt and foreign substances common to all wools results in a shrinkage of from 50 to 70 per cent.—S. N. D. North in Popular Science Monthly.

The Baleful East Wind.

That wind from any one of the four cardinal or intermediate points should have a more depressing effect upon the human system than that from any or all of the other points seems like sheerest nonsense. In these days, however, we cannot forego scientific testimony. Dr. Richards says: "That all nervous conditions in which, for want of a more correct term, we say 'the nervous tone is lowered,' are much intensified by the east wind. Indeed, the special action of this peculiar wind is to produce 'want of tone,' or debility. Under its influence almost all sick persons say they are depressed; they do not complain of reduced appetite nor of pain intensified, but they declare that they are rendered prostrate both in mind and body. In brief, if a single word were wanted to express the morbid effect of an east wind on a sick man that word would be 'prostration.'" — St. Louis Republic.

Helping the Recording Angel.

"Please light your cigar well before leaving, so that the recording angel will have less work to do," reads a sign posted in front of the cigar lighter in a tobacconist's store in Whitehall street.

I asked the man behind the counter to explain the sign.

"It means," said he, "that you should see that your weed is perfectly lit before you leave the store, so that you will not have to stop a man in the street and ask him for a light. Every man that hands his cigar to a stranger to pull at for fire is supposed to swear inwardly at the annoyance and the probable damage to his own cigar. That makes work for the recording angel."—New York Herald.

How Tall Chimneys Oscillate.

The extent or degree of the oscillation of tall chimneys may be exactly taken by a close observation of the shadows they cast upon the ground. An instance to the point is that of a chimney 115 feet high and four feet in diameter externally at the top, near Marseilles, France, the oscillations of which were observed by the shadow during a high wind to attain a maximum of over twenty inches.—Detroit Free Press.

I suffered from acute inflammation in my nose and head—for a week at a time I could not see. I used Ely's Cream Balm and in a few days I was cured. It is wonderful how quick it helped me.—Mrs Georgie S. Judson, Hartford, Conn.

For three weeks I was suffering from a severe cold in my head, accompanied by a pain in the temples. Ely's Cream Balm was recommended to me. After only six applications of the Balm every trace of my cold was removed.—Henry C. Cleark, New York Appraiser's Office.

What Happens If You Take Arsenic.

When a single dose of arsenic in sufficient quantity to be felt has been taken, colicky pains, bowel disorder and perhaps nausea result. In the course of an hour after a poisonous dose has been taken an intense burning pain is felt in the œsophagus and stomach. This spreads to the entire anterior portion of the lower part of the trunk. A sense of constriction at the throat and an acrid, metallic taste accompany the pain. Then vomiting and relaxation of the bowels begin. As the case progresses the symptoms increase in intensity. Then comes a thirst that water will not allay, although it apparently increases the stomach disturbance. The victim groans and writhes.

Now he implores the doctor to save him. Then he begs to be killed and put out of pain. The extremities become icy. The pulse is small, feeble and frequent, and the breathing is labored, embarrassed and painful because of abdominal tenderness. The surface of the body becomes dark and of that bluish color that medical men call cyanosed. Violent cramps add their torture, exhaustion becomes collapse, convulsions or coma ensue, and death ends the agony. This torture lasts sometimes from five to twenty hours.

In some cases these symptoms occur, but in a modified form, and the doctor will apparently get the better of the disease. The remission will be but for a day or two. Then the abdomen will swell and icy coldness will pervade the frame. Shivering will become pronounced trembling. Then cramps, convulsions and death.—Kansas City Star.

An Apt Rebuke.

There is a Unitarian clergyman who is not without a power of keen retort, and who is none the less gifted with the grace to command his tongue rather than allow his tongue to command him. He has in his congregation one of those women who make a pretense of frankness an excuse for rudeness, and who are given to boasting that they are plain spoken, when the truth is that they are simply ill bred and insolent. This especial lady is wealthy, and there are not many in the list of her acquaintances who dare rebuke her, albeit they do together console each other for the wounds they suffer from her tongue by abusing her roundly.

It chanced that one evening the lady and the clergyman were partners at whist at the house of a common friend, and so successful were they that they won almost every game for the evening. Like people who are fond of having their own way, the lady was in high humor over the success, and when the play was over she pushed back her chair from the table with the characteristic and graceful remark to her partner:

"You do play a good game of whist, Mr. Blank. If you only preached as well as you play, whist it would be a treat to go to church to hear you."

The clergyman was quite equal to the occasion. He kept his temper and his face under perfect control as he replied:

"Thank you, Miss Sharp; but you know anybody can learn to play whist, while genius and good breeding come by grace of God."—Boston Courier.

New Circuit Transfer System.

A system has been designed to meet a new but promising demand for the use of private telephone and telegraph facilities by subscribers whose business with their correspondents at distant points will not warrant the expense of a wire for their own use exclusively. The new system transfers a wire simultaneously at both ends from one pair of subscribers to another every five minutes if desired. The service is divided into segments, and if a subscriber and his correspondent are connected at one segment they can communicate for five minutes each hour by paying the minimum fixed yearly rental for these facilities.

Should they find that their business required ten minutes each hour they could be connected to two adjoining segments, or, if preferred, to one segment on each side of the segment circle, which would enable them to communicate for five minutes every half hour. Other subscribers would have the line for whatever portion of the time they arranged for, the object being to accommodate subscribers with whatever facilities they choose to pay for.—New York Telegram.

How Some Words Were Derived.

A stentorian voice is that of one like the Grecian herald in the Trojan war, whom Homer describes as "great hearted, brazen voiced Stentor, accustomed to shout as loud as fifty other men."

A raglan is a loose overcoat with long sleeves, such as Lord Raglan wore in the Crimean war. Wellingtons are boots named after the Iron Duke. Bluchers are also boots, named after the commander of Wellington's Prussian allies at Waterloo.

Any magnificent tomb is called a mausoleum. Mausolus, the Carian king whose name it bears, had nothing whatever to do with the original except to lie in it when he was dead. The piety of his wife, Artemisia, gave his name to the tomb and immortality to her husband's memory, because the monument she built over his body gave a word to language. The magnolia bears the name of Pierre Magnol, professor of medicine at Montpellier, France, in the Seventeenth century, and Dahl, a Swedish botanist, has his name embalmed in the dahlia.—Harper's Young People.

Short Work of a Troublesome Case.

One day I was taken with Paralysis of the Bowels. The stomach and other organs lost all power of action. Although opposed to proprietary medicines, I tried Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. To make a long story short, it saved my life. It is the best medicine in the world for difficulties of the kidneys, liver and bowels.—A. J. Gifford, Lowell, Mass.

THE HAUNTED INN.

A Legend of Woburn.

BY P. L. CONVERSE.

"Whence and what art thou, Execrable Shape?"
—Milton.

In days long gone, somewhere sixty years ago,
There stood, just where the "Central House" now stands,
A tavern, kept by Marshall Fowle, of mem'ry green,
At which the incidents occurred, which form my theme.

Right in the street, in front, an ancient elm stood,
And willows two, of monstrous size, with branches wide,
'Tween which were troughs where country swain and maid,
Fed their tired horses in the leafy shade.

But when the wintry winds, or spring and autumn rains,
Drove man and beast, some friendly nook to seek
For shelter, a long shed, with racks and open space
Beneath, furnished, at southern end, the place.

The long unfinished loft above, afforded room
For doves to roost, while every now and then an owl,
With noiseless wing, and dismal hungry hoot,
Visited the Colony of doves, the squabs to loot.

Lake many other country inns, this old one had,
Next to the shed, an extra room, where finer guests
Were lodged in statelier shape, but this, because Of rattling chains, and ghostly groans, deserved was.

In fact, the bravest held their breath, in terror dumb,
When clanking sounds, with sobs and moans, drove sleep away.
For months had Marshall tried the cause to ascertain,
And scare or drive the ghost away, but all in vain.

At last, one winter day, a man of high renown,
Potter, ventriloquist, magician fine, well
Known to all the country round, came with his kit
And with the crowd with magic feats, their cash to get.

The house was full; all but the ghost haunted room.
None other offered. Potter so told, accepted
The dread trial, hoping by hocus pocus,
To find and scare the ghost from his old locus.

To bed he went. The wintry winds blew fiercely
Cold. The moans and groans pervaded all the room.
But Potter, used to notice tricks, and study cause,
Set his keen wits to trace the sounds by nature's laws.

He first observed, that when the wind increased,
More loud, more dismal seemed the sound; but when it
Lulled, the ghost, in whispered zephyrs breathed
More softly; but his ear caught other wheezy moans.

Before the morning sun rose on the snowy scene,
The wind had ceased, so had the ghostly noise;
But Potter saw a poor asmathic dove, right
Near; her wheezy breath disclosed the sobs at night.

On closer search, a splinter, made by driving
Nails was found, which reed like, gave out long drawn groans.
While the wind blew strong, and made the blood to freeze;
But when the wind and dove left, gone was the noise.

And in the openings through which passed the doves,
A shingle, by careless hands was swinging left,
Which moved by passing birds, with ghostly din
Clanked horrid, and gave color to the "Haunted Inn."

Thus Potter, by his common sense and careful thought,
Found out the ghost, and drove him from the house.
While th' unthinking crowd, this feat seemed done
By aid of Satan, only by his skill 'twas won.

So ever after, when he came to play his feats
Of magic, the people cried, "he could not do
Such things alone. 'Twas by the Devil's aid,
And black art words like "Presto," which he said."

Woburn, August 1, 1891.

A Trapper's Life.

The winter, though not without its excitements, is a long and lonely one, and the work very hard. For six months you see no living soul and have only your dog for company. Very likely, too, you may be poorly paid for your time. I trapped one whole winter and only caught four marten by my land trapping. After I had been at it for a time I saw that there were no marten in the country, and as I happened to have two No. 4 traps with me I started trapping otter and caught thirty-seven during the winter.

When the trapping is at an end, you begin to think of getting your fur to market. The skins must first be got out to your canoe, if you are trapping on the coast or a large river, or else out to some settlement. The furs are made up into bales of a size convenient for packing and carried out, a cache being made of your first load if you have to make two or more trips. Then your canoe is stowed and you set sail for your maket, which on this northern coast is generally Victoria, where the skins are sold at auction.

Nothing definite can be said about the returns in this business. Much depends on the skill and industry of the trapper, and quite as much on the abundance or scarcity of the fur. About the best winter I ever made in land trapping was twenty fishers and from 180 to 190 marten. Besides this regular fur a man may pick up odds and ends by steel traps and poison; a bear or two, a few wolves, perhaps a wolverine. These would bring in a few dollars in addition to the regular catch. Then, too, a man may have an opportunity on his way down the coast to catch a few otter or bear or to trade for a few furs with the Indians, but on the whole, even in the best of years, a man got but small return for a season which lasted perhaps from August 1 to June 1.—Forest and Stream.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his Stomach was disordered his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters curee him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O, had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold at F. E. Lovell's Drug Store.

"Early and often" should be the advertiser's motto.

News and Their Friends.

A newspaper, if it has any brains, conscience and muscle back of it, must continually decide between doing its duty and injuring its pocket. In any position but that of an editor the public is able to separate the individual homo from the collective citizen. But if the editor does not please them, it's his pocket they aim at. Thus it is that newspapers learn who their friends are. The man who reads a newspaper and admires it all the year around, yet gives his business support to some other concern, whose principles he detests, is not a friend of the former paper.

Admiration alone will not run a newspaper. Sooner or later such admirers will find that the object of their affections has become wedded to other ways that they do not admire—in other words, a newspaper is compelled, in order to live, to seek the friendship of those who are not so platonic in their love, but unite that practical esteem with sentiment that binds mutual admiration in other professions. There are too many men who expect an editor to slave in defense of their pet notions and hobbies, advocate their views against the strongest opposition, and coolly withhold the business support by which alone a small newspaper can live.

Talk about a newspaper having a public duty to perform, and an editor having to labor for his principles, is cheap when others stand back and while extending a lukewarm neutrality with one hand, are filling their pockets with the other hand as a result of the editor's labor for his principles, which they admire but do not support.—Clinton Enterprise.

The World's Fair.

The excitement caused by this great event is scarcely equaled by that produced by the great discovery of Dr. Miles—the Restorative Nervine. It speedily cures nervous prostration, change of life, pain, dullness and confusion in head, fits sleeplessness, the blues, neuralgia, palpitation, monthly pains, etc. C. W. Snow & Co., of Syracuse, N. Y.; Talbot & Moss, of Greensburg, Ind., and A. Blackburn of Wooster, O., say that "The Nervine sells better than anything we ever sold, and gives universal satisfaction." Dr. Miles' new illustrated treatise on the Nerves and Heart and trial bottle free at Charles H. Buss's drug store.

Chicago's Park and Parkways.

The parks and parkways of Chicago are of a type the outgrowth of her natural landscape conditions and the characteristics of her people. Between the great lake on the east and the prairie main land on the west is a low, swampy tract diversified by sand ridges washed up by the storm waves and shifted about by the winds. The lake in some places encroaches upon the land, and at other points extends the shore by the forming of sand bars. Upon such a site was founded Chicago, and upon such a soil has she built her parks and boulevards.

The wide streets were rescued as rapidly as possible from their primitive condition of alternate mud and dust, graded and laid with the most approved forms of pavement. The fondness of the people for riding and driving, that led them at an early day to provide so amply for public ways, caused the feature of fine driveways to be prominent when the public parks were to be made. —Harper's Weekly.

"Just As Good,"

Say some dealers who try to sell a substitute preparation when a customer calls for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Do not allow any such false statements as this to induce you to buy what you do not want. Remember that the only reason for making it is that a few cents more profit will be made on the substitute. Insist upon having the best medicine—Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is Peculiar to Itself.

Mrs. Livermore's Advice.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, in her address on "Woman's Work in the Temperance Reform," at the National Temperance Convention, Saratoga, last week, spoke of the opportunities for women to promote temperance in their homes and in the schools, and along other social and educational lines. She pointed finally to the fact that "sooner or later, in our country, all political conviction crystalizes into ballots, and because women are refused this expression they work at great disadvantage." She advised temperance women to "be prompt to recognize not only those individuals but those political parties which take a stand for prohibition, tendering them their sympathies and prayers. But let women stand aloof from alliance with any and all, and seek the ballot for themselves."

A Suggestion That Saved My Life.

I took a severe cold and suffered pain through the back and kidneys. I sent for a physician, who pronounced my case Gravel. A friend recommended Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., and after taking two bottles I considered myself perfectly cured.—John Davies, Rochester, N. Y. What more could be asked?

Savings Banks' Depositors.

At the close of the year 1890 the savings banks in the United States numbered 860, with savings deposits amounting to $1,524,844,506, divided among 4,258,893 depositors, being an average of $358.04. The depositors in the banks of New York state numbered 1,420,997, with deposits amounting to $550,066,657, being an average to each depositor of $387.10. California is credited with the largest average sum to each depositor, the amount being $787.74. The smallest average of all states is in West Virginia, where the amount is $48.19.—New York Recorder.

HE MADE AND SPENT FORTUNES.

Ups and Downs of an Operator Who Was Twice a Millionaire.

Maurice Hoeflich's suicide after eight months of illness, mental and physical, made things on the Stock exchange rather serious and gloomy.

The dead man was for years one of the boldest operators, and everybody knew him, and everybody had a story to tell about poor Hoeflich.

Everybody liked him, and not one of the stories showed him in a bad light. He died poor after having made a half a dozen fortunes. He was worth over a million dollars when Sierra Nevada was worth over $200 a share. But he was not satisfied with the great fortune he realized then, so he joined the ranks of the sanguine spirits who were sure that the North End stock would touch $1,000 before it broke. So he lost his million or more.

There were a score of suicides then, but Hoeflich did not appear to take his losses very hard, and pretty soon he was deep into Hale & Norcross, winning another fortune. It is not likely that he ever lost much in Hale & Norcross, but he got into the mines of the Tuscarora district, the Commonwealth mines and some others, and they swallowed up all he made. Year after year he dropped his money into these holes. No one knows exactly what they cost him, but it was enough to make several big fortunes.

Probably it was this continual run of misfortune that at last broke down his mind. When he first began to fail his many friends stood by him, and he seemed to improve. He was for a time at the German hospital, and then he got well enough to go to the house of a friend.

His suicide was a surprise. He seemed almost his old self when he went to bed on Thursday night. He shot himself an hour or so later. It is evident, however, that his suicide was deliberate. He never kept a weapon, and it is supposed that he bought one just for the purpose.

Hoeflich was a man of nerve, and he probably simply thought over his affairs and concluded that it was not worth while to struggle on. So he ended it.

They tell a story of how Hoeflich made $50,000 without knowing it. He and Johnny Skae were on Montgomery street and two Chinamen were walking ahead of them. They laid a big wager as to which Chinaman would speak first. They followed the Celestials for blocks, but not a word was said by either. The Chinamen went down to the docks, still followed by the two rich men. The Chinamen went on board a steamer and the bettors went too. Neither would give up. The steamer was well on her way to Honolulu before they found out that the Chinamen were the star pupils of the deaf and dumb branch of the Chinese mission, and the bettors had to hire a tug to return to the city. While they were away stocks went up and Hoeflich was $50,000 richer.—San Francisco Examiner.

His Latest Disillusion.

"I have had my share of disappointments," said a man with mended eyeglasses and hair oil on his rather long locks. He had strolled over to talk to the man in charge of the billiard room at the hotel. "I have seen the roses drop their petals and the leaves tremble under the caresses of the wind till it grew tired and cast them away."

"Have you, now?" asked the man in charge.

"Yes, sir. I have seen all the dazzling hues of fortune merged in one vast rainbow of hope that seemed to encircle the whole world, and I have stood and watched that rainbow fade."

"That's a darn shame," said the man in charge.

"Yes, it is. But the worst shock my soul ever experienced it felt today. I had been suffering from the heart. Once I discovered suddenly that I suffered no more. I glanced around me, and my eye fell on a polar bear nibbling delicate Charlotte russes of snow from the edge of an iceberg. It was the enchantment of my good fairy, and I was reveling in it when suddenly"——

"What was it, sir?"

"A bellboy who was carrying a pitcher of water kicked my chair from under me, and I discovered that I had tilted my chair and gone to sleep with my back against the water cooler."—Washington Post.

One Way to Get New Toys.

The two children of a well known writer, whose temper is as quick as his heart is generous, are used to receiving armfuls of toys after they have been punished for any misdemeanor. Of late they have been very good, or their father's mind has been uncommonly calm and unruffled, and as a natural consequence the stock of playthings has run low. One afternoon the mother overheard the curly haired boy saying to the blond little girl, as they sat on the floor and raced a three legged horse against a wooden cow with two broken horns: "Can't we plague papa somehow tonight, Bessie? We really must fix it so's to get a whipping."—New York Recorder.

Unreasonable Curiosity.

Before a young man marries he should learn not to ask foolish questions.

"What, my angel," exclaimed a youthful husband bursting into the kitchen, "doing the cooking yourself! What is it?"

"Why, Edgar, how foolish of you! How in the world can I tell until I see what it turns out?"—Youth's Companion.

All Aroken Down.

Is it not sad to see so many young men every day of whom this can be said? Young man, take my advice. Stop all indiscretions which you have practiced, keep good hours, retire early, and build up your shattered system by using Sulphur Bitters, which will cure you.—Old Physician.

Advertising, like the honey bee, should have its sting in the tail.

Guards Around Treasures.

Few people who gaze upon the treasures inclosed within the fragile glass cases near the main entrance of the National Museum dream that any material protection guards them from burglarious and predatory paws, save that a watch is kept, as a matter of course, by persons in charge. Gold and silver by the hundredweight are there exposed to view, while the intrinsic and historical value of the exhibits mounts up into the millions. Yet all is open, with only thin sheets of crystal between the avaricious visitor and the precious property of the American people.

Let the would be robber try it then; let him wait, and when he is perfectly certain the guard is not looking, lay hands on so much as one small copper penny of historic date exposed behind the glass. Lo! an alarm rings through the building, and from all sides the attendants flock to the rescue. The thief learns, too late for profitable information, that each copper, silver or gold piece in every case has a separate attachment to the burglar alarm in the building. The accessibility of the costly objects is only apparent; the entire police of Washington is guarding them day and night.

EDITOR BARRETT FOR CRAPO.

Last Friday morning, we believe it was, the Boston Advertiser, owned and edited by Hon. W. E. Barrett, Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, came out flat-footed for Mr. Crapo for Governor. He made no half-way work of it, but avowed himself in favor of the New Bedford statesman without ifs or ands and promised him the support of his journals.

The curious thing about this movement of Mr. Barrett is that up to the moment it was made he himself was supposed to be a candidate for the nomination, and not only so but he was considered to be ahead in the race. His campaign was bitterly opposed by the "Old Guard" and whether he was frightened off the track by them, or whether the future will show that there was a big cat under the meal, is a question. The latter is the more likely to prove true, and if we are correct in thinking so Barrett will be Governor of this Commonwealth in 1892 in spite of all the "Old Guard" or anybody else can do to prevent it.

THE VETERANS.

The Grand Army of the Republic are celebrating their 25th, or silver, anniversary at Detroit, Michigan, this week, and from news received from there it is safe to say that the thousands of Veterans who wore the blue in 1861-5 now assembled in fraternal reunion from every State and Territory in the Union are being royally entertained by the big-hearted Michaganders and having a splendid time.

Reports place the number of G. A. R. men present at over 30,000—about the size of the display they made in Boston last year—and among them are many of the most distinguished citizens of this Nation—men who won fame in the Army and have added to it by the practice of statesmanship since. Ex-President Hayes was there and on Tuesday and received a splendid ovation from "the boys."

The next annual gathering of the G. A. R. is to be held at Washington, D. C.

HELD A MEETING.

A meeting of the Republican Editors Club of the State was held in Boston last Wednesday at which the names of many new members were enrolled. Much enthusiasm characterized the gathering and great achievements by the Club were predicted. Mr. W. H Cook of the Milford Journal was elected Chairman of the Executive Committee.

A new name was chosen for the organization, namely: "The Republican Editorial Association of Massachusetts (R. E. A. M.)." The next meeting will be held on the 19th instant.

INCLINED TO KICK.

A report is current that Republican politicians in the heart of the Commonwealth are dissatisfied with Editor Barrett's candidate for Governor. As a rule they oppose Crapo and favor Allen of Lowell for whom a strong fight will be made. They give some very good reasons why Mr. Crapo ought not to be selected for the Republican standard-bearer this year.

Collector Beard and his followers, including Congressman Lodge, want Allen, but Editor Barrett's man will probably secure the prize—at least that is the way the thing looks to a person up a tree.

— Our Wilmington subscribers, friends and acquaintances will please be informed that Mr. N. Z. Tabor, the old, upright and reliable fish marketman of Woburn, will visit Wilmington every Tuesday forenoon with just as good fish, clams, oysters, etc., as ever lived which he will sell to the people aforesaid at the very lowest figures for cash. Tabor can be depended on every time.

— The family of Mr. E. G. Clough, the hardware merchant, and Miss Maria Johnson, daughter of John Johnson, Esq., Canal street, will pass the remainder of August at the Irving House on Mablehead Neck. Mr. Clough will make frequent visits to the Irving.

— A great many people leave here on the morning trains for the beaches and return in the evening. A good many go on the street cars too. By either line the beaches can be reached after a ride in the comfortable open cars, and not a few people prefer that way to the steam cars.

— Mr. John E. Gilcreast, Clerk in the Woburn Gaslight Company's office, returned from a very pleasant visit to his brother Frank in Pennsylvania last Monday evening. He enjoyed himself every moment while away, and recounts the incidents of his trip and visit with much satisfaction.

— Delinquent taxes make City Collector Maguire tired. Their serious contemplation makes him look haggard. This to his credit however: No Collector of taxes has ever called for less abatements in proportion to commitments, in Woburn or out of it, than Collector John G. Maguire.

— Capt. Homer Grant returned from Nova Scotia last Saturday evening after a very fine visit of two weeks down there with near relatives. He left his sister Blanche with them where she will remain for a month longer and probably until the father, Mr. Alexander Grant, goes down after her.

— We have heard that the road to learning is a difficult one, but the Elevator at the new home of the Burdett Business College, cor. Washington and Kneeland Sts., Boston, is the initial factor in the right direction Their new Prospectus is a marvel of beauty, and worth sending for. We know of no better school.

— After an absence of a little less than two months Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Elliott got back from Europe on last Saturday. Considerable of their time on the other side was spent in London and Paris where their visits were highly enjoyed. The trip was made solely for pleasure and the object sought was obtained in full measure.

— Miss Ada D. Carter, niece of Mrs. M. Richardson, has gone to Antrim, N. H., in pursuit of vacation recreation, an article which, we make no doubt, she will find in abundance up there. New Hampshire is getting the lion's share of summer visitors and tourists this year, and among them all none enjoy the Granite Hills more than Miss Carter.

— The Tin Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Stevens at their home, 54 Prospect street, last Saturday evening, was an exceedingly pleasant social event, in which some 75 people participated. A delightful evening which extended to 12 o'clock was spent with music, dancing, etc. Many choice presents were made to the bride and groom of a decade ago.

— Some of the leather factories were closed last Tuesday to afford the employees an opportunity to attend the picnic of the National Irish Athletic Association at Oak Island. A large number went down and when they got back they reported to the JOURNAL office "a splendid time," and full accounts of it in the Boston papers seem to substantiate their claim.

— Some changes which Drill Master Capt. Horace N. Conn is making in connection with the drill of the H. S. B. will be appreciated and approved. The improvement is in the nature of an elementary drill for the benefit of the boys in the first Grammar School class who require the drill to put them on a par with the more advanced soldiers of the High School.

— At 7 o'clock next Sunday evening there will be held in the First Baptist Church a union temperance meeting to attend which a general invitation is extended. Several able temperance advocates will make addresses; there will be good music; and it will be the aim of the managers to make it a very pleasant as well as profitable meeting We should like to see at best half of the house filled with drinking men.

— A camp-out by the Canoe Clubs of the State is now in progress on the shores of Lake Champlain and will continue until 23d of this month. Possibly the Innitou Canoe Club of this city will show the congregated Clubs how to "paddle their own canoe" successfully by real exhibitions of skill and strength before the camp-out closes. The Winchester Club are on the ground spoiling for a fight with somebody.

— The Woburn Mutual Benefit Association, chartered in this Commonwealth, has been in existence one year and has not lost a member. Within the past three months there has been an accession in membership of over 125. John G. Maguire is President. A similar organization in Winchester with D. N. Skillings, President, has been in existence nearly eight years, and has had but seven assessments.

— Professor Willis Carter of this city, Master of Drawing in our public schools, gave lessons in free hand drawing at the Falmouth Summer Institute last Tuesday before a large gathering of people distinguished in literature and art. Prof. Carter enjoys an enviable reputation in his chosen profession and is a very successful teacher of drawing. On Tuesday evening Rev. Daniel March, D.D., was announced to lecture on "Light in the East," and was to be followed on subsequent days of the week by eminent lecturers from Boston and elsewhere with a variety of fresh and appropriate themes. Rev. Mr. Washburn, recently of the North Congregational church in this city, was Dean of the Institute.

— To-morrow (D. V.) Mr. Frederic A. Flint, senior member of the merchant tailoring firm of G. R. Gage & Co., will start for his old camping ground at Camden, Maine, a spot which he thinks the pleasantest on the coast and the one he likes best. Mr. Flint has been an annual summer visitor of Camden for more than a decade and thinks more and more of it as a pleasure resort as the seasons succeed each other. May his joy be perfect down there this August.

— A jolly company of Woburn gentlemen and ladies left this city last Saturday for Detroit, Michigan, all, or nearly so, to attend the National Encampment of the G. A. R. held there this week: Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Mathews, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Woodside, Miss Sophie T. Corbett, Miss Lucy A. Woodside, Miss Minnie Simonds, Mrs. Thomas R. Corbett, Mrs. Silas F. Corbett. They joined the big excursion party that left Boston direct for Detroit, which was pronounced a happy one.

— It was a well contested game of baseball and a slightly disastrous one to some of the gentlemen engaged in it. Skill, brawn and grit were abundantly displayed on both sides. Mr. Fred A. Corey and Mr. John E. Sansbury constituted the batteries; Mr. Grant W. Pierce, pitcher; Mr. Lewis Brown, catcher. The score stood 16 to 11. Mr. Fred A. Corey had one of his fingers badly cut which, although it will disable him from ball-playing for some time to come, is mending rapidly. The game was witnessed with deep interest.

— Last Friday we received a brief but pleasant call from Mr. William E. Jenks, a money, stocks, bonds, etc., broker at 45 Milk street, Boston. He had just returned from Minneapolis, Minn., where he spent a week delightfully with Edward Russell, Esq., a successful broker in that big, bustling and flourishing city, a gentleman well known in financial circles of Boston as dealer in Western real estate securities. Mr. Jenks imparted information concerning Mr. Russell which was pleasant to receive, for he is one of our friends and a big chunk of the salt of the earth.

— Mr. Gordon Parker, who succeeds Mr. Daniel W. Killey at the neat new drugstore in Mechanic Block, is a thoroughly educated apothecary, having served a 4-years apprenticeship with Dr. George S. Dodge of this city, and having had since his graduation some 14 years experience as prescriptionist in a leading Brockton drugstore. So it will be seen that Mr. Parker is eqipped cap-a-pie for the business. He is a younger brother of John L. and Charles S. Parker; was raised here; and is O K in every respect. We can recommend him to the patronage of all the best people of Woburn. He intends to keep a firstclass drugstore and do the business right—just as it ought to be done.

— Supt. Sewell of the No. Woburn St. R'y Co. drives a flyer in the true sense of the word these days. He is a pacer named General Tarbox and can just everlastingly more than get over the ground. The Superintendent takes nobody's dust, but Charlie Lund, Daniel Jones, and the other boys who reckon theirs are about as speedy as they make 'em, have to put up with just what the fleet pacer Gen. Tarbox has a mind to give them in the way of gravel and such. Our horse editor tackled Mr. Gilman F. Jones for farther particulars respecting Gen. Tarbox, knowing that he is well posted on equine matters, but he was found to be densely ignorant as to Supt. Sewell's late acquisitions in the way of horseflesh and particularly so as to the horse in question, the pacer Gen. T.

— The address of Rev. Hugh Montgomery delivered last Sunday in reply to his critics having provoked adverse comment by those who do not like the man or his methods the JOURNAL, with its customary enterprise, secured a copy of said address and has printed it in another column of this week's issue. It was as much because fair-minded men said it was a good one that we procured a copy as because saloons and saloon sympathizers condemned it; but more than either it was to afford everyone an opportunity to read it for himself that the most excellent production is, through the medium of these columns, laid before the public. We fail to see how any friend of the temperance cause can take exceptions to the spirit or language of Mr. Montgomery's address, or how they can fail to respect the man who made it.

— Mr. B. C. Golden, Superintendent of Baeder, Adamson & Co's extensive glue works at East Woburn, and his daughter, Miss Ellen E. Golden, expect to leave Boston to-morrow on the Cephelonia for a visit to Ireland (Mr. Golden's native land), England and elsewhere. Mr. Golden left his home at Cleveary, Castlebaldwin Boyle, County Sligo, Ireland, for America, in April, 1864, and has never revisited it since—a period of over 27 years, a large part of which he has spent in filling responsible stations with the above named firm. Miss Golden has never seen the land of her father's birth where many of the family still reside. Mr. G. expects to have a royal good time on the old sod during the two months of his stay among the scenes of his boyhood and early manhood with relatives, friends, and schoolmates, and the JOURNAL wishes him and Miss Ellen Godspeed.

— Mr. Levi W. Cooper of Union street, in this city, will start for Goose Rocks, Kennebunkport, Maine, tomorrow, and after remaining there a week or two his intention is to visit a nephew, Mr. Cooper of Lowell, at Rye Beach and end up his summer outing there. He took an ocean voyage last week but says his experience cured him of a love for such sports, and he had rather die on dry land twenty times over than to repeat his experience on the old steamer Shawmut that day. He says she ran into a pile of rocks at one stage of her voyage and came pretty near, as Mr. Cooper thought, of sending them all to Davy Jones's Locker. She stove her fly-wheel (if anybody knows what a steamer's fly-wheel is) all into smithereens, put her nose out of joint, bruised her ribs, and raised cain generally. Cooper thought the old Shawmut would be death of him and when he reached the shore his hair was as white as a sheet. Give him the solid earth to stand on every time.

— Next week Dr. L. F. Hatch will open an office in this city for the practice of medicine. He graduated at Ann Arbor, Mich., a few years ago with honors, since which he has enjoyed a large professional practice. He has the reputation of being a thoroughly educated and very successful allopathic physician, and will no doubt secure a good patronage here. His father is Mr. L. B. Hatch, Editor and Publisher of the Plymouth County Journal.

The Lewis Music School.

This institution for instruction in instrumental and vocal music closed a few days ago for its summer vacation. Preceptor Lewis and Madam Lewis, Assistant, will try to rest and take comfort from now to the beginning of the fall term, which will occur early in September.

With this last term closed the fifth year of the existence of the Lewis Music School of Woburn—a period much longer than many cautious, conservative people believed an institution of the kind could possibly exist here. This class in our community had no other belief than that the School would perish for lack of sustenance in a very brief space of time, and it was with many misgivings that Mr. Fred H. Lewis of the N. E. Conservatory of Music launched the enterprise on the public tide and awaited the result.

The School has proved a success from its start. Each successive year since it began has shown an increase of patronage over its predecessor, and the prospect for its future growth and prosperity is much brighter than ever before.

The Lewis Music School is the largest and best establishment for musical training and teaching in the near vicinity of Boston, and of its character, sure growth, stability, and future prospects Woburn ought to be very proud.

Grown Up With The Times.

Chief Wade of the district police has just had printed a neat book of 58 pages, containing the laws relating to the inspection of factories and public building, the regulations for the hours of labor, and the laws regarding the employment of children. It is a handy pamphlet, and has the appearance of a sizable volume when compared with the single letter sheet which contained all the laws on these subjects when the State inspection department was organized in 1879. It is also, in a quiet way, a compliment to Chief Wade's ability and perseverence, for most of the additional laws made for this department, which it was necessary to make a little volume to contain, are the results of his persistent efforts and constant advocacy.—Boston Herald.

Chief Wade deserves great credit for the prompt, able and impartial manner in which he has discharged the duties of his responsible public position as well as for the excellent code of laws bearing on his Department of service enacted mainly through his work. Chief Wade is "the right man in the right place."—ED. WOBURN JOURNAL.

Fighting A Good Fight.

"Just look at that greenhouse," said a Woburn man to the Traveller representative yesterday afternoon, pointing to his conservatory, in which nearly every pane of glass was broken. "Hoodlums did that, and all because I drove a gang of them out of the yard last night. They were drinking and swearing, and, as there was no policeman about, I drove them off myself with the aid of my hostler. Later in the evening they came back and sent a fusilade of stones at the greenhouse, with the result that you observe."

The reporter was then taken inside the house, where a number of valuable plants had been broken by falling stones.—Boston Evening Traveller.

The Traveller is waging a hot war against hoodlumsm and hoodlumism in Boston and places near by and for its courage and the good it is doing the decent part of the public owe it praise without stint.

Since its last change of management the Traveller has grown more worthy of support than ever before. It has come out more boldly for moral, social and political reforms, and is earning and gaining the favor of the best classes of community. It earnestly and intelligently champions the temperance cause, the public school system, Sabbath observance, improved emigration laws, and all and singular those things which the best interests of humanity demand and the best people pronounce good.

Just now the Traveller is waging relentless war on the hoodlum element in community. It daily deals the evil effective blows straight from the shoulder. It is doing good and ought to be generously upheld by Christians and moral men everywhere. Its reporters visit the towns round about the metropolis and hunt for hoodlums. It is not difficult to find them. Every community has to bear with the evil, nor will they be got rid of until the cleaner element join hands with the Traveller and compel better conduct on the part of the lawless, or their enforced absence from town is secured.

The quotation above is what the reporter found in Woburn.

The Bryant & Stratton Commercial School of Boston, which our readers will notice advertised in this week's issue, will re-open Tuesday, Sept. 1. This school needs no recommendation from us, as its present standing and reputation, gained during the last 29 years, places if at the head of all schools of a similar character. It can be patonized with full confidence that nothing that is possible to be done for its pupils will be left undone.

The Exhibition.

Nearly one hundred ladies and a handful of gentlemen attended the display of handiwork by the Sewing Class of the Woburn Industrial School made at Warren Academy on the Hill last Monday. The large number present proves that a deep interest is felt by our people in the success of the institution

The exhibition was pronounced by the lady visitors a highly creditable one to the pupils and their instructors. Many specimens of the work of the class were suspended before the eyes of the ladies and in positions where they could be easily and thoroughly examined. The experts were thus afforded favorable opportunities for testing the quality of the needlework of the misses and were free to improve them.

In addition to this display the class gave a working example of their schooling and acquitted themselves with much credit. The visitors were well pleased with this part of the programme and did not stint their commendations of the good quality of the sewing and speed acquired.

The School is taking a brief vacation this week and will resume operations next Monday.

An Old Timer.

EDITOR OF WOBURN JOURNAL: I herewith send you the Town Reports of money raised and expended in Woburn for the years 1814 and 1815. It is a document of much interest and worthy of preservation.

The reports, as you will see, for the two years are printed one on sheet of paper 12x15 inches square.

After you have used the sheet please give it to Mr. William R Cutter for preservation in the Woburn Library.

WOBURN, May 19, 1816.

Full—Trowan.

On Thursday evening, July 30, the residence of Henry C. Trowan and wife, on Washing avenue, Chelsea, was the scene of a very delightful gathering, the occasion being the marriage of their daughter, Ida A., to George E. Full, Esq., of Charlottetown, P. E. I. The bride is a beautiful and accomplished brunette, and has been for several years one of the most popular and successful teachers in the public schools of Chelsea. The groom is a prominent business man of Charlottetown, where he is held in high esteem for his benevolence and integrity of character. The officiating clergyman was Rev. William Full.

The wedding presents were numerous and elegant, including a silver service from the family of the bride, costly gold watch and chain from the groom, numberless pieces of solid silver table ware, etchings, engravings and vases, from friends teachers and pupils.

During the evening supper was served by one of Boston's well-known caterers. Mr. Full will take his bride to Charlottetown, where a beautiful home and many friends await her coming; and she will carry with her the love and esteem of a large circle of acquaintances in Chelsea, Boston and vicinity, who wish the happy couple God-speed, praying that the prosperity of this world and the blessing of heaven may abide under their roof-tree.—Chelsea Keening Record.

Henry C. Trowan, father of the fair bride, was formerly a resident of Woburn, and therefore the JOURNAL bestows its benedictions on the blissful pair.

Montvale.

The Chapel Sunday School held its first annual picnic last Thursday, July 30, at Wellman's Grove, a delightful place on the eastern shore of Burbank Pond, the use of which was very kindly loaned for the occasion by its genial owner, Mr. Wellman.

Meeting at the chapel at half past eight, the school, to the number of about seventy, took a short walk to the foot of the pond and were taken in boats (the use of which was also offered free) to the grove where the whole day was spent in swinging, boating, gathering pond lilies, ball playing for the boys, reading, talking, eating icecream, watermelon, and other good things, drinking lemonade, taking care of the children and babies, and in general having a good time. The day was a favorable one, though somewhat cloudy, and was much enjoyed by all without accident, and will be remembered with great pleasure.

By the careful management of the lady teachers all the supplies of lemonade, icecream, etc., were contributed without expense, and by their sale a considerable sum of money was obtained to replenish the school library. Under the wise care of the Directors the School is now prospering finely, and is undoubtedly laying in the minds and hearts of the boys and girls the foundation for Christian men and women bye and bye.—G.

A Strong Self-Vindication.

A Sermon delivered at the Methodist Episcopal Church in Woburn on Sunday, Aug. 2, 1891,

BY HUGH MONTGOMERY.

Text: 1st Kings, xviii Chapter: 17th Verse. "Art thou he who troubleth Israel?"

The ministers of the Lord have generally been accounted the troublers of the nation, nay, even of the church, by ungodly rulers, because they oppose prevailing abuses sanctioned by law. Yes, many ministers have been treated as the authors of those calamities which have come upon men for neglecting the true God. If the Lord be God, let us worship him, choose him for our portion, and devote ourselves to his service; if Jesus be devine and the only Savior, let us come to him, cleave to him, and depend upon him alone for everything; if the Bible be the word of God, let us reverence, study and receive the whole of it. Let us no longer endeavor to serve God and Mammon, or try to reconcile religion with the legalized saloon.

The wicked Ahab said to Elijah, "O, thou disturber of my kingdom, the author of this famine, and of all our calamities." But the man of God answered: "I have not troubled Israel; these calamities are not to be imputed to me, but to you and to your father's wickedness." They who trouble our city and give it a bad reputation are they who break the laws of our State and the laws of our God, and not they who defend and keep them. Ahab and Jezebel, his wife, had forsaken the commandments of the law, and cast off the yoke of the devine law, and worshiped idols and followed Baalam. In all ages true reformers have been charged with disturbing the public peace, and interfering with that which is none of their business. This was true of Moses when he went before Pharaoh to deliver the children of Israel. It was also true of Elijah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hezkiah, Daniel, John the Baptist, Jesus Christ and all his Apostles; of Luther, John Knox, Edwards, Howard, John Wesley, Whitefield, and John Brown. These Bible heroes and modern reformers died that systems of truth might live and bless all future generations.

The liquor dealers and their sympathizers want to be let alone: so did Jefferson Davis and the slave holders; so do burglars, thieves and murderers and all evil doers. The liquor dealers confess that they are not controlled by any considerations but by what will contribute to the success of their business. Having brought the liquor question into politics they desire to keep it there, as they have done this city for many years. But these political men with their sympathizers urge ministers and others to keep out of the dirty pool and work for temperance on moral suasion lines etc.

If the church does not overcome the rum traffic the rum traffic will overcome the church. Doctor Strong says: "Our civilization must overcome the saloon, or the saloon will destroy our civilization." We as Christians have in our hands the only true remedy, the Gospel of Jesus Christ; we should so mould public opinion that the licensing of the abominable traffic should be impossible, for we all know in our large cities the saloon is a public menace and the centre and source of corruption, the confederate of all forms of evil and of crime. Vice of any sort asks of the ministers to be let alone. Grant to it this toleration and it will take care of itself. But I, as a minister of Christ, have to discharge my duty so as to secure the best good of the body and souls of my fellow men. In a word, if the vast influence which the church wield was filled with conviction of common justice, and fired by the spirit of truth, it would in a few years enthuse the civilized world; it would create a public sentiment that would tear from the liquor traffic the shield of law, and forever sweep it out of the world. It has been found by statistics that more than four-fifths of all pauperism in our cities is due to the legalized saloon, and fully ninety percent of all the crimes are in some way connected with the liquor traffic. It takes the brightest as well as the dullest of our young men; it pays no regard to culture or to character; it fosters all sins; it is the confederate of all villiany. The saloon is a school of vice and disorder. It is so wasteful and devilish that the great heart of the Christian nations is about to rise up against it and crush it forever.

The terrible influence of the traffic over political parties is beginning to bring together the people of God into one great National party that must overcome it. Our Protestant churches exclude rumsellers from membership, and any business which excludes a man from church membership ought not to be tolerated or licensed by Christian votes; and any minister who fails to preach against this evil and strike it a blow in his pulpit whenever he can, does not do his duty as a minister of Christ. We do not need to fear the numerical strength of the liquor traffic; we do not need to fear their wealth, for their wealth is small when compared with that of the church members. We have at least five dollars to their one. We have five million church members in the United States who are voters, so all we need is organization and true action. It is the duty of all Christian men to attend caucuses and control political parties. If the minister of the gospel be a citizen he owes to his country the duty of a citizen; nor is he, in any just sense, less religious when in the discharge of those duties than when he is praying with the sick or officiating at the sacraments. Does sin cease to be sin because preceded by the magic words, "Be it enacted?" It would be well for those who cry out, "do not meddle with politics" to read the Second Psalm: "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take council together, against the Lord, and against his anointed, saying let us break their bands asunder and cast away their cords from us." Christ meddled with politics, and with all hindrance to the spread of the gospel. The conscience must be reached through the pulpit. Would it be right to enact a law to pluck out eyes and fill up ears? Better lose eyes and ears than mind and the immortal soul forever. The final triumph of the Savior can never be achieved while the legalized liquor saloon lasts, or civil governments ordain or sustain it. For we read in the good book that the time will come when "All nations shall fall down before him and serve him."

Because I have called the attention of the people to the proper officers and asked them to enforce the liquor laws as they find them, and have tried to show that by not doing so they have purjured themselves—for this I have been denounced by the Woburn News and Press. They say I have defamed the city for the purpose of getting a little newspaper notoriety: for myself I have no apology to offer. And let me here divert your attention from the subject to Woburn:

I wonder how many of my hearers have ever stopped to consider the countless beauties of this city in which we are living; the many advantages with which we are encompassed; the hills and the dales "with verdure clad;" the magnificent views to be obtained from points elevated and yet comparatively easy of access? I do not hesitate to say from many a point right here in Woburn there lies open to our vision a vista of landscape and watershed unsurpassed for natural, God-given beauty anywhere; and then the many beautiful walks and drives, the close proximity to Boston, and the neighboring towns of historic interest, and the abundant supply of what has been amply termed "Gods greatest gift to man," pure sparkling water. All these blessings combined serve to make Woburn one of the most desirable places in the Commonwealth in which to dwell. I have lived in nine different places since I have been married, and I can safely say that I live to-day in the best neighborhood I ever lived in. When my family was afflicted the past year the neighbors were extremely kind.

It must be remembered that I stated through the Associated Press last year that our Chief of Police did a noble work, and I knew of no city in the Commonwealth where the law was so well enforced in regard to illegal liquor selling except Worcester as in Woburn; and this was done repeatedly in different ways and forms so that Mayor Johnson met and thanked me kindly for my high endorsement of Woburn.

But even as Eden had its serpent so this beautiful city of ours has its shining insiduous curse in the shape of the rum traffic. If we are to be cursed with the presence of this destroyer of the home at all, does it not behove us as good law abiding citizens, to extract the venom from his fangs as well as we may, by seeing to it that the restrictions imposed upon it by law are lived up to, and not made "a roaring farce?" Are not our city officials responsible for the oath of office? Are not the laws to be obeyed? Does the obedience to those laws and the compelling of such obedience on the part of male factors and law-breakers constitute an immoral act?

May God in his mercy grant that the terrible rum demon may never find a victim in the families of those editors who have seen fit to misrepresent me.

I wish to state right here, and desire to emphasize the fact that during a period of thirty years engaged in active advocacy of the cause of temperance, I have inevitably been treated by the public press with unbiased and courteous impartiality with about five exceptions, and as I can now recall these exceptions they were as follows: about twenty years ago, the Portsmouth (N. H.) Evening Times, then controlled by Frank Jones, a great brewer, said evil things of me. The next was about eight years ago in Norwich Connecticut. There were one daily and three weeklies which supported me and my work, and as the liquor dealers could not control any of them the liquor dealers of the county became a syndicate and established a paper known as the Liquor Dealers Organ that criticised my work; but my health failed me at the end of nine years labor and I was compelled to give up my work. The paper was abandoned in a few weeks from that time. When I moved to Worcester six years ago the Worcester Daily Spy, Daily Telegram, and Gazette gave my work their hearty support, but there was a paper there called the Evening Times, the Rum Organ, that severely criticised my labors. With these insignificant exceptions I have had only the kindest of editorials upon myself and my labors; all have commended my work; and I am indeed thankful that such are the facts, for the press is a mighty power to mould truth and morality, and when I have been misrepresented by reporters or letters no paper has to my knowledge ever refused to give me space for reply but the Woburn News. In all these places where I have labored the church has rallied to my support and been a unit so far as I know, and no man or woman during these thirty years has ever asked for a letter or withdrawn from the congregation on account of my preaching the gospel of temperance; and not only has the Methodist church rallied to my support and passed resolutions at the annual conference commending my work, but I have had the support of all Protestant churches, and have been asked frequently to address the annual conferences of the Congregationalist and Baptist churches in this State, Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Hampshire.

A few years ago in Rhode Island I was asked to address the ministers and manufacturers of that State. I spoke at 12 o'clock M. for two hours extemporaneously. It was published the next day in the Providence Journal verbatim. This has been done in many places all over the New England States; yet the lawyers who defend the liquor dealers in Woburn have said frequently in open court that the sole object of Mr. Montgomery was to get a little notoriety, and the editorial of the News reproduced it. Notoriety! Why, have I not been in the blaze of publicity for these 32 years?

I am told that I have nothing to do but to preach Christ. What is it to preach Christ but to proclaim his mission, proclaim liberty to the captive, and the opening of the prison doors to them that are bound by drunkenness? Paul made Phelix tremble on the judgment seat and Agrippa on the throne; he shook the pillars of State alike at Mars hill and Cæsar's household. There was no political system which was opposed to religion against which the Apostles did not wage an everlasting war. It was on a false charge of treason that Christ was crucified, and it was for political interference that the Apostles suffered martyr's deaths. It was for the same cause that Jerome and Huse and a long line of worthy predecessors and successors walked to the stake singing hymns. If we look back to the revolutionary times we will see what ministers did. Washington requested all the ministers in the colonies to preach on the affairs of the nation. The Provincial Congress of Massachusetts passed a resolution by which ministers of the gospel were requested to explain all the duties of the hour. John Adams said in a letter to his wife dated at Philadelphia, 1774: "The clergy here of all denominations thunder and lighten every sabbath." The teaching of the pulpit at Lexington caused the first blow to be struck for American Independence. Many of these men preached under the threat of martyrdom, but they feared God more than God's enemies. So it is now, the liquor men do not want the traffic investigated because they know that if the light of public investigation was turned on their business it would expose such depths of infamy, such degradation of human beings as would arouse a cyclone of indignation.

It belongs to ministers of the Gospel to be in the front of reform movements. It is our duty to mould and lead the thoughts of our people, not to wait for or merely to follow public opinion. Every question of great and vital importance must be brought into the pulpit and wicked men might as well try to efface God's image on the sky and stamp their own there as to stop God's ministers from preaching the whole truth. Under the old dispensation it was written "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, those that are ready to be slain; if thou sayest behold we know it not, doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it, and he that keepeth the soul doth he not know it, and shall he not render to every man according to his work?" Under the new dispensation, "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you." This is a perfect gauge by which any man in any situation may measure his obligations to his fellow men.

Now I ask you, my dear hearers, to put yourself in the situation of the drunkard's wife or children. Were you in that place what would you have me do? Never say one word for you lest I offend some wiley politician, or call forth the denunciation of some faithless editor? No, no; so in my text there was one Ahab, and there was one Jezebel, and there was one Elijah, too, and when the King stole the vineyard and killed the owners then the prophet interfered and said plain things about them. Then Ahab said in the language of my text; "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" or in other words Hast thou found me, oh mine enemy? And he answered, "I have found thee because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the Lord." Nehemiah in finding the capitol polluted says: "Contended I with the rulers—then contended I with the nobles (that is the Mayor and Aldermen) of Judah and said unto them, What evil thing is this that thou do?" Neh. 13th Chap. 13th verse. Sometimes the prophets were called dumb dogs because they feared to proclaim the whole truth. I fear we have some ministers who are dumb and dead to the calls and cries of suffering humanity.

May God grant his blessing on the truths that have been uttered in keeping with his divine will. The times call for action. The world lieth in the hands of the wicked one. The powers of hell are bold, and the church of Christ should oppose a bold and united front to the hosts of sin and evil.

May God help us to see that "the King's business require haste."

The Stay-at-Home Vote.

The Republican editors of Massachusetts can make a concerted effort in one direction at least, without the chance of a shadow of difference of opinion, and that is in combining to present facts that will draw out the stay-at-home vote. The statistics in regard to the non-voting class during recent years are startling when they are tabulated. By a combined effort citizens can be awakened to the importance of voting; can be educated to a realizing sense of the high privilege it is to have a share in the conduct of affairs. The evils this State received at the hands of the rum element in the last Legislature, seconded by the pliant tool of the rum power now in the Governor's chair, can be fairly chargable upon the men who failed to vote last fall.—Arlington Advocate.

CHRIST'S AUTHORITY.

LESSON VI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 9.

Text of the Lesson, John v, 17-30—Commit Verses, 24-27—Golden Text, Matt. xviii, 18—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

After the last lesson we see Jesus at Cana again, whence He healed the nobleman's son at Capernaum. In the regular narrative of His life there would then come in, probably, the call of the four as they were engaged at their work by the sea of Galilee, the Sermon on the Mount, a number of miracles at Capernaum, and the call of Matthew. We now find Him again at Jerusalem, at one of the feasts of the Jews, and He heals a helpless man, who had been a sufferer for thirty-eight years, on the Sabbath day, commanding him to take up his bed and walk. Therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay Him, because He had done these things on the Sabbath day.

17. "But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

The oneness of the Father and the Son is a truth much dwelt upon in this gospel, and constantly emphasized, and that all the words and works of Jesus were not His but the Father's.

18. "Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill Him, because He not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was His father, making Himself equal with God."

Observe the significance of the relationship of Son and Father as here brought out—it is not inferiority, nor descent by generation, but equality, oneness of character.

19. "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what seeth He the Father do; for what things soever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise."

Thus replied Jesus, prefixing His double verily, or Amen, Amen, reminding us of Isa. lxv, 16 (R. V., margin). Seeing Jesus, they saw God the Father; hearing Him, they heard the Father; in all His works they saw the Father's works (chapter i, 18; xiv, 9, 10). What a field for meditation is here for us, and what great reason for the deepest humiliation on the part of every believer!

20. "For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth Him all things that Himself doeth; and He will shew Him greater works than these, that ye may marvel."

As to the Father's love to the Son, consider these wondrous words in reference to us who believe: "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you;" "The Father Himself loveth you."

21. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom He will."

The word "quicken" is sometimes used in reference to bringing life to a soul dead in sin, as in Eph. ii, 5; Col. ii, 13; and sometimes in reference to bringing to life a dead body.

22. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son."

Here is the great fact that all judgment hath been committed unto the Son.

23. "That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent Him."

And yet there are many who say they believe in God, and trust in Him and worship Him, who will not acknowledge the Divinity of the Son, or, in other words, His equality with the Father; but all the while they insist that they are true worshipers of the true God. With this verse before us what conclusion can we come to but that all such are fearfully deceived.

24. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life."

So also in chapters iii, 16, 36; vi, 47. Not will have when we die, nor will have if we are faithful, nor will have if we add so many good works, but simply and emphatically, "He that heareth and believeth HATH." "This is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son. He that hath the Son hath life" (1 John v, 11, 12).

"And shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death into life."

To the believer there is no future judgment for sins, for all were laid on Jesus, and we have the assurance of Him who cannot lie that they shall be remembered no more (Isa. liii, 5, 6; xliii, 25). But there shall be a judgment for service for all believers.

25. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live."

As in chapter iv, 21-23, so here and in verse 28 our Lord uses the word "hour" in reference to an indefinite period of time. The hour of this verse still continues, and will till the hour of verse 28, and probably till the end of that hour, when the judgment of the great white throne shall be set. To prove that all who have not yet received Jesus are dead read I John v, 12; Eph ii, 4, 5; I Tim, v, 6; Rev. iii, 1.

26. "For as the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself."

Even science has proved that there can be no life apart from pre-existent life. If this is true of natural life, can we for a moment question the fact that there can be no spiritual life apart from God.

27. "And hath given Him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man."

This emphasizes verse 22, but brings out a new thought, "because He is the son of man."

28. "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice."

If the hour of verse 25, which now is, and still continues, has already lasted over 1,800 years, it will not be strange if the coming hour shall last at least 1,000 years. Then shall His voice reach even the bodies of those whose spirits have been called from earth.

29. "And shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

Here are two resurrections, one to life and one to loss eternal.

30. "I can of mine own self do nothing."

Let us therefore abide in Him, that we speak His words and do His works by His spirit dwelling in us.

"As I hear I judge, and My judgment is just, because I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me."

His judgment is just or right eous because He judges not according to the appearance, which also he exhorts us not to do. Let our words and works testify that we delight to do God's will and seek only His glory, and then we shall stand approved in that day.

GOOD ENOUGH FER ME.

They say I missed my callin';
I might have been a sage
If I'd a-gone ter college
When twenty years of age.

They say my gift wuz langwidge;
Without a workin' much
I might a been quite fluent
In Hebrew, French an' Dutch.

I own 'tis very flatt'rin',
But answer 'em, "You see
The langwidge Shakespeare writ in Wuz good enough fer me."

I used ter read his play books
When jest a little lad;
Though hard ter understand, yet
I liked the ring they had.

Then what's the sense in learnin'
The things I'd never use;
Fer though I'm glib at talkin',
I wouldn't have excuse

Ter chat in Dutch er Latin
With Lihu, John an' Zeke,
A-settin' on the store steps,
'Cause Yankee's all they speak.

There may be langwidge finer,
An' them more soft an' clear;
The one I courted Jane in
'S the one I like ter hear.

I tell my team in English
Ter "git up," "haw" and "gee,"
'N' the langwidge Shakspeare writ in
Is good enough fer me.

What Geology Reveals.

Geology reveals to us the fact that classes of animals rise and fall, are exalted and then brought low, just as empires among men. The deinosaurs were not destined to remain for more than a certain time in their exalted position. Already in the New Red Sandstone period the usurpers had appeared on the scene in the shape of humble little quadrupeds, creatures apparently unable to cope with their rivals of the reptile class, but destined, as ages rolled on, to grow in power and strength, and so to attain the proud position they now occupy.

One cannot help wondering how the victory was accomplished. But they had a more developed brain than reptiles; that would give them an immense advantage in the "struggle for existence." Thus it would seem that brains carried the day, and so mammals now "hold the field" against all their enemies.—Chambers' Journal.

She Couldn't Stop.

The Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra, as is well known, are attended by a great concourse of women.

One afternoon the doors had just been opened, and there was a grand rush up the stairs for the unreserved seats in the second balcony. In the crush one woman shed some of her fine feathers in the shape of an overskirt.

The assistant manager held it up and cried, "Here, madam!"

She turned and looked, but music and a good seat had charms. "Keep it for me," she said, and hurried on up the stairs.—Boston Globe.

The Fighting Ostrich.

A sturdy newcomer, some six feet in height, laughed at the warnings that were given him when he set out for a walk, and disdainfully refused the protection of a tackey—a thorny branch, the dexterous use of which will keep the ostrich at bay—averring that he "was not afraid of a dicky bird!" He was missed, and discovered some hours after by a search party most uncomfortably perched on the top of an ironstone bowlder, and slowly grilling under the African sun, while the "dicky bird" did sentry up and down, watching him with an evil eye.—London Spectator.

Hall Bedrooms and Milk Bottles.

It is a very curious and remarkable fact that people who live in hall rooms at boarding houses drink bottled milk before going to bed. Each little dairy in boarding house neighborhoods, especially cross streets between Sixteenth and Thirty-second, do a thriving business in selling bottles of fresh milk. A walk on any of these streets any morning will reveal the presence of a milk bottle on the window ledge of nearly every house on the block. These will mark with unfailing regularity the position of the hall room in an ordinary New York house.—New York Recorder.

A Thrifty Mind.

The Collegian—Shall we be engaged again this summer or not?

The Accommodating Girl—It's just as you say.

The Collegian—Well, we might as well be engaged then—but you won't expect another ring, will you?—Munsey's Weekly.

At present the exports of French silk goods amount to about 250,000,000 francs per annum. England and the United States are the leading purchasers, taking over two-thirds of the whole amount exported. Then come Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, Spain, Turkey and Italy in the order mentioned.

The late Lord Granville was a fine specimen of the old school English statesmen who appeared born to rule their countrymen. He was one of the few connecting links that bound the statesmen of the early days of the century to those of the present decade and decadence.

The mean annual temperature of the whole United States, excepting Alaska, is 53 degs. Fahrenheit, and the figures show that the part of the country where this is the actual mean temperature is the center of the greatest density of population.

May Thank Her Stars.

The narrow escape of Mrs. B. M. Searles, of Elkhart, Ind., from a premature death is wonderful. She states that "for twenty years my heart troubled me greatly. I became worse. Had smothering spells, short breath, fluttering; could not sleep on my left side, had much Pain in Breast, shoulder and stomach. Ankles swelled. Had much headache and dizziness. Treatment did me no good, until I tried Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure and Restorative Nervine. The first bottle helped me, and I was soon virtually cured. For sale at Charles H. Buss's drug store. SOMETHING BIG IN RUBBER.

A Single "Biscuit" That Weighs Over a Thousand Pounds and Cost $1,010.

The biggest "biscuit" of rubber ever seen in North America is on exhibition in a store in Warren street. It came from the upper Amazon, weighs a trifle over a thousand pounds and cost its owners $1,010. Around its largest circumference it measures 10 feet, being composed of successive layers that form a practically solid mass throughout. There is enough rubber in the lump to make 5,000,000 "election" bands, or, if made into a single string, there is enough to make a line which would reach 150 miles.

Although the biscuit is now perfectly black, it was pure white, like the juice of the milk weed, when taken from the tree. The native who made the lump first drove two crotched stakes in the ground at a distance of ten feet apart, and in the crotches he rested a smooth pole. Then he built a fire midway between the posts, in such a position as to concentrate the heat at the center of the crosspiece. The rubber, in its fluid consistency, was poured on the hottest surface of the stringer, and as it felt the warmth of the fire it congealed. By turning the pole slowly around the layer of rubber took its present shape, which is that of a big, overgrown biscuit.

It is slow work turning the stick and congealing the rubber, and a whole day is consumed in making a single layer. It took forty days to complete the biscuit in question, for, besides hardening it, it had to be cured and smoked by processes very similar to those used in curing and smoking hams. The Amazon natives use a peculiar bark to effect the curing process, which is burned in the fire, and which imparts certain properties that prepare the rubber for preservation.

The rubber which is here described smells so much like the ordinary sugar cured ham that one could not tell the difference if blindfolded. In this respect the rubber from the Amazon possesses a distinct superiority over that from Africa. In the latter country the natives seem to know nothing whatever about the curing and smoking process, and the result is that their rubber has an indescribably vile odor.

In preparing this big lump for commercial use it will be first put into the grinder or mill, where it will undergo a treatment very like that of mastication. This makes it pliable. It will then be put into a calendar, where it will be flattened and drawn out into the required size and shape, after which it will be cut up into the shapes used in commerce.—New York Times.

The Work of Years Undone in a Day.

There is such a thing as being too careful about your youngsters. A prominent Maine clergyman endeavored to bring up his children far from the contaminating influence of the vulgar mob. No public schools, no games with the boys, no hilarious fun, "no nothin'," as young America graphically expresses it. The boys were not allowed to leave the dooryard unless they were securely shackled to the parson's hand.

Well, one day boyish nature asserted itself, and they ran away. As might be expected, they immediately gravitated among the worst crowd in town. All day they heard those names and words so reverently spoken by their father in his prayers coupled in the most astonishing and startling manner.

They arrived in the paternal dooryard at night—dusty, torn, tired, but happy.

"Well, young sirs, where have you been this day?"

"Oh, father, we've been down to see the Brown boys and"——

"The Brown boys, you rascals! and don't you know that they are the most wicked little boys in the village?"

"Oh, no, no, father," expostulated the youngsters; "they're surely not wicked, for there's not been a minute this afternoon but that they've earnestly called upon the name of the Lord."—Lewiston Journal.

The Key of Death.

The "Key of Death" is apparently a large key which is shown among the weapons at the arsenal at Venice. It was invented by Tibaldo, who, disappointed in love, designed this instrument for the destruction of his rival. The key is so constructed that the handle may be turned around, revealing a small spring, which being pressed a very fine needle is driven with considerable force from the other end. This needle is so very fine that the flesh closes over the wound immediately, leaving no mark, but the death of the victim is almost instantaneous.—Detroit Free Press.

The Monkey Wrench and Its Inventor.

Monkey wrench is the name applied to a tool, a sort of spanner with a movable jaw. Some etymologists account for the forepart of the name by recalling the fact that a monkey's jaw is movable also. The monkey wrench was invented some years ago by a poor mechanic whose name is Charles Monckey. He sold his patent for a song, and is now working for day's wages in Brooklyn. His invention has made millions of dollars for those who were able to place it upon the market.—Harper's Young People.

ACCUSED BY A FEATHERED WITNESS.

A Cockatoo's Declaration Over the Body of Its Murdered Master.

The officers who took the body of William R. de Rose, alias La Chapelle, from the bedroom in the rear of the saloon where he was shot and killed by Maggie Getty, tell a strange story of the loquacity of a big cockatoo that belonged to the murdered man.

The body lay on the floor at the foot of the bed when the officers arrived. The bird was perched upon the mantelpiece overlooking the scene, and as the bluecoats entered the room he screeched out:

"Maggie did it! Maggie did it!"

The officers were startled. Where did the strange voice come from? It was not a human voice, yet strangely clear and distinct.

"Maggie did it! Maggie did it! Maggie did it!" again came the voice. A light was struck by this time, and then the source of that inhuman screech was discovered.

"Mag"——

"Did what?" said one of the officers, interrupting, as it was about to screech out again.

"Shot him! Shot him! Shot him! Maggie did it!" answered the cockatoo.

The officers bent over the corpse, placed a hand on the heart to see if life were really extinct, then stood silently a moment, as if considering the best means of removing it.

"Well, what are you going to do with it?" broke out the bird again.

"Going to take it to the morgue. Want to come along?" said the officer, bending an elbow out for the cockatoo to perch upon.

"Yes, I'll go," said the bird, hopping down on the elbow.

It was with much difficulty that the body was finally carried out to the patrol wagon without allowing the bird to escape. When this had been done finally, and the bird safely locked in the room, his ghoulish screech could be heard out on the street calling:

"Maggie did it! Maggie did it!"—San Francisco Chronicle.

An Outraged Doctor.

An elderly lady, who was very wealthy, and who had a very inflated idea of her own importance, owned a pet monkey, which suddenly became quite ill. The lady, whom we shall call Mrs. Portly Pompous, had the assurance to send for one of the most prominent physicians to attend the ailing simia.

When the doctor was introduced to his patient he was very much enraged, but he did not betray it. He examined the sick monkey's pulse, and asked the usual questions. In the corner of the room was a little boy, a grandson of Mrs. Portly Pompous. The doctor approached the boy, examined his pulse and then said solemnly to the lady:

"Madam, your two little grandchildren are suffering from indigestion. Give them light food, with plenty of exercise, and they will soon come around all right."

After the doctor had said this he bowed himself out, with a feeling that he had in a measure vindicated his professional dignity. The bill which he sent in was so heavy that Mrs. Portly Pompous, who is somewhat stingy, almost had a fit herself over it.—Irish Times.

Fear of the Cholera Demon.

The existence of a cholera demon is still firmly credited in certain districts of India. A native in a village near Allahabad recently assured an inspector of police that the previous night his home had been visited by the cholera monster, with a head like a large earthen pot. He and his brother drove away the spirit with bamboo clubs, and fired a gun to complete its defeat, as the creature fears noise. Some years ago, say the natives, three wise men enticed the demon into an earthen pot and carried it to a neighboring hostile village to bury it by night. The rival villagers objected, however, and a fight ensued, in which the demon's prison was broken, and he escaped to continue his evil works.—London Graphic.

"N-o, but Bertha Bullion's father takes the paper I advertised the loss in, and he'll see that advertisement. See?"

"Humph! Where did you get the money to pay for that big ad?"

"Bertha loaned it to me, bless the darling."—New York Weekly.

Benzine Pencils for Removing Stains.

A device has been patented in England for the purpose of removing grease from gloves or fabrics. It is called a benzine pencil, and consists of a cylindrical body, which is about the size of an ordinary lead pencil, containing benzine. At each end there is a thick piece of felt, one piece intended to be moistened by the benzine, while the other end of the pencil is kept perfectly dry to take up the superfluous moisture.—New York Telegram.

DIED AT THE LEVER.

Heroic Death of a Brave but Foolhardy Knight of the Throttle.

In my long service as a railroad engineer I have become well acquainted with oil and smoke, coal and cinders. It was while "firing" that the practical knowledge of my engine was gained. It takes time to learn to fire well, so as to have the highest pressure of steam at the grade where needed. His fire must be kept steady and hot, and it is necessary that he know the road as well as the engine.

What with shoveling coal, oiling his engine and looking after his stock of coal and water the fireman is a busy man.

When I began firing under Nell Aness I knew him to be a good hearted, pleasant fellow, and he always spoke pleasantly to me while I was learning my duties, and I must have been a trying chap at first.

One bitter cold night in the month of January found us pulling out of Omaha, westward bound, about twenty minutes late.

Our train was heavy, the rails frosty, and the wheels seemed to stick to the line, while the icy winds almost froze the blood in our veins. We used every ounce of steam. It takes more coal to make steam on such a night, though the fire seems to burn fiercer and brighter.

As we pulled out Nell showed in his determined manner and by the way he handled her that he meant to make up the twenty minutes, for all ahead our line was clear.

On we sped, counting off the milestones at the rate of forty an hour where the road was level. Ah, these bleak winter nights!

Hopefully we peer into the darkness, but can only see what the headlight shows us.

"No. 145" eastbound freight train running to Omaha would either sidetrack at a small station called Sheldon or one three miles further east called Elbling, until we passed. We passed Elbling at 10:45, and it was a comfort to think there would be no delay on our road, and we swept swiftly onward toward Sheldon, where we expected "No. 145" to be safely sidetracked, since she had not run into Elbling.

But an unavoidable accident had occurred just around a curve, where the road followed the smooth, winding bank of the Platte.

An axle had broken and got one of their cars off the track. The train hands—conductor and brakemen—were in the caboose for warmth, and did not notice the accident for a time. The train was finally brought to a standstill, and as they did so other cars were derailed, which threw the whole train into confusion. Signals are often obscure in the frosty air, and they said we came upon them very quickly after the signal lanterns were gotten out.

As we shot around the curve going at a great speed I saw the steam from the freight engine. Nell was looking out on his side.

"We are lost, Nell!" I shouted. "No. 145 is on our line." In an instant we had shut off, reversed and whistled for brakes.

As we came up I swung out, for I saw death ahead of us.

"Jump, Nell!" I cried. He glanced toward me, and then straight ahead. The look on his face seemed to say to me, "It is all right for you to go; I must not leave my engine!" In that one lightning glance I seemed to see the brave, heroic soul of my engineer shining in his honest, pleasant face. Then I jumped, rolled over and over down the steep river bank, and landed on the ice. There was a mighty crash, and I saw from the spot where I had fallen, dazed but unhurt, our engine and several cars pitched headlong down the embankment. The silence of the night was broken by agonizing cries for help and heartrending screams and prayers.

We who were uninjured worked with a will. Twelve passengers were killed and many injured. I looked and watched for Nell, hoping he would soon be seen at work among us. After clearing away piles of wreck, we found him at dawn lying under his engine in the shallow water beneath the ice. He met death fearlessly with his hand on the lever, giving his own life in the hope that others might be saved. Brave Nell Aness! He was, indeed, a hero.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Turning the Tables on the Church.

One of the earlier yeomen of Bridgton was a pump maker, a good citizen, but with "no religious preferences." One day he was waited upon by one of the church assessors, who handed him a bill for the support of preaching.

"I hain't heard no preaching," said the old man, somewhat surprised.

"Well, brother, it's your own fault then," replied the churchman. "It's been accessible to all, every Sabbath for a year."

The old gentleman acknowledged the corn and paid. Not long after this the parish received from him a bill for a pump.

"We have bought no pump of you," was the answer.

"Well, then," replied the old gentleman, with a twinkle in his eye, "it's your own fault, for I have been making them for years."—Lewiston Journal.

More Than Ready.

"The successful canvasser," once said a business man, "is the one who can persuade you to buy what you don't want."

A "summer boarder" was one day sitting on the farmhouse steps, when a vender of patent medicines appeared and began to advertise his wares.

"Good for toothache, rheumatism, gout, ague," he said rapidly, displaying a bottle. "Got rheumatism now, haven't ye? I could tell that the minute I set eyes on ye."

"Never had a twinge in my life," said the victim.

"Subject to headache?"

"No."

"Teeth trouble ye?"

"Never."

So the conversation went on, from nostrums to liquids for cleansing purposes, and still nothing was sold. After half an hour's steady effort the agent slowly packed up his wares and sadly prepared to depart. As he was about to go a neighbor approached, bringing the morning's mail, and called out triumphantly:

"I've got two magazines, and there's a story by you in each!"

The agent threw open his bag with a lightning-like gesture. He seized a bottle from its contents and proffered it imploringly.

"Why didn't you tell me you was a writer?" cried he. "Twenty-five cents a bottle! Best thing on earth for writer's cramp!"

He had conquered—the nostrum was bought, though only to be tossed over the orchard wall.—Youth's Companion.

A Hard Pipe to Beat.

There were two captains in the ——th cavalry. Each was proud of his record, his horses, his family, his dogs—in short, everything that was his. If one had a thing that he particularly prized, the other had a better one, or got one, or tried to get one. Captaix X. had a very old meerschaum pipe, and, scenting an antiquity, he sent it to an expert in New York, who returned it with a certificate to the effect that it was 300 years old. He impatiently waited until the officers assembled at headquarters the next morning, exhibited his prize, and read the figures on the expert's certificate. Captain B., his rival, declared that his family had a meerschaum pipe that had been in their possession for 900 years.

Now Captain X. was too polite to remind Captain B. that neither tobacco nor pipes were known in Europe 900 years ago, and he went home crushed. There a bright idea occurred to him. He put a figure 1 before the 300 on his certificate, and his pipe was certified to be 1,300 years old. The next morning he returned to headquarters, announced that he had made a mistake in reading the certificate on the previous day, and that his pipe was really 1,300 years old. To prove it he showed the certificate.—New York Sun.

A Ruble on Its Travels.

Some short time ago a Mr. P—— forwarded to the district court at St Petersburg a ruble as payment for the copy of a document. As by law copies of documents in criminal cases are supplied free of charge, the district court sent the ruble back to Mr. P—— in Moscow, the postoffice retaining eight kopeks for carriage. Mr. P—— could not be found at Moscow; he had gone to Twer, and the ninety-two kopeks followed him, the postoffice again deducting six kopeks. Meantime, how ever, Mr. P—— had departed to St. Petersburg; the eighty-six kopeks were sent after him to the capital, having melted down to seventy-two kopeks as before.

Strange to say, Mr. P—— had been compelled to leave St. Petersburg and return to Moscow by way of Twer. The money dogged his steps from place to place without overtaking him until it had dwindled down to the sum of one kopek, which was finally deposited at the offices of the exchequer.—Novoye Vremya.

How Riley Does It.

Two well known authors, who are also very successful lecturers, were talking together a few days ago over their experiences on the platform. One of the twain was James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet. They were discussing the question of the best way of handling audiences, when one of them said:

"What do you do, Riley, when you find you have a cold audience? How do you warm them up?"

"Don't try," said the poet. "You know I am nearsighted, and without my glasses I ain't worth a cuss. Well, when I see I have a cold and critical audience I just take off my glasses and lay them on the desk. Then the house can be just as uneasy as they like, for I can't see a thing. The whole house might get up and leave, and I'd never know it. Don't pay for an audience of mine to be cold, for I let them do all the freezing."—New York Letter.

A Remedy for Cancer.

Dr. Mortimore Granville, who has been for some time studying the properties of the juice of the papaw tree, states that he has discovered in it a remedy for cancer when used with some other preparations. The organized ferment of the papaw is believed to be a bacillus; but Dr. Granville says he has satisfied himself of the therapeutic value of the juice, or certain of its elements, as a solvent of the morbifically indurated tissues in cancer when administered in combination with certain specified adjuncts.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

In Ireland the number of arrests for drunkenness steadily increases. In 1887, there were 79,000 arrests for that cause; in 1888, the number reaches $87,000, and in 1889, climbs up to 92,000.

JOHN G. WOOLLEY AT MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

AN ADDRESS TO THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

John G. Woolley, Esq., delivered, says the Minneapolis Tribune, an address on "Gospel Temperance" which aroused tremendous enthusiasm, and commanded close attention throughout. His plea for prohibition sent the audience wild, and brought to the front a big white banner in the Iowa quarter. The following is a full report of Mr. Woolley's address:

"I am to speak about gospel temperance. I intend to consider the subject in the most elementary view of it. That is easy enough intrinsically, but practically difficult. The trouble is, there is such a variety of definitions. The phrase is a lexicographical ghost, visible, vocal, voluble, volitile, vanishing. Three years ago I became a gospel temperance missionary. My first appointment was for a month of nightly meetings. At the fourth meeting, a man arose and said, in substance, he was a Christian and a good one, but I was too gentle to suit him, and later the committee, evidently of the same mind, told me they wanted the old political parties skinned. Being neither a butcher nor a texidermist, I withdrew with such grace as I could, and left them poorer but wiser, for I had learned that gospel temperance was but another name for vivisection.

My next appointment was in another state. The leading citizen of the place —a deacon of the church—said if I spoke on gospel temperance, he would stand by me, but warned me to leave his party alone. I made the speech so coldly rejected for its excess of gospel in the other state. Before I finished, a howling mob was stoning me. A blind old man, sitting on the platform, was struck by a rock, and my wife stood at the door and kept the crowd from killing me till I had done. We were escorted to our hotel between two lines of Caucasian savages, insulting us at every step, meanwhile yelping the name of their candidate, a Christian man. Then I knew that gospel temperance was a hideous discord with a treble of righteousness and a diapason of expediency, and loud and soft pedals of politics, and I said, God helping me, I'll never sound it, and I never did. Then I came to this sweet city of my heart and home, preaching the same thing from the same Bible, as I was moved by the Holy Ghost. I prepared my sermons on my knees those days, and a good Christian woman, a member of my committee, and my friend, said: You are violating our pledges, and you are not teaching gospel temperance. You must not speak against high license. I learned then that gospel temperance was a bombastic and flimsy paradox, composed of a gospel that had to be free, and a temperance that had to be sold, a gospel that had to be smothered, and I said, so help me God, I'll never teach it, and I never did. But I kept on; part of my friends and helpers withdrew, deeply offended because I said a Christless temperance pledge was untrustworthy, and then I learned that gospel temperance was a wretched sham, with God put in a parenthseis, or spoken in low breath, or left out, and I said, God helping me, I'll know nothing but Jesus Christ crucified and risen, and walking the earth in all the ways of men, and I never did.

Now, there is danger that the confusion of tongues among the workers will end as Babel ended. The blunder of Babel was at the bottom of it, not the top, and I propose that in this temperance reform we stop building a top on it and dig for the foundation that was laid in Jesus Christ. What we want is to focus on the centre of the subject and then we shall be able to work on broad lines and get the knack of putting our hand to everything that is Christ-like in temperance endeavor. We cannot all play the same instruments but we can all play in the right key.

A woman here in Minneapolis stopped at the gutter side and spread her handkerchief over a drunken man's face. He was a stranger, and repulsive enough, but she did it for Jesus, sake. I call that gospel temperance.

A woman in this city, an invalid, totally strange to me, and who had never seen me and whom I had never seen, prayed every day at twelve o'clock for three years for me before I was saved. I call that gospel temperance.

When four years ago I said that religion was a lie and fled from the wreck of a fair name and a good estate, Edwin Sidney Williams put money in my pocket and a letter for Christians and officers and morgue keepers, signed with his name like this: "In the name of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of men, help this man." I call that gospel temperance.

I walked the streets of New York city one August day—starving—but I was sober. It is sometimes an awful thing to be sober. The play of my life was over; the light was burned out. I was a ruined man, Godless and hopeless, and that is hell whether it happens to a man in this world or another. I saw the three witches, starvation, beggary and crime, stirring a black broth for me on the bleakest moor of life that ever the fanged hounds of appetite and remore hunted a man over. But I was sober!

"And as a man with difficult, short breath,
Forespent with toiling, 'scaped from sea to shore,
Turn to the desolate wide waste and stand at gaze.'

So I looked back on the wreck of my life that day. All was lost. Father had died calling me to come to him from the saloon to see him die. Mother had died calling upon me to stay out of the saloon and see her die. Wife was worse than the widowed; children worse than orphans—shelterless but for the grace of creditors and God's canopy that shelters all, and the future was an infinity of pitch. But I was sober! If I had said I had left off drink forever, no man who knew me would have believed me. If I had been able to telegraph to my wife I was going home—she would have answered, though it broke her heart: "You must not come home." If I asked for employment no man would trust me. The asylums would not receive me for I was not sane. Nor the hospitals, for I was not sick. Nor the morgue, for I was not dead. I had not been to bed for I had no bed. I remember nothing of the night before or of the morning, but I was sober. I thought I was going mad. I washed my face at the fountain in Union Square and crossed over to Eighth Avenue. At the corner of Twenty-First Street I saw the sign of Stephen Merritt—you know him some of you—all the angels know him well. I had never seen him, but had heard of him. It was not food I thought of, but an overwhelming desire filled me to touch the hand of a good man. I entered. A man with the joy of the Lord in his face came to meet me, with his hand extended, and as he grasped mine I said: "I don't know why I came"—the sentence was never finished for I burst into tears, and then I told him who and what I was, I said not a word about money nor hunger. I had forgotten both. He said: "You need the woods! Did you ever go to Camp meeting? I have a tent on the Hudson at the camp meeting, there's a boat at one o'clock. You can catch it. Go out and rest and perhaps you'll enjoy the sermons, too. I'll be out in three days." Then he snatched up a pen and wrote a letter to a Christian woman and read it to me before he closed it. "This is my friend John G. Woolley, of Minneapolis; show him my tent and do for him as you would do for me." Then he slipped a five dollar bill into my hand and said, "Goodby, see you Monday," and pretending he was called, was gone before I said a word.

I call that gospel temperance work, and this incident will reveal to some of you the secret of my belief in the woods and five-dollar bills as a means of grace.

And when a young man simply declines a glass of wine, giving the name of Jesus for the reason, I call that gospel temperance!

And when a young woman with Christian tact and grace demands—as Christian ladies can demand—for Jesus' sake, who never once reproached a woman, abstinence as pre-requisite to her respect, I call that gospel temperance. And when the honored wife of Minnesota's spotless senator who died with his glass reversed—Mrs. William Windom—refused to serve wine at her table according to the custom, saying she would rather offend a few than to tempt any, I call that gospel temperance. And when a Christian man stands up and votes the will of God touching the drink into the ballot box, and does it for His sake and in His name, though he stands alone among a million, and against overwhelming odds of policy or politics or worldly wisdom, I call that gospel temperance.

And when a Christian man, however good and true, stands with the crowd and for the policy of it, or the revenue of it, or the difficulty of it, or the best-that-can-be-done-now-ness of it, for free trades' sake, or tariff's sake, or silver's sake, or for election's sake, with or without a Sunday law—with or without a patrol limit, with or without public sentiment, with a low price or a high one, with long hours or short, in a dram shop, drug store or hotel, in his own town or in Alaska or Nyanza, votes for the sale of drink or fails to vote against it—I do not call that gospel temperance!

It needs the gentleness and charity of Jesus Christ to be a temperance evangelist, and no such man will ever have power until he lays down his theories at the feet of the son of God. I think I have done that. Let me show you what I brought from there. If I seem dogmatic it is because I must be brief. A position to be strong must be simple. The temperance question in most minds is complex, hence the strategies, diplomacies, truces, compromises and defeats. Conscience is the main shaft of the mine and the gospel is the gear that belts us to God's mind. There is no confusion in the mind in gear. And now, please God, I am going to maintain this proposition.

The Bible is anti-alcohol. I know the learning of it, the arguments of the spiritious scholars of the church, the onios, yayin, glenkos, and I assert that the word of God is against alcohol, not intemperance in alcohol, and there's the kernel of this subject. Do I deny that Jesus made alcohol at Cana? Of course I deny it; what he made there was "onios," and no respectable Greek scholar will say that means necessarily or ordinarily any more than grape juice.

But were not the men "well drunk" and did not the master of the feast pronounce the wine of the miracle the best of all?

I deny the men were drunk. No Greek scholar will say that "Methuo" must mean "intoxicate," but suppose they were drunk. Am I then to admit against the plain bulk of the book—and against the known character of Jesus, that he made alcohol,—on the testimony of a mushy compliment of a tipsy toastmaster, speaking for the giver of the feast, when the language itself admits another meaning?

Do you tell me that he who saved me from the hell of drunkenness and gave me back to the wife from which drink had driven me, went to a wedding where men were drunk and made more alcohol for them to drink?

Then I say, away with the nonsense that marriage is a sacrament, a holy rite: it is nothing but a contract-like bond, or a policy of insurance. Widen the doors of your divorce courts, and let us hear no more of the ridiculous canons of the church. The head of the church sanctioned and abetted drunkenness at the only wedding he ever saw. He never did it! He could not have done it! Jesus said, "The words that I speak, they are life."

Alcohol is chemical death. Jesus said: "I am the bread life." Alcohol is post mortem bread. Jesus said: "I am the resurrection and the life." To be alcohol is the hell of fruit and grain.

"This is life eternal that they might know Jesus Christ."

Do you tell me that water knew the voice of Jesus Christ and died and rotted and putrified to alcohol in an instant—and that "this first miracle did Jesus at Cana, in Gallilee, and manifested forth his glory" in the shame of men?

But what about the Lord's supper? The hush of the oriental evening had fallen on Palestine. Scarce any sound was audible save now and then the flutter of a late retiring sparrow or the stridor of some sullen locust rasping off the last bright edge of the sinking day. Darkness lay in puddles in the valleys which run together like drops of ink on a glass, as night rose like a black tide up the hillside where a lonely man was standing; it crept to his feet, but he took no notice of it; to his waist, his head, then it covered him; his face was almost transparent in its paleness; he was motionless, his eyes were open but seemed fixed upon some object in the farthest sky, and as he looked he seemed to listen with his whole soul; he looked down presently, drew his cloak about him and moved toward the city gate. The stars came out timidly. The city lights glared haughtily. The night flowers by the wayside opened an instant as he passed then closed again. His sandals were dirty and he seemed weary. He passed up the Jericho road round by the south of Olivet toward the East gate. It was Passover, and he had sent his disciples to the city to prepare his last supper, for this lonely man with dusty sandals was Jesus of Nazareth on his way to Gethsemane and Calvary. He was the last to arrive at the upper room where the table was set. It was harvest time. As they had come on Peter had plucked a small sheaf of yellow grain for the tables and John, the beloved, had gotten a basket of the smallest, sweetest grapes, and pressed from some with his own hands, a cup of wine for the Master, and some were on the table in bunches, and when he came, they all sat down to eat. He asked a blessing, the sweetest they had ever heard. Then he took the loaf; he looked surprised and said: "Why, John, this is fermented bread. What does this mean? Have you forgotten the scripture, 'Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread. Even the first day ye shall put leaven out of your homes, for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh their soul shall be cut off from Israel.' Take it away quickly and bring unleavened bread." When that was done he broke it among them and said: "Have you never noticed that ferment or yeast is never used in the scripture except to signify evil, and this is to remind you of my body broken for you. Then he took the cup, and as he saw the color of it and thought of his bloody death now so near, he prayed again, then just touched the wine before passing it to the disciple, but stopped suddenly and said: "Why this is unfermented wine," and John said, "Yes it is fruit of the vine. I pressed it out for you from ripe grapes. I thought you'd like it, and I loved to do so." And then Jesus said, "Judas, you will have to go and bring some alcoholic wine."

Son of God, forgive this if it is sacrifice. My friends, there was no alcohol at the Last Supper. What! alcohol—the death-sweet of grapes—an emblem of blood of everlasting life? That cannot be!

But listen, let Jesus testify: "I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's Kingdom.

When we set down at the marriage supper of the Lamb, we are to drink the same kind of wine they drank that night in Jerusalem.

It is to be new—made on the spot. The fruit of the vintage of the year 1 of the new heaven and earth. Alcohol can't be new. It is expressed decomposition. It is fluid old age—the rigor mortis of vintages past and gone.

There will be no alcohol in heaven. Listen; let Jesus testify:—

"And God shall wipe all tears from the eyes, and there shall be no more death; neither sorrow, nor crying. Neither shall there be any more pain.

And there shall in no wise enter there, anything that defileth nor worketh abomination, nor maketh a lie." No tears in heaven? There will be no alcohol. No death? no crying? no pain? no defilement? no abomination? no lying? Then there can be no alcohol, for alcohol contains them all.

And listen to what John saw: "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." That includes alcohol. Abolish death and alcohol will be impossible. Let hotter flames lick hell out of being, and alcohol being sourceless and purposeless, would cease forever. Make haste, O God, fulfilling that Apocalypse!

The Bible is against alcohol! It curses it from Genesis to Malachi. There will be none at the marriage supper of the Lamb. There was none at the last supper of our Lord. There was none at the Cana wedding. There ought to be none anywhere. There is, but I'll not touch it. Other men will, but I'll dissuade them; and as they fall, I'll lift upon them in the name of Jesus Christ. And still they'll drink, and men will sell it to them, and government permit it, but not with my consent.

I call that gospel temperance.

Remarkable Facts.

Heart disease is usually supposed to be incurable, but when properly treated a large proportion of cases can be cured. Thus Mrs. Elmira Hatch, of Elkhart, Ind., and Mrs. Mary L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., were cured after suffering 20 years. S. C. Linburger, druggist at San Jose, Ill., says that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which cured the former, "worked wondors for his wife." Levi Logan, of Buchanan, Mich., who had heart disease for 30 years, says two bottles made him "feel like a new man." Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold and guaranteed by Chas. H. Buss. Book of wonderful testimonials free.

Encourage the Editor.

As a rule the editor gets a thousand kicks to one caress. Once in a while he gets a kind word, and it warms and cheers his weather beaten, storm racked heart to the innermost core. Most people are afraid to tell an editor when he writes an article that particularly pleases them for fear of making him proud, we suppose, but if they find anything that does not accord precisely with their views they will neglect their business to hunt him up and tell him of it. Pshaw! dear friends, don't think you will spoil the editor by giving him an occasional word of cheer any more than you will spoil your child by complimenting her upon a piece of patchwork she has finished. Of course you could beat the job your

The Woburn Journal

FRIDAY, AUG. 14, 1891.

THE JOURNAL is for sale at the stores of Sparrow Horton, 195 Main Street, Charles R. Brown, 156 Main Street, John Cummings, 2d, Cummingsville, Samuel E. Wyman, W. A. Hanson, North Woburn, and at G. P. Brown's Winchester.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

REPUBLICAN CAUCUSES.

The Republican Ward and City Committee of Woburn held a meeting on last Monday evening for the purpose of taking initiatory steps towards opening the fall campaign.

Considering the intense heat that prevailed the meeting was well attended, and an encouraging interest was apparent.

As will be seen by reference to our advertising columns, the meeting voted to hold the Ward Caucuses for the purpose of choosing delegates to the several Republican conventions and to elect a Ward Committee for the year to come, on Wednesday evening, Sept. 9th prox.

AN EXPLANATION.

In this issue of THE JOURNAL appears a communication on the Montgomery-News controversy. It comes from a reputable source.

Now, good sirs, we want it distinctly understood that the JOURNAL'S interest in said controversy is nix. We care nothing at all about the personal quarrels of parties outside of the JOURNAL office.

We don't believe such quarrels are good things for anybody to indulge in.

But this is not our funeral.

So long as Rev. Mr. Montgomery continues to fight illegal liquor selling with an eye single to the glory of God and the best interests of society the JOURNAL is with him soul and body. But when he tries to make ostensibly honest temperance work a tool to bolster up his personal popularity (if he does that thing) then we drop him like a hot potato.

The News has a perfect right to criticise Mr. Montgomery's methods as a public man. Evidently that paper does not agree with Mr. Montgomery in some of his ways of carrying on temperance work; it takes issue with him in a few things. That is legitimate journalism.

No doubt exists in our mind but that the News is as honest in its criticisms of Mr. Montgomery's work as that gentleman is honest in prosecuting it.

The JOURNAL fails to discover much of anything that ought to be a bone of contention between these highly respectable and entirely honest parties.

Gentlemen, let us drop personal considerations and all join hands heartily in the good work of putting down rumselling.

THAT'S NEWS OVER THIS WAY.

Indications point to the nomination Mr. Loring of Melrose as successor of Councillor Byron Truell. It is understood that delegates favorable to his candidacy are likely to be elected in sufficient towns and cities in the District to easily secure his nomination.—Malden City Press.

It is a pity that Mr. Loring can't get an office of some kind or other seeing that his heart has been bent on one so long. He certainly ought to have a nibble at the public crib, and perhaps he will get one one of these days if he will only be patient.

But this don't seem to be Mr. Loring's year for nibbling at the public crib. Certainly not at the Councilor crib, unless he moves into another District. Mr. Byron Truell, the present incumbent, gives good satisfaction and will be re-elected next November unless he delines to fill the place again. Nobody finds any fault with him except those who want to be his successor, and the way he has stood up against the blandishments and bulldozing of Gov. Russell this year entitles him to the most favorable treatment at the hands of the Republican voters of this Councilor District.

GOOD CROPS.

The West are rejoicing in sure signs of the best crops of wheat and corn they have been blessed with for several years past. The same news comes from every section of the Western country and the farmers are happy.

Big crops and remunerative prices will however prove disastrous if not fatal to the political hopes and aspirations of the Grangers. The arch demagogues who head the Farmers' Alliance and are leading the tillers of the soil to pecuniary destruction had rather see almost anything than large crops and quick sales because such agricultural good fortune would thrust them out of employment without ceremony and rob them of a pleasing and profitable occupation.

The big crops of the west have thrown the whole country into a fit of rejoicing, always excepting the demagogues aforesaid.

CITY PRINTING.

We are preparing an article on Woburn city printing principally with a view of finding out why very nearly all of it is given to one particular job office. We propose to give "facts and figures," and we also propose to find out why some of the Departments have never given the JOURNAL job office a penny's worth of work, and others, the merest morsel.

We are in pursuit of more light on this subject and expect to obtain it.

Favoritism in this branch of public expenditures has cost and is costing the City of Woburn more than the taxpayers will put up with when they come to understand all the facts about it.

NOT A SURE THING.

Although straws point strongly in that direction it is not yet settled beyond a peradventure that Mr. Crapo will get the Republican nomination for Governor on the 16th of next month. Collector Beard, albeit getting well along in years, is still a power in Massachusetts politics and unless he is greatly belied he is doing his level best for the nomination of Mr. Allen. Should he continue to exert himself on the same line Crapo may fail of the nomination again this year. Notwithstanding the apparent bent of the Republican sentiment stranger things than the choice of Allen have happened.

REPUBLICAN WARD CAUCUSES.

At a meeting of the Republican WARD AND CITY COMMITTEE held on Monday evening, August 10, inst., it was voted to hold the Republican Ward Caucuses on Wednesday Evening, Sept. 9, 1891,

At 7.30 o'clock, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the several Conventions and the election of a WARD COMMITTEE for the coming year.

A prompt and full attendance is earnestly desired.

H. E. MARION, Secretary.

R. men are walking the streets of Montreal, and they seem happy. 'It is good for sore eyes' to an American away from his native land to see them." Mr. Hayes's father-in-law, Capt. James L. Pinkham, is Past Commander of G. A. R. Post 161 in this city. Evidently Mr. H. has a warm place in his heart for the Stars and Stripes.

— Mr. Curtis Greenwood and wife, and Mr. Ormond E. Greenwood and wife, are enjoying the cool mountain zephyrs, the rural repose, the charming scenery, the clear cold spring water, and the fresh vegetables and spring chickens of the Old Granite State at Woodward's Hotel, Hancock, N. H.

— Monday and Tuesday as specimens of dog-days were simply immense. Quite a good many of outdoor workmen such as painters, roofers, highwaymen, etc. were obliged to knock off work on account of the excessive heat. What added so much to its power on the human frame was its great humidity.

— The "August Meteors" have been indulging in quite a lively and brilliant pyrotechnic display of late. There has been a prolific "fall" of these bodies, the exhibition having set in on Monday evening last with a profusion of them and have continued ever since. The northeasterly part of the heavens is the quarter to look for them.

— Particular attention is directed to the notice of City Auditor Preston in another column of this paper. It contains matter of particular importance to those people who may be fortunate enough to have bills against the city and they ought to read and abide by its rules. Some of them can see by it why their bills are not always promptly audited.

— Mullett, the decorator, etc., of Mechanic Building, has been painting a lot of guideboards for the streets of this city and has made a prime job of it. Some of them which go up on the principal thoroughfares have been gold-leafed, while the others are pure black and white. They are about as neat a lot of signs as you'll find anywhere. Mullett is doing a good deal work for the city.

— Annie M. Smith, Jennie E. Skinner, Agnes Cummings, and Chester R. Smith arrived at the beautiful summer resort, the Na-mat-ta-no, North Lubec, Maine, on Saturday evening, Aug. 8. This delightful place is crowded and two-thirds of the guests are young men—Y. M. C. A. workers. This summer Encampment is a great success. So writes a valued JOURNAL correspondent.

— Last Wednesday a 3-year old child of Mr. Bond on Russell street fell into a well at home and was in danger of speedy death and would have perished but for the heroic conduct of a 11-year old sister who descended the well on its slippery rock walls and rescued the little one from a watery grave. That youthful rescuer deserves a gold medal for her thoughtfulness, coolness and courage.

— There is solid literary meat in generous quantity on the outside of this week's JOURNAL. Many people will be deeply interested in the temperance address of Evangelist Woolley which will attract general attention and ought to be read by everybody because of its intrinsic merits; poetry of the purest water will suit a good many people; then there is miscellaneous reading that will interest everybody.

— Tomorrow is the day appointed for the grand picnic to be given by the St. Charles Total Abstinence Society at Nantasket and if the weather is favorable a very large company will go down. The Ladies' Auxiliary will join with the St. Charles which will constitute a big party, but when the friends come to be added it will be immense. A great number of tickets for the excursion and picnic have been sold.

— A kick against "One Man Power" was the reason given out for not holding the advertisd union temperance meeting last Sunday evening. It was all blamed on to the alleged officiousness of Rev. Hugh Montgomery, while that gentleman laid it to the non-est-come-at-a-bus of "the Committee" and the coolness with which the proposition for a meeting was received by those from whom a cordial response was expected.

— Mr. H. B. Wood of Allston, visited his old home and friends in this city last week. He only recently left here and moved over to the other side of the Hub, but in this short time he has found out that he likes living over there firstrate. He is employed in a responsible and lucrative position in the Streets, etc. Department of the City of Boston where he has the reputation of being one of the best and most capable Civil Engineers in the country. He has a pleasant home at Allston.

— Mrs. Frank T. Robinson, wife of the General Manager of the Johnston Electric Train Signal Company, and daughter, of Melrose Highlands, paid Woburn a visit one afternoon last week. In the course of a pleasant sidewalk tete-a-tete with the Editor the ladies paid the JOURNAL, which has been a regular hebdomadal visitor of their fireside for many years, a handsome compliment for its easily recognized superiority over the common run of country journals designed for family use.

— Poor Hannah Dillon! Betrayed, ruined, deserted, crazed and now under $1000 bonds to appear in Court and answer the charge of an attempt on the life of the man she says ruined her! She was a bright, pretty girl once, as innocent of wrong as the nameless infant she holds lovingly to her breast is of the cause of her mother's shame. Through disappointment and grief poor Hannah Dillon has lost her reason. Twice she has attempted to shoot her former lover for his cruelty in deserting her, and she swears she will be the death of him yet. It is a hard, hard case.

— We entertained quality last Tuesday afternoon, as hot as it was, and in tolerable good shape too. They were editorial visits that we were favored with. First came Mr. W. A. Woodward, Editor of the Milton Journal, one of the livest and best of the suburban newspapers; and in a little while he was followed by Editor Wilson of the Winchester Star, a neat, nice, newsy and well patronized journal in Woburn's prettiest suburb—Winchester. Mr. Woodward is a prominent member of the Boston Press Club, and also a chief promoter of Terminal City, a Boston enterprise located away down in Nova Scotia somewhere. We enjoyed the calls of these worthy members of the craft very much and hope they will come again some day.

— Sarah F. Conn has purchased a portion of the Tidd farm on Salem st. in this city on which she will build a nice house and make her future home there. "Cloverdale Park" is the name given to the fine piece of real property by Capt. Charles K. Conn who is a relative by marriage of Sarah F. and will also reside the principal part of his time on the new purchase most likely.

— Mr. Rufus Smith of Auburn street returned a few days ago from a week's visit with his sister at So. Berwick, Maine, with whom he had a very fine time. While down there Mr. Smith went to Dover, Great Falls, Salmon Falls, and especially "Balanced Rock," a natural curiosity some 10 miles from the residence of his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. Bradford. He was greatly taken with this big bowlder so curiously balanced on another and took measurements of the same. It attracts a great many visitors. Uncle Rufus says he never wants a pleasanter visit anywhere than he had down to So. Berwick last week.

— Look out for fish! At 10 minutes after midnight on Aug. 27 a party of Wilmington bloods will leave the Central House Stables in this city in Mr. Gilman F. Jones's big barge "Commonwealth" for a fishing taip to Swampscott. Mr. Sheldon Sargent is head manager of the enterprise and if he isn't equal to the emergency then nobody is. Judging from specimens seen it will be the jolliest lot of fishermen that ever struck Swampscott or any other seaport place, and it is safe to say they'll bring back all the cod, halibut, mackerel, and other toothsome denizens of the deep that dwell in the region of that delightful summer resort, Old Swampscott.

— On last Friday evening Mr. B. C. Golden gave a very pleasant reception to a large party of his hosts of good friends at his residence at Montvale before sailing the next day with his daughter Nellie for Europe. It was a highly enjoyable affair, the guests being royally entertained by the free-fisted Golden household. On Saturday morning the employees of the Baeder, Adamson & Co., glue works, of which Mr. Golden has been Superintendent for many years, met at the railroad station and gave him and Nellie a hearty sendoff and godspeed. They will be gone about two months and a large part of the time will be spent in Ireland and England.

— Mrs. Jennings's Intelligence Office business has increased very much within the last year and is growing faster than ever at the present time. The reason of this is, that the public, both employers and applicants for places, have complete confidence in the good judgment and business integrity of Mrs. Jennings, which fact brings people from all around Woburn to her office to seek help and employment. Just now the demand for good, trusty, intelligent domestics for service in the best of families is much larger than the supply, a fact which girls who want situations should bear in mind. Firstrate places can be secured by the right kind of girls by applying at Mrs. Jennings's at once.

— Mr. W. W. Hill returned several days since from Minneapolis, Minn., but failed to fetch Mrs. Hill and Miss Avis along with him. It is understood that they will remain there through the month of August and choose the cool of autumn for their return trip. We caught Mr. Hill on the fly a few days ago, but he had got his eye fixed on a man who looked as though he ought to have some insurance on his life and so our interview with him was brief and unsatisfactory. It is surmised by some that Mr. Hill's unusual business activity just now is the result of a loneliness consequent on "keeping Bachelors Hall." The JOURNAL would gladly welcome the early return of Mrs. Hill and the daughter Avis.

— Last Wednesday the proprietor of the JOURNAL establishment received the wedding card of Mr. John A. Shaw and she that was Jane Florence Colwell, who were recently united in the holy bonds of wedlock, as we infer from said card coupled with that of the bride with her maiden name handsomely engraved thereon, for which we return thanks, although we are a good deal in the dark as to the whys and wherefores of the sending of the same to us. Pro forma we return greetings and good wishes to Mr. and Mrs. John A. Shaw of Dover, N. H., and if they turn out to be anybody we know and care something about greetings of a more cordial character will be duly forwarded through the columns of the JOURNAL.

— Mr. Sargent, senior member of the firm of Sargent & Patter, has recently bought of Mr. Forest Hooper his residence property, 22 High street, and converted it into a marbleyard, the firm being stone and marble workers. They have already taken possession and commenced business on the premises and are busily engaged in filling orders for their excellent productions of the yard. There are no better or more skilful workmen in the country than Sargent & Patter. They turn out ornamental work of the most artistic designs in granite, marble, and all other stones; monuments, memorial and mural tablets are a specialty with them; they polish all sorts of products from their chisels in the highest style, and these are some of the reasons why they have so much business on hand. Their patronage is not confined to Woburn but comes from all over this part of the county.

— The Hartwell Family Association will hold their Eighth Annual Reunion at the Town Hall, Concord, Mass., on Thursday, August 27, 1891, at which time several matters of special interest to the family will be presented. Reports of transactions during the year past, election of officers for the ensuing year, dinner, music, speeches, social converse, will fill the day. Those who find it impossible to be present, are requested to forward their annual dues, as the work of collecting and preparing material for the final publication of a history of the family is being actively carried on, and it is of interest to all that no time be lost. Go early, prepared to give details of any changes or additional data within your knowledge as to the records of your respective families. Please notify any members of the family within your reach, to guard against omissions. All members of the Hartwell connection are cordially invited.—X.

— Auctioneer and real estate broker Mr. E. J. Gregory has recently sold for $2,600 the Thomas Ryan property on the southern slope of Academy Hill and adjoining the Esquire Norris homestead, to Mr. Thomas A. Patterson, manager of a syndicate of Boston capitalists who have also bought the aforesaid Norris estate. The sale was a good one, it having yielded Ryan several hundred dollars more than the place cost him. The syndicate above mentioned have under advisement great changes in that part of Academy Hill where their late purchases lie. They are planning for the erection of about a dozen neat, handsome cottages, on which they will go to work at an early day. The cottages will be built in modern style with all the latest improvements and will be offered for sale to the right kind of parties at reasonable figures. This building enterprise will, if we understand the nature of it, be a good thing for Academy Hill. By the way, Mr. Gregory says there is a brisk demand for residence property of moderate costs, say between $1500 and $2500, for the purchase of which he has more applications filed on his books than he has property to meet them with. At no time since he has been in the business here have real estate transactions been so brisk or promised better for the growth and prosperity of our city. Messrs. Cooper & Rand, John I. Munroe, and other real estate brokers tell the same encouraging story.

A Very Pleasant Housewarming.

EDITORS HANDSOMELY ENTERTAINED.

It was a "Press housewarming" at the new quarters of the Burdett Business College, 694 Washington street, Boston, Wednesday afternoon, and nearly 100 representatives of Boston and Suburban papers paid their respects to the institution. The Burdetts have been located in Boston for several years and the methods of instruction which they have advocated and advanced have become so popular that the capacity of their old quarters was found to be entirely inadequate for the accommodation of the large number of people who wished to enroll themselves on the school registers. So the Principals of the school, with the business tact which distinguishes them, cast their eyes about for a better headquarters which they think they have discovered, in the fourth floor of the Commonwealth Building, corner of Washington and Kneeland streets. This is one of the largest and best ventilated structures in Boston and the space occupied by the College is nearly a third of an acre in extent.

Both of the Principals and a capable corps of assistants were kept busy receiving their guests as they arrived, and in showing them the good qualities of their new home. After passing through the pleasant business offices, three in number, of the Principals, the visitors were shown the large room of the Commercial Department with its tall business like bookkeeper's desks. At the Washington street end of this room is located the College Bank with all the usual splendor of plate glass windows and polished brass. This is for a practical demonstration of banking and commercial business, and the pupils alternately serve as Cashiers or depositors, buyers or sellers.

A special currency of the bank is used in the transaction, and this paper has a small pecuniary value which causes the cashier to be careful that the accounts balance correctly. Then there is the shorthand room, and the type-writing room, the intermediate, initiatory, and reception rooms, a large toilet and bath room, and a ladies toilet room. All departments were closely inspected and unstintedly praised.

Several thousand dollars have been expended by the proprietors of the school in the changes and improvements made necessary in the new quarters and have now secured the finest place of the kind in New England. For convenience of location the school cannot be excelled, as it is within a few minutes walk of all the depots, and for ventilation and light it is above possible criticism.

The proprietors have engaged a competent corps of instructors to assist them in their work. P. C. Shattuck will have charge of the commercial department, C. H. Condy, of the intermediate department, H. W. Pelton, of the initiatory department, C. C. Dexter, of shorthand and typewriting, and Miss Bessie G. Moore will be head stenographer and typewritest. There will also be a competent corps of assistants.

The visitors had the pleasure of meeting these gentlemen at the reception and the promenade over the new quarters was made to the music of Baldwin's Cadet Orchestra, while at its conclusion Harvey Blunt, the well-known Caterer, furnished pleasant subjects for discussion. The school opens on the first Tuesday in September.

The JOURNAL man enjoyed the house-warming very much indeed.

Interesting Public Library Notes.

After the customary vacation of two weeks the doors of the Library were opened to the public on Aug. 3, and notwithstanding the absence of many of our patrons from town the circulation footed up to 1254 for the week. It may be interesting to those who have charge of the education of the young to learn of some of the questions which have been presented to the "Bureau of Information" by the children of the grammar classes during the last year. These questions have been largely of an historical nature but we do not hesitate to say that sometimes we have wished we could call to our assistance the storied wisdom of the "Philadelphia lawyer" whom no question could puzzle. "What and where is the Alhambra?" "What has happened to it lately?" "When and where was the first mint of the U. S. established?" "What is Volapuk and by whom invented?" "Who wrote our lives are albums written through with good or ill, or false and true?" What celebrated character after spending sixteen years in writing a history burned it, and why?" "Who was the best of the Cæsars, where and how did he die?" "Who was called the White Rose of Scotland?" "What noted engineer died in 1889, and what was the work that made him famous?" "Mention five Signal stations of the U. S." "How many railroads cross North America to the Pacific?" "What was the classical revival of the fifteenth century called?" "What centuries composed the Dark Ages?" "Where was the first electric telegraph invented and in what year?" How did the term 'Almighty Dollar' originate?" These are called research questions and are without doubt good exercise for our young friends, for, it may be taken for granted, that when the boy or girl becomes interested in the White Rose of Scotland or the fate of the Cæsars the novel or story book will have lost something of its charm.

Among the books which we present are "The Philadelphian" by S. J. Jennings "Adopting an Abandoned Farm" by Kate Sanborn—"Dally" by Maria Louise Pool, Author of "Tenting at Stony Beach." The Golden Goat" by P. Arene. "A Field of Tares" by Clo. Graves. St. Katherine by the Tower," by Walter Besant "Tales of Two Countries" by Alexander Reillard a book of short stories but will be worth reading as it comes from the pen of one who has taken his place among the first rank of Authors and now occupies a conspicuous and famous position as it is said no man has ever written the Norwegian language as this man has written it.

"Book on Farming" by R K. Munkittrick is a book neatly bound pertaining to humor, but the reader may sometimes think the jokes overdrawn but nothing but praise can be given to the unique and abundant sketches from the pen of A. B. Frost, they give the book a distinct value apart from the descriptive matter—"Go Right on, Girls" by Annie H. Rider, who has in the treatment of a very important subject invested it with brightness and interest, which makes it pleasant as well as profitable reading for the class of young people to whom it is addressed, there is much sound practical advice sensibly put on points of every day importance to girls, "Chapters on Physical culture," where it is said, unless we look sharply at ourselves, the glorious physique of the Venus will become more of a myth in the future than it is now. The glorious form divine has become a good deal crooked, crumpled and out of plumb, angles instead of curves are the rule rather than the exception—Chapters on Reading, Conversation, and the importance of using the English language correctly, with as much beauty of voice and manner as possible, for it is true that whether in America or Europe there are such things as a cultivated and agreeable voice, a correct pronunciation and accent and no one is so dependant on these charms as a woman.

The 11th volume of "The Library of American Literature" by Stedman and Hutchinson completes this valuable work. It covers a period of nearly three centuries from the earliest American settlement to the latest time. In this work several requirements have been kept in mind. First it is made interesting and attractive to the general reader, made for popular use and enjoyment. Second it is a book suited to the needs of American Authors and teachers and is also adapted to meet the want of the advanced classes of the public schools—"Church and Creed" by Heber Newton, where he says, I have sought and I trust successfully, in all things, so to speak, as mindful of that Word of old "I Prudence dwell with wisdom" that wisdom which is first is pure, is then peaceable—This book is a defense of one who claims to represent the advanced thought of the time—"Life of Laurence Oliphant and His Wife Alice" in two volumes, by M. O. W. Oliphant, is written in her well known easy and graceful style. Mr. Oliphant's unusual education, life in Ceylon, afterwards his adventurous journey to the East. His explorations in Palestine are strikingly narrated, much is said of Alice his wife and the reader keeps up a certain degree of love and sympathy for her throughout all her strange experiences, she is spoken of as one of the most attractive and charming of Gods' creatures with considerable beauty and much intellect, full of brightness and originality, a fine musician and a brilliant conversationalist, but with all her gifts, was happy in winning the hearts of the Druse women, teaching them a little Western lore in the shape of domestic comforts, ministring to them in their sickness and making herself queen in her little kingdom with all these primitive creatures about her, and who followed her every movement with admiration.—E. Obituary.

On Saturday evening, Aug. 11, at his residence on New Boston street, Mr. Andrew M. Faden departed this life at a ripe old age deeply lamented by a large circle of relatives and friends.

The deceased was born at Bangor, Maine, on Sept. 23, 1812, and was consequently closely verging on four score years. He came to Boston when a young man where he resided for many years and accumulated by industry, economy and honest dealing a competency which he enjoyed in his declining years. For 30 years or more he carried on a provision store at the corner of Washington and Orange streets in Boston; subsequently he did a successful real estate business, from which he retired about 20 years ago and came to Woburn to live.

He had been a singularly healthy man all his life up to two months of his death and a very active, stirring person, having retained his mental and physical faculties in a remarkable degree. He was of a cheerful, happy disposition, and fully enjoyed life.

Mr. Faden left a widow who was his second wife, and one child, Mrs. Dodge, wife of Mr. Frank B. Dodge, the well known jeweler of this city, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and many friends who will miss him and seriously mourn his death.

The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon at his late residence and that of his son-in-law Mr. Dodge, and was generally attended by neighbors and friends. The remains were interred in the Salem street cemetery.

Cummingsville.

Hon. John Cummings continues to improve and gain strength. We all hope to see him as good as new before loug.

Times were never duller in this section of Woburn than they are now. When the John Cummings tannery was in full operation and 150 to 200 men were constantly employ in it, and other manufactories were running, things were lively over here. Money was plenty, men had work enough, and everything was O K. But it is very different now, and the worst of it is, there is no bright prospect ahead.

Dr. I. Sargent formerly a practicing physician in Woburn, died at his residence last Friday evening aged eighty-six years. He fell on the sidewalk and fracturing his hip, 12 years ago which compelled him him to use crutches ever after. His health has been good up to a week ago, when he was attacked with typhoid dysentery. Mrs. Joseph Stevens, his sister-in-law, died in a house near that occupied by him last Wednesday. Dr. Sargent's only surviving relatives are his wife and a sister aged 94 years, who resides in Worcester. The funeral took place last Sunday afternoon at his late residence corner Bedford and Sheridan streets, Cummingsville, at 2.30. The Other Side.

EDITOR WOBURN JOURNAL: As a matter of preface to this communication I submit two or three quotations from the Woburn News which read as follows:

"The gypsy moth and the liquor spotter are abroad in the land. Both pests deserve extermination." This was under date of May 23, 1891.

Again: "We shall not enter into any controversy with the Reverend gentleman, who, it would seem is more desirous of notoriety than anything else."

And once more: "The statement he (Rev. Hugh Montgomery) makes, therefore, that we have denounced him for any such reason as he alleges, is unqualifiedly false."

Now the first quotation given above was apparently one of the causes leading up to a brutal assault which might easily have culminated in murder, the facts pertaining to which are as follows: a few days after the matter quoted was published the two detectives employed by Mr. Montgomery were, in company with a friend, proceeding up Fowle street, where they were set upon by a gang of "toughs" and rowdies who with blood curdling oaths threatened to kill them and forcing one of the detectives to the ground pounded his head upon the stones in such a terrible manner as to give him every prospect of a speedy and violent death. His companions being armed came to his rescue and firing their revolvers into the air caused the crowd to break for cover like the curs they were.

Now, I and other thinking men hold that that significant item, to wit, "both pests deserve extermination," bore its legitimate fruit. The News is evidently trying to crawl out of the charge that it had classed Mr. Montgomery as a seeker after notoriety. I refer your readers to the secon.1 quotation mentioned and ask, Who do they mean? Who, but the brave man who was upholding the laws of God and morality, the very opposite extreme of the nefarious traffic which the News was doing its best to bolster up?

Again they say and repeat literally, "his statements are unqualifiedly false." Now, one word to the writer of these articles: the language of Billingsgate is no part of a gentleman's equipment, and you, my worthy friend, might find yourself a great deal better off without it. Mere bald assertion is not argument, neither is it necessarily fact. I find among all classes of our citizens a most complimentary readiness to testify to Mr. Montgomery's honesty of purpose and this applies to his many enemies as well as his friends, for I have talked with both. One other word to the News: when you talk about "washing dirty linen" don't make a mistake and call whitewashing, "washing." I proffer this advice gratis, as you don't appear to be able to distinguish the difference between covering up a "social ulcer," and eradicating it entirely from the community.

Bearing in mind the excuse offered by the News that the attacks made by that paper upon the pastor of the M. E. church and his people, through him, were prompted by a desire to valiantly defend Judge Converse from the "foul aspersions" cast upon him, the writer of this letter thought he would interview Mr. Montgomery concerning the subject and did so in this manner:

"What are your personal relations to Judge Converse, Mr. Montgomery, and how are they influenced by the outcome of the late liquor cases?"

"Well, said the Rev'd gentleman with a smile, I do not think there are two men in Woburn who understand each other better than Judge Converse and myself and while we may differ in our interpretation of a law I am happy to state that such difference of opinion does not militate against our mutual esteem and friendship for each other in the particle, and as far as needing any defence by the Woburn News, I think my friend, the Judge, with his thirty odd years in the judiciary, is abundantly able to take care of himself."

"How about the refusal of the News to print your reply to the letter of Mr. Dudley which they had copied?"

"Well, in answer to that I would state that Mr. Dudley's reputation has not been gained as a champion of the Temperance cause but as the head and front of the Law and Order League, and after the Boston Herald had opened their columns to my reply to his letter I called at the News office and requested the same courtesy with some little additions but was assured by the Editor that the reply as printed in the Herald was all ready set up and on that account he demurred against making any addition to it. I have not however heard of the News printing it yet."

"Do you know of any reason that the News has for attacking you as it has done?"

"None whatever, unless it arose from circumstances connected with printing a temperance circular in their paper and afterwards using the same matter in some flyers for distribution round town, for which last they charged me about twice the regular rates that I should have paid had it been necessary to set the matter up in type again, which was not the case. I had had some experience in publishing papers, among others the Reformer, the Vim, and the No License Advocate, and knew they were overcharging me, and accordingly said so. Concerning the "advertising" they talk of I would say that when the News was started the Editor came to me and bespoke my efforts in its behalf and while it remained as it began I did what I could to help them."

"Is your church in full sympathy with the position you have taken in this controversy?"

"So far as I know, sir, they are a unit in their support of my course, and I am glad to say that I have the personal assurances of leading members of all the other churches in this city that they heartily condemn the ungentlemanly tactics of my journalistic critic of the News, one of them remarking: 'Mr. Montgomery, I guess the Rum-sellers have more money than you, to spend.'"

As an outsider I came away convinced that the News man was "fooling with a buzz-saw," and while thinking over the matter remembered with some degree of amusement, how the other night at the "Golden Wedding" reception in the M. E. Church the editor of the News, after being cordially welcomed by the pastor and Supt. of Sunday School, in his report of the occasion very carefully placed his own name among the list of speakers, but had not sufficient grace to mention the pastor as taking any part at all. I can't but feel sorry for a man who shows such a spirit as that, and hope that time will heal his wounds.

WINCHESTER.

Last week Mrs. N. L. Maxwell was a visitor at seagirt Wellfleet.

Miss Delia Whitney is spending her vacation in the White Mountains.

Miss E. L. French enjoyed the seabreezes of famous Cottage City last week.

An everlasting lot of our citizens and folks are away on vacation visits. The town is awful quiet.

The veteran but very active and youthful appearing couple, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Twombly, are visiting thy pleasantest parts of Maine and New Hampshire. The senior member of the firm is a native of Old Berwick, York Co., Maine, where and not far away many of the name still reside. And they are very reputable people too, I am informed.

The Star is booming Lawyer McCall again for Representative to the Legislature. Isn't it about time to give someone else a chance? or can't Winchester find anybody else but McCall who is fit for the place? I had an idea that we have considerable quite good timber for Representative besides the Star's pet candidate, but perhaps I'm wrong about it. If McCall's the biggest man in Winchester so mote it be—I'm agreeable.

Quite a good many people would fain make themselves and their neighbors believe that that sign "WINCHESTER" done in plants of brilliant hue on our Common is vulgar, not in good taste, countryfied, verdant, and all that sort of a thing. I don't think so. I like the looks of it. And then it is useful as well as ornamental. It isn't everybody in the world who knows where Winchester is; right or wrong, it does not enjoy a Nation-wide reputation, or even a county-wide one; then what more meet than to hang out a sign and let people know what town they are in when they come along on the trains? Ours is the prettiest Common extant, with its beautiful fountain, velvety sward and emerald-looking shrubbery, and I think "Winchester" in gay colored foliage, right out in the face and eyes of everybody, is pretty if it is countryfied.

THE FIVE THOUSAND FED

LESSON VII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 16.

Text of the Lesson, John vi, 1-14—Commit Verses, 11-13—Golden Text, John vi, 48—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permisson of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "After these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias."

According to Matthew, Mark and Luke this was shortly after the beheading of John the Baptist, and also the return of the twelve apostles from their missionary tour. The disciples of John, having buried his body, went and told Jesus. The apostles, having returned, gathered themselves together unto Jesus and told Him all things, both what they had done and what they had taught (Math. xiv, 12; Mark vi, 30; Luke ix, 10).

2. "And a great multitude followed Him, because they saw His miracles which He did on them that were diseased."

There were so many coming and going that Jesus and His apostles had no time to eat, therefore He said to them, "Come apart into a desert place and rest awhile." So they departed by ship privately, to cross the sea to a desert place belonging to the city of Bethsaida (Luke ix, 10). But the people knew it and ran afoot out of all the cities and outwent them (Mark vi, 31-33).

3. "And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there He sat with His disciples."

4. "And the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh."

It is most interesting to notice that His teaching in the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of this gospel is associated with three different feasts of the Jews (chapters v, 1; vi, 4; vii, 2). When they were first instituted they were called "Feasts of the Lord" (Lev. xxiii, 2, 4, 37, 44), but now the Lord is so completely left out that they are only "Feasts of the Jews."

5. "When Jesus then lifted up His eyes, and saw a great company come unto Him."

The testimony of the other three gospels is that He was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd; that He healed their sick, and that He received them and spake unto them of the kingdom of God.

"He saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?"

Philip was of Bethsaida, and Bethsaida was the nearest city (John i, 44; Luke ix, 10). This may have been one reason why he asked Philip. This apostle is mentioned in the other gospels only once in each, in connection with the choosing of the twelve, but he is mentioned by the writer of this gospel four different times (chapters i, 43-48; vi, 5, 7; xii, 21, 22; xiv, 8, 9).

6. "And this He said to prove Him, for He Himself knew what He would do."

Having chosen us to be His, He lovingly tests or tries or proves us day by day to fit us for better service. After many testings it is written in reference to the hardest yet "God did tempt (or try) Abraham (Gen. xxii, 1). And concerning Israel it is written that the Lord their God led them so as to humble and prove them and do them good at their latter end (Deut. viii, 2, 16).

7. "Philip answered Him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little."

8. "One of His disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto Him."

Andrew was one of the first to follow Jesus, and he was also of the city of Bethsaida (John i, 40, 44). He was one of the four who privately asked the questions which drew from our Saviour the great discourse on last things, which is recorded in Mark xiii, Matt. xxiv and Luke xxi.

9. "There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes, but what are they among so many?"

After healing and teaching the multitudes, the day being far spent, His disciples asked Him to send them away into the villages round about that they might buy themselves bread; upon which He said, "They need not depart, give ye them to eat." Then He asked how many loaves they had, and told them to go and see (Matt. xiv, 15, 16; Mark vi, 35-38). It was after that that Andrew reported the amount on hand, with the remark, "What are they among so many?" Impossible! was evidently the thought of each disciple.

10. "And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down in number about five thousand."

Mark says they sat upon the green grass in ranks by hundreds and by fifties. He who teaches by His Spirit through His servant to "Let all things be done decently and in order" fails not to set us the example Himself, for "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace" (I Cor. xiv, 33, 40).

11. "And Jesus took the loaves."

He had said, "Bring them hither to Me" (Matt. xiv, 18), reminding us of "Come unto Me," "Bring him hither to Me," and of Elisha's "Let him come now to me" (Matt. xi, 28; xvii, 17; II Kings v, 8). Without Him we can do nothing (John xv, 5).

"And when He had given thanks."

The other three say that He looked up to heaven and blessed them. In all things He acknowledged the Father; even He testified, "I can of mine own self do nothing" (chapter v, 30). "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works" (chapter xiv, 10). Do we not see here wherein our great failures lie?

"He distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down, and likewise of the fishes as much as they would."

12. "When they were filled, He said unto His disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost."

"They did all eat and were filled," so say Matthew, Mark and Luke. They had not "each a little," as Philip had thought might possibly be accomplished if the two hundred pence had been forthcoming and the bread obtainable, but all had "as much as they would" (verse 11). When teachers and preachers receive the living bread directly from Him the people will never go away with just a little, but will be filled for the time being and want to come for more.

13. "Therefore they gathered together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten."

Twelve baskets over and above! What a contrast to the five loaves and two fishes with which they started! And 5,000 men had been abundantly fed, besides women and children (Matt. xiv, 21). Is it still possible to do much good with small means, and yet have more left to do with than when we started? Yes, surely!

14. "Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world."

Thus they in some sense believed in Him and would have by force made Him a king, not knowing that His kingdom is not of this world, it is not from hence (verse 15 and chapter xviii, 36).

THE MAN WITH THE MUSKET.

They are building as Babel was built, to the sky,
With clash and confusion of speech;
They are piling up monuments massive and high
To lift a few names out of reach.
And the passionate green laureled god of the great,
In a whimsical riddle of stone,
Has chosen a few from the field and the state
To sit on the steps of his throne.

But I—I will pass from this rage of renown,
This ant hill commotion and strife;
Pass by where the marbles and bronzes look down
With their fast frozen gestures of life.
On, out of the nameless who lie 'neath the gloom
Of the pitying cypress and pine;
Your man is the man of the sword and the plume,
But the man with the musket is mine.

I knew him, I tell you! And also I know
When he fell on the battle swept ridge,
That the poor battered body that lay there in blue
Was only a plank in the bridge
Over which some should pass to a fame
That shall shine while the high stars shall shine!
Your hero is known by an echoing name,
But the man of the musket is mine.

I knew him! All through him the good and the bad
Ran together and equally free;
But I judge, as I trust Christ has judged the poor lad,
For death made him noble to me!
In the cyclone of war, in the battle's eclipse,
Life shook out its lingering sands,
And he died with the names that he loved on his lips,
His musket still grasped in his hands!
Up close to the flag my soldier went down,
In the salient front of the line.
You may take for your heroes the men of renown,
But the man of the musket is mine!

There is peace in the May laden grace of the hours
That come when the day's work is done,
And peace with the nameless, who under the flowers
Lie asleep in the slant of the sun.
Beat the taps! Put out lights! and silence all sound;
There is rifle pit strength in the grave!
They sleep well who sleep, be they crowned or uncrowned,
And death will be kind to the brave.

How Silk is Weighted.

Various methods have been resorted to, with different and in some cases far from satisfactory results, in the weighing of silk, particular efforts having been made in this direction by French and German manufacturers, each having its peculiar advantages, or otherwise. In one of the processes now generally adopted the plan pursued is to reduce the bichloride by water to 30 degs. Reaumur, any stronger solution being likely to injure the fiber, while at 34 degs. the silk is found to become rough and valueless, and at 40 degs. the fiber is dissolved.

The silk is well worked in the solution until complete saturation is effected, allowed to remain two hours in the liquor, and then taken out and washed. The adaptation of this simple method is made apparent in the fact that one dip adds about 8 per cent. to the weight, and three treatments give an increase of about 25 per cent. Bare hands are not used in working the goods in bichloride of tin at 20 degs. Reaumur, as it acts injuriously. The silk has to be well washed before being soaped.—New York Sun.

A Bible Legend of the Panther.

One of the oddest tales in the "Bestiaries," or stories of Bible animals written by the monks, is the legend of the panther. "The panther," so the homily runs, "is the most beautiful of all beasts. More than this, when it goes abroad it diffuses a marvelous sweet perfume. This odor is so sweet that all the other beasts and birds follow the panther wherever it goes. Wherefore the panther is a type of virtue." Perhaps the old monks who borrowed and embellished this story had heard of and misunderstood the strong love of sweet scents which the panther and its relations, the lions and leopards, often show.—Spectator.

Why the Earth Is Round.

It seems as if textbooks for children were now made so simple as to leave hardly any chance for misunderstanding, but the little folks still continue to commit to memory the words without much thought of their meaning. "How do we know that the earth is round?" asked a teacher of one of her boys. The pupil rose promptly and, with a perfectly stolid expression, answered glibly, "We learn that the earth is round from the following facts," and immediately sat down again, evidently feeling that he had given a full and most satisfactory reply.—Christian Intelligencer.

What Makes Hair Grow.

In the case of horses, where the skin has been abraded by the harness, if the galled region is left to itself the hair will grow in, but be colorless, while if oil is applied freely to the abrasion hair of a dark or normal color will be produced, thus indicating that the color is ordinarily due to the secretions of the skin sinking down as a sediment to the base of the hair follicle, where it is absorbed by the shaft of the hair.—Hyland C. Kirk in New York Times.

"Lucy," said her husband, "I'm sorry you don't like my politics an' things, but I've got my opinions, an' I've got to support 'em."

"Well," she replied, "ye'v got me an' the children, too, an' ye kin jis make up yer mind which ye'd ruthur put down alimony fur, yer family or yer opinions."—Washington Post.

MR. ARMOUR'S FIRST COACHMAN.

What Happened When He Gave Him Instructions to Order an Outfit.

"I heard a story about P. D. Armour the other day," said a board of trade man. "It was regarding an incident that occurred some years ago. It was about the time that gorgeous turnouts became fashionable, and Mr. Armour had just purchased a costly carriage and a pair of high steppers to draw it.

"It was the caper then—and is now, for that matter—to have a real imported coachman. To sit behind a coachee who had driven a duchess' carriage was the wild ambition of South Sidedom. Well, Mr. Armour was right up with the procession. He imported an Englishman who was 'strictly proper' as to side whiskers and legs, and who had been employed in the 'hold kentry' by the Duke of Seven Dials or some equally important personage.

"Of course the new man had not brought his master's livery with him, and his wardrobe when he took possession of the Armour reins was not particularly 'smart.' In fact, it was shabby. When the great pork packer ended his first drive behind the imported coachman he looked at the latter with an expression almost akin to contempt and called him to approach.

"'Haven't you any better clothes than these?' he inquired.

"'Hi 'ave not, your honor. W'en iHi was at 'ome Hi wore 'is grace's livery, hand I couldn't 'ave brought that with me; hand, hif your honor pleases —beggin' your honor's parding—Hi thought your honor would find me in your honor's livery.'

"'I haven't got livery—how could I find you in it?'

"'Beggin' your honor's parding again, Hi would be 'appy hif your honor would give me livery,' said the coachman.

"'I don't care whether it's livery or not, but you must dress decently. You can't drive my carriage in togs like you have on now. Here,' continued Mr. Armour, 'go down to this place and tell that man to make you whatever clothes may be necessary,' and he gave him the address of Matthews, the fashionable tailor.

"A week or so later a bill from Matthews came to the office. The clerks read it and whistled softly, and passed it from one to another to admire. That Englishman had played the old man's carte blanche to the limit. There was a 'box coat' that was charged at $90. A 'top coat' for $110. A 'livery suit' for $85. And there were gloves and breeches and waistcoats and more 'livery' till the bill footed up about $500.

"The 'old man' had not yet come to the office, and the 'boys' speculated as to what he would say and do when he saw that bill. All agreed that it would be something out of the common. And it was, but not as we expected it. The 'old man' was younger and more vehement then than he is now, and when necessary he could inject a great deal of forcefulness into his utterances, as many a clerk in the office knew.

"The bill, with others, was laid on his desk, and when he came in the boys stood around in silence and expectancy waiting the explosion. The 'old man' finally reached Matthews' bill. He kind of started at first sight of the figures, but then an amused expression and later a broad smile came on his face.

"'Come here, Favorite, come here, Webster,' said he, calling to him his two chief lieutenants and holding up the bill for their inspection. When they had inspected the bill a moment in silence the 'old man' laughed till his sides shook, and said, with an air of satisfaction, 'That's the kind of a coachman to have; he knows his busines.'"—Chicago Times.

Even Up.

In a fashionable cafe not many blocks from Madison square:

"Waiter," calls a gentleman who was giving the finishing touches to a sumptuous repast, "why do you give me such a small portion of Pont Lveque cheese? I want more than that."

"I am veree sawree, sair, but eet ees against ze rules of ze place to give more of zis sheese at a time, because ze ozer customairs object to ze—you know," replied the waiter, tapping the point of his nose with his index finger.

The gentleman eats his cheese in silence. While sipping his cafe noir and smoking his cigar he calls for la carte, pays the amount of his indebtedness and leaves a nickel on the silver plate for the waiter.

"Zat is a veree small teep, sair," remarks the modest flunky.

"Well," replies the gentleman, "I would give you more, but I understand the other customers object to large tips!"—New York Herald.

Danger in Machine Oil.

Take care how you let any machine oil or lubricator come in contact with a cut or scratch on your hand or arm, or serious blood poisoning may result. In the manufacture of some of these machine oils fat from diseased and decomposed animals is used. All physicians know how poisonous such matter is. The only safeguard is not to let any spot where the skin is broken be touched by any machine oil or lubricator.—Washington Star.

A Cheap Method of Purifying Water.

The method of purifying water invented by Dr. William Anderson, and now employed at Antwerp with success, consists in passing the water through a slowly revolving cylinder containing metallic iron in the form of scraps or filings. The estimated cost of purifying a million gallons in this way is about $1.50.—New York Times.

A National Event.

The holding of the World's Fair in a city scarcely fifty years old will be a remarkable event, but whether it will really benefit this nation as much as the discovery of the Restorative Nervine by Dr. Franklin Miles is doubtful. WAS HE A REBEL?

A Captain Who Fought in Chili, but He Doesn't Know on Which Side.

Captain Kenneth Pritchard, of the British steamship Tangier, had quite a thrilling war experience while at Buenos Ayres. The steamer had been chartered to load cargo at Liverpool for Buenos Ayres, and arrived at that port shortly after the revolution had ceased. All large vessels, such as the Tangier, were compelled to remain out in the Buenos Ayres Roads, which is about fourteen miles from the port. The masters quartered themselves at the different hotels, and most of their business was done ashore until the vessels were loaded or discharged, as the case happened to be.

On May 1 some little trouble again arose between the rebels and the government and another revolution was threatened. The troops began to fire at all rebels, and within a short while firing was general on all sides. Captain Pritchard was anxious to see what was going on throughout the town, and meandered slowly in the direction of the arsenal. Before he had gotten far, however, he was captured by two soldiers and led, at the point of the bayonet, to the arsenal.

He was given a Winchester rifle, and, by command of the officers in charge, was compelled to join the warlike crowd. Without much complaint, but a great deal of nervous dissatisfaction, he began popping away at every object in the shape of a man who passed within range of the arsenal. Here he was kept at work with his rifle for three hours, when he was relieved and a picket put on guard.

An opportunity presented itself, and Captain Pritchard slipped around the wall and escaped from his captors. He had gotten but a few yards from the place when he heard some grape shot whiz by him, and upon looking around he saw two guns being used at the head of the street to keep it clear. Captain Pritchard, without much ceremony, dropped himself into a three foot gutter, and there remained with the water streaming over him for about an hour, when the firing ceased. After that evening the captain did not trust himself far from the hotel until his steamer sailed.

He said he fought hard, but he has not learned whether he was a government soldier or a rebel, and he wasn't curious enough to ask. — Baltimore American.

The Women Conductors.

Dickens certainly made a mistake when he created Micawber of the masculine persuasion. "Waiting for something to turn up" is a feminine characteristic. And after all, isn't it true that "all things come to those who wait?" They do turn up for woman if she waits long enough. Today, after waiting forty years, she beholds 400 occupations open to her. Forty years ago she did not need more than one hand to count all the things she was allowed to do for a living. But one of the things she never did expect has turned up, and this is the woman street car conductor.

She gives perfect satisfaction, they say, and she is certainly picturesque. She wears a blue flannel uniform, a big Panama straw hat and a long white pinafore with frills and innumerable pockets. In the pockets she carries tickets and change, while strapped over her shoulder she carries a small leather bag in which are the surplus money and tickets. She hands the passenger who pays his fare a yellow ticket, which he is supposed to destroy. For all that are missing she must hand over the money.

If there be any she can't account for, the money is deducted from her wages of twenty-five dollars a month. Of course this is not in New York, but it may come some day, since women have begun to enter service on the elevated roads in Brooklyn. It is in Chili that the woman conductor flourishes. After the war with Peru there was a surplus of women that had to be utilized, so they became, among other things, street car conductors.—New York Recorder.

Split the Difference.

"Hev y' got some?"

"That depends."

"Eight fer good ones."

"I met old Brown yest'day; said he 'lowed they'd be 'bout nine."

"No, eight."

"Couldn't make it nine, Zeb, could y'?"

"Not now, Joe. Berries is comin' in right fast now'days."

"Will y' split the difference? Mandy'll feel cut up 'bout it anyway. She 'lowed they'd be nine."

"How many y' got?"

"Three quarts, and they're 'Wilson's seedlin's,' and 's good as y' ever clapped eyes on."

"Wall, I'll do it, seein' it's you, Joe. Bring 'em in."—Chicago Mail.

An Alleged Cure for Cancer.

Professor Rosander, of Stockholm, claims he has found a cure for cancer. According to his statement he has cured four cases of this disease by the inoculation of the patients with some lymph of his own invention. His experiments were varied in so far as the place in which the fluid was injected is concerned, for two of the patients were inoculated in the breast and two in the face.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Grisi's Children.

It is delightful to read of two persons in the same profession who are happily married. Identical tastes and pursuits bring about a certain harmony of relation which is both rare and beautiful. Grisi, the great singer, married the tenor Mario, and some incidents told of them and their children prove an unusually happy domestic life.

The prima donna identified her own success entirely with that of her husband, always preferring his advancement to her own. Perhaps the clever reply which she made to the Emperor Nicholas of Russia was half serious in embodying this spirit of self surrender.

"So," said his majesty jocosely, pointing to her children, "these are your little Grisettes!"

"No, sire," she returned, "they are my little Marionettes."

The children themselves tell an amusing story of their own sensations at one of their mother's public triumphs in Dublin. Grisi's admirers had dragged her carriage to the hotel, and she had sung to them again, "as if she were tearing the harpstrings asunder and singing from the depths of her heart." The enthusiasm of the listeners knew no bounds.

"They climbed up the lamp post," said one of the children, in after years. "We thought they would come into the room, and when one of the speakers called out, 'Leave us one of your children!' our fright was awful. In a chorus of pitiful little voices we begged mamma not to leave us behind; we would be such good children."—Youth's Companion.

Didn't Meet Them.

Mrs. Hayseed—Did ye see any o' them sharpers in the city.

Mr. Hayseed—Not a one, Miranda, not a one. But I met some old friends I never expected to see again. Do ye remember old Mr. Bigcrop? Well, I met a son of his. Thought both those boys was dead an' lyin' out there in the cemetery; but this one said he was snatched by grave robbers, and just as they was sellin' his body to a medical college he came to. Good enough fer a book, Miranda, good enough fer a book, and I told him he ought to write it, and he said he guessed he would, and he'd dedicate the book to me as his father's old friend. There's one queer thing Mirnnda. This man's hair is black, while the Bigcrop boys had red hair, but he said it turned black from fright. He's way up in society, Miranda, and introduced me to young men named Vanderbilt and Astor and Gould and Drexel and ever so many more. I tell you, Miranda, these young fellers spend money! Some bills fer cigars and things came in while we was talking, hundreds o' dollars' worth, an' they whipped out the cash like a breeze. One of 'em happened to run short, and so I lent him all I had, but he said he'd send it by express tomorrow. I tell you what, Miranda, a smart man like me is just as safe in the city as in the country.—Good News.

Carlyle and Bores.

Whether Carlyle was a dead failure or not is a moot point, but he certainly did not know how to put up with bores. "The art of being savage to those people," or "such things"—as he would have designated them—which Scott so signally lacked, was possessed by him in its perfection. What he could "least endure," we are told, was being bored. "The anathemas which he heaped on unfortunate bores exceed Ernulphus' in exquisite variety."

A whole museum might be filled with Carlyle's bores alone. He obtained access to the immortals, and they bored him. To his acrid humor Charles Lamb was something less, almost, than a bore. Coleridge, whom he had not been disinclined to revere, was a bore of the most oppressive kind. "He hobbled about with us," writes the irreverent Thomas, "talking with a kind of solemn emphasis on matters which were of no interest. Nothing came from him that was of use to me that day, or in fact any day."—Exchange.

The Deadly Tarantula.

The poison of the Mygale species of tarantula is of a fearful nature—more dreaded than that of a rattlesnake—and unless only slightly scratched and heroic measures used the result is fatal. Many deaths are on record caused by these spiders. The most prolonged suffering was that of a San Diego woman. A tarantula sunk its fangs in her hand during the night. The flesh was cut away with a razor and medical assistance summoned at once. Her life was prolonged for a time as well as her sufferings. For three months she lingered under the effects, her hands constantly creeping and crawling along the bedding in horrible imitations of the motions of the tarantula.—Florence Companion.

Sentiment in a Big Crowd.

"My Darling."

These endearing words, in bright golden letters, stood out in bold relief on the dashboard of a huge four horse truck in a Broadway blockade of vehicles. They aroused tender memories. The driver looked as unsentimental as possible in his coarse raiment and with his rough manners, but he was not profane or brutal toward his horses. Patiently he awaited the loosening of the jam, while his neighbors filled the air with curses. Finally, his horses becoming restive, he climbed down from his box and soothed them with gentle words and caresses. Then a bystander asked why he called his truck "My Darling."

"Why," he said, "because it keeps green the memory of my daughter, little Nellie. She's dead now, but before she joined the angels she clasped her hands around my neck and said:

"'Papa, I'm going to die, and I want you to promise me one thing, because it will make me so happy. Will you promise?'

"'Yes,' I said; 'I'll promise anything. What is it?'

"'Then, fixing her eyes upon mine, she said, 'Oh, papa, don't be angry, but promise me you'll never swear any more, nor whip your horses hard, and be kind to mamma.'

"'That's all there is about it, mister, for I promised my little girl I'd grant her last request, and, sir, I've kept my word."

Then the blockade was lifted, the big truckman resumed his seat, dashed a tear from his eye and was soon lost in the muddy tide of travel.—New York Herald.

In Time of Trouble.

I don't know of anything easier than to theorize about other folks' troubles. How feelingly we can wipe away our neighbor's tears when her baby dies! What! mourn a bud transplanted, a blossom borne to sunnier gardens, a lamb lifted in tender arms above snow, wind and loss? So we talk until one day death lifts our own latchstring, and away flies our own singing bird to heaven! Are we not dumb then? Do we waste breath then on poetic metaphors or songful platitudes? When the Lord sends along an experience that sears the soul as with a hot iron, or stamps it for eternity with the mint mark of sorrow, we find no help in beautifully turned sentences of comfort, nor in poems, nor philosophies, nor any such thing.

The slow processes of time alone bring healing, and even the passage of years can never efface the scar nor cure its secret bleeding. As well go out and say to the raincloud, "Shed no rain," or to the night wind, "Make no moan," as counsel eyes which grief has touched with the dark chrism of woe to cease their weeping, or hearts which despair has entered to hush the clamor of their pitiful unrest.—Chicago Herald.

The Long Prayer Cut Short.

Many men still comparatively young will remember the terrors of the "long prayer" in the Presbyterian churches of twenty-five or thirty years ago. It seemed to be a matter of personal pride with the old style Presbyterian clergyman to pray as long as he could, and frequently the prayer was longer than the sermon.

A prayer of thirty minutes was extremely common, and not infrequently the supplication extended to forty or forty-five minutes, and when it was ended no one in the audience could think of a single item in the list of human needs that had not been mentioned and asked for. The long prayer is a thing of the past, however, for the tendency among Presbyterian clergymen is to shorten this part of the service, and now, if a preacher prays for more than ten minutes, his congregation show unmistakable signs of weariness.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Salaries of Colonial Governors.

The salaries of colonial governors are absurdly high. New Zealand, for instance, staggering under a pile of debt and an accumulation of disaster, will requite Lord Onslow with £7,500 a year. Bermuda, a petty islet with 13,000 parti-colored inhabitants, and 2,000 acres under cultivation, pays its £3,000 for the luxury of being ruled by General Newdigate; bankrupt Jamaica subsidizes Sir Henry Norman in the stiff tune of £6,000 per annum; out of its £76,000 of annual revenue Fiji, with its handful of white settlers, pays its governor £5,000 a year, and British Guiana is saddled with a governor at £5,000, a lieutenant governor at £1,500 and an administrative entourage whose collective pay is close upon £20,000 a year, its total revenue being considerably under half a million sterling.—London Tit-Bits.

Misplaced Compliments.

"Did you see the notice I gave you?" said the editor to the grocer.

"Yes, and I don't want another. The man who says I've got plenty of sand, that the milk I sell is of the first water, that there are no flies on my sugar, and that my butter is the strongest in the market, may mean well, but he is not the man I want to flatter me a second time."—Harper's Bazar.

BESIDE THE FORGE.

BY FRANK WALCOTT HUTT.

Beside the forge. The children's Poet-seer
Sang not in passion light and insincere
Of "mighty arms," of "large and brawny hands,"
Of "muscle," powerful "as iron bands,"
Of life as strong, of conscience large and clear:
For, lo, the antitype before us stands,
Lord of himself, calm Magus of strange brands
Of strange devising, sputtering there and here
Beside the forge.

So, or in lofty or lowly sphere,
We, the on-lookers, standing idly near,
Toil as he toils, command as he commands,
Grow strong and ruddy as the flame expands,
And mould the magic of each passing year
Beside the forge.

DIMPLE AND DUMPLING.

There was only one chair vacant in a down town barber shop the other day when a tall young man, accompanied by a lady and a lovely little girl of five, entered, and calling the head barber to one side gave him a few explicit directions. Then the little girl's hat was removed, and the barber enveloped her in one of the big white aprons. The young man lifted her up into the barber's chair with a whispered word of reassurance, and the lady, after kissing her, passed her hands caressingly over all the beautiful golden brown curls. Then she sat down in a corner, where the child could not see her face, and pulled out her pocket handkerchief.

By this time the occupants of the five other chairs had become vastly interested. All eyes were fixed on the sweet baby face with its curly halo. It was a pale little face, and there were no rosebuds on its cheeks, but above them were two glorious gray eyes that shone like a pair of stars. On each side of the little face rested a particularly fat curl. The child placed her hand upon each as the barber advanced with the big shears, and gazed beseechingly up into his face.

"Now, Mr. Barber, I want you to leave Dimple and Dumpling until the very last. Cut all the rest of them off first, please. I shall miss them dreffully, you know. Me and Dimple and Dumpling has always been such friends. Dimple is going out to my papa in a letter. My papa is way out in Ceylon, you know. You haven't got a papa way out in Ceylon, Mr. Barber?"

"No, miss; I ain't got none at all."

"And haven't you got a mamma, Mr. Barber? My mamma is going to put Dumpling into her 'Don't You Remember' box. Did you ever see a 'Don't You Remember' box, Mr. Barber?"

"No, miss, I never did."

"Mamma's got such a funny lot of things in it. There's a little bit of orange blossom and a little pinafore that Alec used to wear. That's Alec over there by the window. And there's a little red shoe that was our little bruffer's. His name was Robin, and he died before any of us was borned, you know."

At this moment the mother stepped forward and whispered to the little girl. There was an old gentleman with a very red face in one of the chairs who shook like a veritable jelly at the child's remark. Big brother Alec was blushing furiously and the whole barber shop was all agog.

There was silence for a moment or two, while the scissors went snip, snip, snip. Then the little prattler broke forth again.

"Mamma says I'm talking too much, Mr. Barber; but if I don't talk I shall begin to cry. I cried awfully yesterday, you know; so did mamma and nurse. That was when the doctor came and said they'd have to be cutted off. We all cried—'cept Cecil. He's eight years old. He never cries—'cepting when mamma spanks him; then he howls. But at last I stopped crying, for Alec said he'd take me to lunch with him when we came in to have it done; nurse said she'd let me sit up till half past seven for a whole week; mamma's going to get me a silver thimble, and cook is going to have waffles for tea when we get back. Do you like waffles, Mr. Barber?"

The barber replied in the affirmative, and then there was silence for a little while.

"Have you got a sweetheart, Mr. Barber?" A titter ran around the room and the barber turned as red as his pole outside, but he replied in the negative.

"Alec's got one," pursued the child. "He goes to tea with her on Sunday. Cecil says he is awfully sweet on her. Cecil knows, too; he was under the sofa when"—

But Alec waited to hear no further. He bolted bodily and waited on the corner until the ordeal was at an end. The lady arose and whispered some further cautions, but they proved of no avail.

"Well, Mr. Barber, if you haven't got any sweetheart or papa or mamma, you must be a norphan. Are you a norphan, Mr. Barber?"

The man nodded his head and then asked his questioner to keep her head still, like a good girl.

Another pause. Then:

"Mr. Barber!"

"Yes, miss."

"If you is a norphan what does you say when you go to bed? You can't say 'God bless papa and mamma' any more. I'm very glad I'm not a norphan."

There was a dead silence in the room after that until the redfaced old gentleman blew his nose. The barber's task was almost finished now.

"What's the matter, mamma? You're cryin'."

"Why, no, I'm not Lena. What makes"—

"Oh, but yes you are, mamma. I can hear you sniffling, and besides, I can see your face in the looking glass. There's two big tears running down your nose."

"Now, miss, just please sit steady a minute."

The scissors gave a snip, and poor Dumpling fell down into her lap. Dimple followed an instant later, and the child gazed ruefully at the two beautiful severed curls.

"Goodby, Dumpling and Dimple," she said, and the tears began to gather. They almost overflowed a moment later as the barber lifted her from the chair and she walked to the long mirror to survey herself. But her mother was equal to the emergency. Before Lena had time to realize her changed appearance she called to her to come and help her put Dimple into the letter for Ceylon. The mother wound the two curls about her finger and then tied a little bit of blue ribbon round each of them. She put Dumpling away in her reticule and Dimple was placed among the closely written sheets of foreign paper which she took out of an envelope. The letter was sealed then, and after that they arose to go.

"Thank you very much, Mr. Barber," said the little girl, holding her hand out. "When me and Cecil get whiskers we'll come to you to cut them off. Do you play baseball, Mr. Barber? 'Cause if you do I'm going to give you a present. Would you like a ticket for our baseball match, Mr. Barber?"

She pulled out a little bit of pasteboard from her pocket and handed it to him:

GRAND BASEBALL MATCH.
DICK TURPINS VERSUS TUSCARORAHS.
Admishun, 3 Pins.

"Cecil is captain of the Dick Turpins, and he said now that I was going to have my hair cut off I'd be just as good as a boy. So he's going to lend me a pair of his trousers and I'm to be second base."

A roar arose from each respective chair. As for the jolly old gentleman, he collapsed utterly. In the midst of the confusion the lady tried to escape, but Lena's hat had to be put on and that caused still another delay.

"No more snarls in the morning now, mamma," remarked the young lady as she put it on. But then she drew a very long face. "Oh, mamma, it wabbles dreadfully."

The barber then slipped some paper inside the lining of the hat and they set off.

But just at the doorway the redfaced old gentleman accosted them. He had his hat on by this time, but he took it off immediately and made a most courteous bow.

"Madam," he exclaimed, "there are two things I want particularly, and you can grant me both of them. I want a kiss from that little daughter of yours and a ticket for that baseball match. I can't pay the price of admission, for I haven't three pins to my name, but perhaps this," and as he spoke he slipped something bright and shiny into Lena's hand, "to be devoted to soda water after the Tuscaroras have been completely done up might answer the purpose just as well."

The lady smiled and allowed Lena to give him the desired kiss, but she handed him back the money, and could not be prevailed upon to accept it. Then with a parting nod to the barber the two joined Alec on the corner. When last seen Lena was lifted up to the letter box to dispatch Dimple on the first stage of its long journey, and the redfaced gentleman, as he lost sight of her in the crowd on Broadway, vowed fervently that he would see that game of baseball, even if it cost a leg. —Acton Davies in New York Evening Sun.

How to Succeed.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck, but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nervine, discovered by the great specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits, and hysteria. JUST THE PLACE FOR SNAKES.

Where They Lie Around as Thick as Prairie Dogs in a Colony.

"Talking about snakes," said J. A. Prickett, "you should have been with me the other day. I was in the range south of town looking after some mining property recently acquired in that region. I was camped about eighteen miles from the city, and near me was a peculiar mountain known to the old timers there as the Black Range. It is the form of a horseshoe, with the heels pointing south, and consequently the rocks within the arch are open to the rays of the sun on every day of the year.

"Not only that, but the men who know the place say that these rocks draw heat from beneath and are warm at all times, no matter how cold it is about them. However that may be, it is a fact that the nook is a cozy one, and so warm that snow always melts and runs off, no matter how great the fall.

"This you will readily see would make it a splendid resort for rattlesnakes, and they do congregate there in great numbers. The afternoon I was there it cleared off, and the sun shone so bright that my guide advised a visit to the Black Range in order to see the greatest curiosity of its kind in the west. It is needless to say we were not disappointed. When we stood upon the summit of one heel of the horseshoe and looked down into that little nook it presented a sight such as once seen is never forgotten.

"The sunshine had been just warm enough to arouse them from their torpor, and in every direction could be seen snakes sluggishly basking in the first hot rays of the season. It was for all the world like a prairie dog town, save that there were snakes for dogs and the twinkling activity of those little animals was wanting.

"In a few moments I was armed with a twig that would have created consternation at a Donnybrook fair, and was wreaking vengeance for all my family upon the torpid monsters before me. In almost every instance they had not crawled far from their holes under the rocks, and a great many took the alarm, escaping before I could secure an opportunity at their shining backs.

"Thus it was that I only bagged a few hundred, and was obliged to content myself with that. I dare not give the exact number, as you might think it stretched, but it was a pretty fair hour's sport considering the season. The great mistake made was in not taking a shotgun, when the carnage could have been truly frightful."—Butte Inter-Mountain.

Climate and Veracity.

It never occurs to us to expect veracity in Egypt nor in any part of Africa. We should never think of saying that an inhabitant of Malta was untruthful; we should simply say that he was a Maltese. The name Levantine carries with it the same idea. The Levantine, the African, the Oriental habit of indirection is sometimes explained by the amiability of the people, their desire to say that which will be agreeable. Whereas the Englishman prides himself on his blunt honesty and on speaking the truth, especially if it is disagreeable.

But plant the Englishman, or any man whose moral fiber is hardened by a frigid climate, in Egypt, and how long will he continue to speak the truth? How is it about the northern travelers in Africa, who never agree with each other about anything, and habitually accuse each other of misrepresentation? Is this due to climate or to the contagion of a bad moral example in an atmosphere of duplicity?—Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's.

A Restraining Consideration.

A precocious young member of the Loyal Temperance legion, of Kingfield, had learned some profane words, and his mother, on his joining the society, strove to impress upon his mind the necessity of keeping his pledge, which included one against profanity. He was very desirous of changing his kilted skirts for waists and trousers, and she finally told him that when he had left off all swearing and slang words the trousers should be forthcoming.

One day he was building a block house in her presence. He would get it nearly completed, when it would topple over. After several unsuccessful attempts, he jumped up, clasped his hands together and excitedly exclaimed, "If it wasn't for pants, I'd swear."—Farmington (Me.) Chronicle.

How the African Eats.

At eating, the African negro, having always first washed his hands and rinsed his mouth, sits upon the ground, holds the larger pieces between his teeth while he cuts off a bite with his knife, but does not use both hands to hold food, except in gnawing bones; with the usual dishes he lays his right arm over his knees, and reaching into the pot molds the thick mess into lumps about the size of a walnut, which he throws into his mouth with a jerk, without scattering any of the food. To take out vegetables or soup he presses a hollow into the lump and dips with it. Politeness is shown to the host or housewife after eating by smacking loudly enough to be heard.—Paul Reichard in Popular Science Monthly Lacking the Motive Power.

"I wonder why the car doesn't start!" exclaimed an impatient passenger.

"There are not enough people on board yet to make the cargo," replied another who understood the situation.—New York Truth.

Chloroform and Ether.

We believe that St. Bartholemew's hospital is the only one in the metropolis in which a record is kept and statistics published of the number of times anæsthetics are administered during the year. These statistics are both interesting and instructive, and become valuable as showing the current in favor of or against a particular anæsthetic agent.

Turning, for example, to the records of 1879, we find that out of 2,094 anæsthetizations chloroform was given 975 times, nitrous oxide gas alone 112 times, ether alone 23 times and ether preceded by nitrous oxide 983 times. In 1889, however, the records are as follows: In 3,606 administrations—chloroform 1,601 times, gas 686, ether 810, gas and ether 509 times. Thus on comparing these figures the remarkable fact becomes apparent that chloroform has again come to the front as the most popular anæsthetic at St. Bartholomew's hospital.

Not only does the mixture of ether and gas not maintain its position of superiority, as was the case in the year 1879, but in 1889 not even the total administrations of ether alone, and gas and ether combined, reached by a long way the number of administrations of chloroform. It is just possible that in part this change of opinion may be due to the results published by the Hyderabad commission, of which a member of the staff of the hospital was the shining light.

But investigations show that ether has been declining in favor for some years at St. Bartholomew's. In 1888 it was administered 1,003 times out of 3,788, while, during the same year, gas and ether combined was only given 349 times. What a contrast with this eleven years ago, as the records above quoted demonstrate! As we see now, chloroform takes the lead, then a long way behind comes ether alone, while gas and ether combined makes a shockingly bad third.—Medical Press.

Horses Instead of Beeves.

That Paris accepts the horse as a partial substitute for the beeve every one ought to know by this time. Perhaps a page from my own experience may assist in justifying France in what is but one of the gastronomic eccentricities by which she has won inter national renown.

I speak of France because I believe that it was in Paris, which we have her own authority for regarding as France, that hippophagy found its first artistic introduction into modern civilization. That horses have been eaten ever since there were human beings to eat them is as certain as that there are human beings and horses.

The Frenchman, no matter what his other weaknesses may be, is a true philosopher when it comes to his own nourishment. No weed is too humble for a salad, if it be but savory. No experiment is too daring which holds the possibility of a new sensation to the palate. I have always believed that the man who ate the first oyster was at least protoplasmically a French

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Hon. Byron Truell writes to the JOURNAL: "I have decided not to be a candidate for renomination," which leaves the Councillor field open to someone else.

The names most prominently mentioned among the politicians are Hon. Mr. Jefts of Hudson, and Mr. Loring of Melrose, either of whom would fill the bill very well.

Prominent and influential Republicans of the District have importuned Dr. John M. Harlow of this city to allow his name to be presented to the convention but have received no encouragement that he will permit it to be done. It is conceded on all hands that Dr. Harlow would represent the District on the Governor's Council ably and with marked credit to all concerned, and the Republicans who do not approve of the nomination of either Mr. Jefts or Mr. Loring are not without hope that he will reconsider his determination and finally consent to become a candidate. His election would follow as a matter of course by a large majority.

At the present writing it is said that Loring is ahead of Jefts several lengths.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The rum power in this State will leave no stone unturned to elect a Legislature this fall favorable to their nefarious business.

They care vastly less about who shall be Governor than they do about the position on the temperance question of the members of the next House and Senate.

Friends of temperance should make it a point to meet the rum party on their own ground and wage a bold, aggressive and successful fight for the Legislature, on the character of which will depend the result of their work for prohibition next year.

Let good temperance voters see to it then that the right kind of men are nominated for the Legislature this fall, and further, that they are elected.

The rum power must be put down.

IT IS GROWING.

His friends say that the Gubernatorial candidacy of Mr. Allen grows stronger every day.

The Boston Journal's espousal of his cause has added largely to his chances for the nomination.

A dozen of Mr. Allen's most ardent supporters held a symposium in Boston last week at which reports concerning the condition of his canvass were received from all parts of the State. It was agreed that the outlook for the Lowell statesman was brilliant.

There has been a marked change in public sentiment during the last fortnight respecting this business—so much of a change indeed that Mr. Allen's nomination would surprise nobody, unless it might be the Boston Advertiser and a few other of Mr. Crapo's friends.

☞ Mr. E. C. Cottle is talked of for a candidate for the Legislature at the coming election. He is a gentleman of ability and correct principles; and it is quite certain that he would make a strong candidate for votes.

☞ The war on hoodlums which the Boston Traveller is waging is worthy of all praise.

— Mr. Charles H. Taylor, Jr., a member of the Editorial Staff of the Boston Globe, and lady were at Newport last week and attended the races there. So said the Boston Herald.

— Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Darling went down to Plymouth last week and viewed the ground on which the hardy Pilgrims landed on their first visit to this then cold, barren and inhospitable clime.

— The familiar face of Mr. S. Franksford Trull is once more seen on our streets after his Boston business hours. He and his family enjoyed their New Hampshire trip and visit finely.

— Judge Johnson and Mrs. Johnson leave for Bar Harbor to-morrow on a pleasure trip. They will go by one of the fine steamers that ply between Boston and the Maine coast. Bon voyage!

— Mr. Jacob M. Ellis has been awarded the contract of putting in the foundation of the new Central Square school house which is tantamount to saying that it will be a complete and honest job.

— Miss Belle Menard didn't get drowned or shipwrecked down at Cottrge City, leastwise, we saw her on our streets last Saturday and she had no appearance of having met with any marine accident.

— Mr. George H. Carter advertises in the JOURNAL to-day to sell at auction on Aug. 27, at 1 o'clock, P. M., at Winchester, some fine cows and other property which will doubtless find ready bidders. See ad.

— One of Dr. S. W. Kelley's "Complete Combustion" 60 H. P. boilers has been put into the Richardson Brothers Woburn Steam Laundry. They are said to be away ahead of any boiler made in point of utility.

— Police Officers C. F. McDermott and John Welch are taking their annual outing. They will sniff a few sea zephyrs and then take in a supply of mountain breezes, making it a point to tie up at home at least once a week.

— Mr. A. A. Fowle, Managing Editor of the Globe, who has been having a serious time with his old enemy, the rheumatism, has resumed work although not entirely well and makes regular daily trips to the city as usual.

— Several tanneries and currying shops shut down last Saturday to give the employees a chance to attend the grand excursion and picnic of the St. Charles C. T. A. S. and Auxiliary at Nantasket. It was very good of the bosses.

— Col. and Mrs. H. B. Hayes of Main street spent last Monday at the Point of Pines and had a right down good time. The Colonel says he can do as much real solid resting on a hot day as any man of his size and age in America.

— The National Band had fine weather for their open-air concert last Wednesday evening and the people had good weather to assemble to enjoy the music. There was a large attendance and the concert was firstclass in every particular.

— Mrs. Sparrow Horton & Son, florists, have a fine display of German asters, pinks and other summer flowers in the bookstore of Mr. Horton, where bouquets, nosegays, and bunches of other brilliant things can be bought at small prices.

— Members of Company K, 39th Regiment of Volunteers, in this city will hold a meeting this evening at Post 161, G. A. R. Hall on Pleasant st., to make arrangements for joining in the annual reunion of the Regiment on next Labor Day.

— We return thanks to Representative Thomas D. Hevey for a copy of "The Twenty-first Annual Report on the Bureau of Statistics of Labor—March, 1891," which is the work of Supt. Horace G. Wadlin and a very useful and valuable one.

— Mr. William E. Blodgett, who we had hoped had outgrown such boyish things, must needs spend a lot of money to go to Newport to see some lawn tennis played there last Tuesday. We wonder if William will ever get over his youthful follies?

— Last Sunday night Mr. Sewall Taylor of the West Side experienced such a severe attack of cholera morbus in Boston that he was obliged to put up his load of vegetables and betake himself to his home as quickly as a locomotive could carry him.

— The Woburn Traders Association will take their annual outing on Sept. 7—Labor Day. As usual they will probably "flock together" singly and in pairs instead of droves and bevies, and stray off in various directions to various places for fun.

— The Woburn Co-operative Bank held a monthly meeting last week Thursday at which there was sold $2,900 at premiums satisfactory to the Directors. Treasurer Whitcher says more money could have been sold had there been more in the Treasury.

— The following three good men are prominently talked about for the next Mayor of this city, viz.: E. E. Thompson, S. B. Goddard and George F. Bean, the present incumbent. It is more than probable that one of this trio will fill the Mayor's chair next year.

— Mr. Waterman Brown, the venerable and faithful gateman at Church Avenue, was prostrated by an attack of heart trouble or indigestion yestesday and had to be carried to his home at Depot Master Green's close by. It was thought the stroke was a fatal one, but he recovered after awhile.

— Miss Abby McSweeney, an attache of THE WOBURN JOURNAL establishment, is taking her vacation. During her outing she will visit friends at Marlboro, Waltham and other inland points and perhaps go a-fishing. Abigail is entitled to a good refreshing rest, and she's bound to get it.

— The Dow tannery is running nearly full handed. Manufacturers say leather business is going to be good this fall. We don't see much of a prospect for it just now. A great many men are out of employment yet, and we hope it is really true that leathermaking is on the eve of a boom.

— Mr. Waldo Thompson, Manager of Mr. Leonard Thompson's extensive hardware, stove, tinware and building goods store, set men at work last Monday morning to renovating the interior of the building and when the proprietor returns from Vermont he will hardly recognize the premises.

— Rev. Lawrence W. Slattery of St. Charles Church got back to the parsonage last Saturday from his summer vacation which he put in on a yachting trip and enjoyed it to the brim. The Rev. Fr. loves salt water and a yacht dearly and he got well filled up with both on his late ocean voyage.

— Major Ambrose Bancroft, Capt. John E. Tidd, Warren F. Taylor, and other Veterans, attended the reunion of the 32d Regiment at Downer Landing yesterday. These are the days for Regimental reunions at which the Veterans renew acquaintances, enjoy banquets, and have good times. May their shadow never grow less.

— Mr. William P. Pierce, formerly of Woburn and now a live, wideawake and successful leather maker a Olean, N. Y., and family left here last week for a fortnight's sojourn at Biddeford, Old Orchard, Fortunes Rocks, Biddeford Pool and other popular seaside resorts in that region of country. They will return to York State later.

— Mr. Charles March, youngest son of Rev. Dr. March of the First Congregational church in this city, who is an employee of the Pension Department at Washington, visited his father here last Monday morning and left on the same day for an ocean trip to the Kennebec region in Maine in company with a co-worker in the same Department of public service.

— Although it rained all day and part of the time very powerfully the picnic of the St. Charles C. T. A. Society and Ladies Auxiliary at Nantasket Beach last Saturday was a great success. Several hundred tickets were sold and nearly all the holders went. There was dancing in the rink all the afternoon, a good dinner was enjoyed, and many sports indulged in.

— Clerk of the Common Council Lounsbury and Auditor Preston quietly slipped away from their respective posts of duty last week and betook themselves to an out-of-the-way retreat in New Hampshire where they claim to have enjoyed life to the brim. We wish all of our city officials were as worthy of a fortnight's rest as these most estimable gentlemen were.

— We consider Keeler & Co. among the most fair and reliable dealers in furniture to be found in Boston. So far as we know, the public are of the same opinion. The firm deal in the very best goods in their line, all of the latest styles, honest in make, always just as represented, and as favorable bargains can be secured at Keeler's as at any furniture establishment in the country.

— Mrs. E. V. Bridgham and her sister Miss Lydia J. Valentine of Court st. left yesterday for a visit to relatives and friends in Maine, their native State. They will stay in Cumberland County a considerable part of the time, the quaint old town of New Gloucester being their P. O. address. These estimable ladies cherish the old home and visit it as often as circumstances will permit.

— During the past week the family of Capt. J. P. Whitney of Chicago, Ill., have been visiting their uncle L. L. Whitney, Esq., of this city. Mrs. J. P. Whitney, Miss Crescenta and Miss Brizette G. Whitney, and Mrs. Troy Bumstead, with her husband, F. K. Bumstead, Esq., publisher, after visiting various places in the East, concluded that Woburn is a beautiful and thriving city and a good place to live in. The Misses Whitney are highly accomplished young ladies, thoroughly educated in music and other polite arts, and it is suspected, although of course we would not say so, that their uncle L. L. was uncommonly proud of them and enjoyed their visit at his pleasant home in this city very much indeed.

— If any one of the following named gentlemen should be chosen to represent Woburn in the lower branch of the Massachusetts General Court next winter the temperance cause would be safe in his hands, to wit:—Griffin Place, Luke Warren Fowle, Joseph G. Pollard, Samuel Cook, E. E. Thompson. So it would be in the hands of a large number of other gentlemen, for the publication of whose names we have no space this week.

— The Mechanic Investment Company of this city recently elected the following gentlemen a Board of Directors: Charles F. Spear was elected Secretary and W. Frank Fowle, Treasurer: B. Frank Waldron, W. Frank Fowle, Fremont S. Bassett, Charles F. Spear, James E. Furlong, George L. Tebbetts, Charles H. Kimball, Ansel Cummings and Horace N. Conn. This Company is earning at the rate of eight per cent on its stock.

— Com. John Ferguson, Principal City Assessor, is taking a vacation this week and resting. He very wisely remains at his pleasant home in Ferguson Place and passes the time sitting beneath his own vine and fig tree figuratively speaking and does as little thinking and working as the law allows a public officer to indulge in. The Commodore has had a busy season of it over the assessing and tax making and deserves a season of rest.

— The following are the dimensions of the "Balanced Rock" at South Berwick, Me., which Mr. Rufus Smith visited two or three weeks ago and reported to the JOURNAL last week: the small rock on which the large one rests is 2 1-2 feet high and 4 1-2 feet square. The large one is 22 feet long, 18 feet wide and 15 feet high, and the bearing on which it rests on the small one is 2 1-2x4 1-2. The freak attracts many visitors and well it may for it is a great curiosity.

— A large society will soon be formed in this city whose aim and object will be to fight rum. We have been informed that Mr. Griffin Place, Mr. E. Everett Thompson, and other influential citizens will take prominent parts in the organization and inaugurate and wage an aggressive and very hot war against the rumsellers who carry on business without the sanction of or contrary to law. The Society can't organize, equip itself, and go to work a minute too soon.

— Rev. Mr. Jackson, formerly pastor of the African M. E. Church in this city, but now and for several years pastor of a church at Providence, R. I., has been holding grove meetings here this week with much success as to attendance and the arousing of religious feeling among the members of that church. He proved himself while here a successful preacher and pastor and was a great help to his flock both materially and spiritually. He has many friends in this city.

— The Democratic Ward and City Committee held their first meeting of the season at the Central House last Tuesday evening for the transaction of business and to "talk over matters." They appear to be full of pluck and confidence and pretend that they expect to re-elect Gov. Russell this fall! The Democracy are great brags. It was voted to hold the city caucus to choose delegates to the several conventions on Tuesday, Sept. 15. Everybody wants to be a delegate.

— Croquet Redivivus! The fine old game of croquet has come to the front again and is gallantly contesting for first place in public favor with tennis with more than a fighting chance for victory. The fine old game has experienced a wonderful revival all over the country this summer. In some fashionable circles it has been "all the go" while tennis has been relegated to a back seat. Lovers of the sport say croquet has come to stay and we shouldn't wonder if that was so.

— The Rock Cod Club of Wilmington-Woburn, Mr. Sheldon Sargent, President, will fish for their favorite deep water denizens off Swampscott on the 27th instant. At a few minutes past 12 midnight the Woburn members will leave the Central House Stables in Mr. G. F. Jones's "Commonwealth" and proceed to Wilmington where the rest of the party will embark, and thence proceed per barge aforesaid to Swampscott where they will board a schooner and put out to sea. A jolly time is anticipated. The JOURNAL thanks President Sargent for a free pass all through.

— To-morrow Lawyer Curran and Madam Curran of Scott street in this city will take a steamer in Boston for Bar Harbor, Mt. Desert, where, wind and weather permitting, they will arrive on Sunday morning. They expect to remain at that fashionable resort until Tuesday when tents will be struck and they will repair to beautiful Camden, thence to Old Orchard, thence home via the White Mountains. They have marked out a very delightful trip and with good weather will enjoy it. Many months of hard work at briefs and panels has entitled Lawyer Curran to an extended vacation.

— The celebration of the 40th anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hammond's wedding day, which occurred last week, was a very pleasant affair. Many friends and neighbors were present at the gathering, and the beauty of it was that the fair bride and gallant groom of 40 years ago were kept in ignorance of it until their handsome parlors and other rooms were full of the uninvited raiders and noisy with mirth and jollity. A delightful evening was spent by everyone present, and Mr. and Mrs. Hammond will not very soon forget the 40th anniversary of the day of their union in the sacred ties of wedlock.

— We are very glad to learn that proceedings against Mr. Edward E. Heckbert of this city, an instructor in Boston College, for the alleged stealing of a bicycle about a month ago, have been "nol prossed" by the prosecution, he having shown beyond a shadow of doubt that the charge was totally groundless and that he was entirely innocent in the premises. His relatives and many friends in this city are pleased with the establishment of Mr. Heckbert's innocence and his honorable discharge from prosecution. The JOURNAL, knowing that it would wound the feelings of the family and do the young man no good, refrained from publishing anything about the case at the time it happened.

— Mrs. Louise Bangs and her young son Lester and maid, all of Chicago, visited old friends in this city last Monday afternoon. Mr. E. W. Bangs, head of the family, has been a successful Chicago Board of Trade man for more than 20 years, and is at present altogether too busy in the rush and push and swirl of grain corners and all that sort of thing to take a day off on the Atlantic coast, but makes a visit of the Madam and son do for the whole family. Mrs. Bangs, Master Bangs and the maid are guests of Major and Mrs. Dexter Follett at Marblehead Neck, but expect to go to Narragansett Pier next week, and thence home to Chicago.

— In the way of rum raids Chief of Police McIntosh and his aids did a land-office business last Sunday. They seized and brought in a big heap of the stuff, every owner of which we hope will be convicted and sent to jail. That will be their fate if the Chief has his way about it. The places raided were: Mary McGovern, Main street; Silas W. Gordon, Main street; James W. Doherty, Main street; John B. Dever, Main street; Martin O'Hara, Oak street. At each of these contraband rum was seized. Unsuccessful descents were made on the places of Patrick McLaughlin, Main street; Ellen Gilgun, Main street; T. J. Gilgun, Main street; James Tolan, Buckman street.

— At irregular but not lengthy intervals a report comes along that the grand old elms on the northeast side of the Soldiers Monument, in the little triangle formed by the coming together of Winn, Pleasant and Main streets, are to be cut down. The rumor is rife now. Some utilitarian minded person has got it into his head that the triangle is needed for street extension or something of that sort and that the noble old elms must bite the dust. In the judgment of the JOURNAL land enough for streets can be found without the sacrifice of splendid shade trees. They were planted 60 or 70 years ago and have always been precious in the sight of our people. They ought to be allowed to stand. "Woodman, spare that tree."

— Last Monday Leonard Thompson and wife left for Bennington, Vt., to be present at the Centennial celebration of the admission of the State into the Union which took place on last Wednesday and proved to be an immense affair. They were expected back by Manager Waldo Thompson any time before Christmas, the exact date depending somewhat on Mr. Thompson's success in finding interesting things in the history of the Green Mountain State. The study of New England life, manners, events, etc., in its early days has charms for Mr. Thompson in a larger degree than for most men, to which fact may be attributed in a considerable measure probably his visit to the old Bennington Battlefield this week.

— Last evening Mr. Charles Cummings, husbandman, stock raiser, etc., of 35 Cambridge street in this city, left here with his bright little daughter, Miss Sarah Cummings, accompanied also by his sister Miss Anna who is bookkeeper for the grain firm of Cummings, Chute & Co., for Ontario where he expects to buy a carload of prime road and work horses for this market. The party will be away about two weeks and during that time the headquarters of Mr. Charles, Miss Sarah, and her aunt Miss Anna, will be at the Campbell House, Napanee, Ont., where they propose to enjoy themselves to their hearts' content. The best wishes of the JOURNAL accompanied these good people on their journey into Queen Victoria's Dominions.

— We can't remember when we were better pleased with calls than with those received from Mr. John L. Parker Editor of the Lynn Item and formerly Editor and proprietor of the Woburn JOURNAL last Wednesday afternoon, and the gentleman who accompanied him, Mr. Geo. H. Rich, Purchasing Agent for the N. Y. and N. E. RR. Co., a young person who, Editor Parker said, is as good as they make anywhere this year, and we saw no reason to dispute his word on that point. The visit was not a very protracted one but it was lively and cordial on all sides and pleasant to one of the parties at least. Editor Parker looked healthy and thrifty, on which basis the conclusion was reached that he was reasonably happy. A repetition of the call from Messrs. Parker and Rich wouldn't disagree with us—we don't believe.

— We are again indebted to Mr. Levi C. Teel of Cambridge street for a big supply of the wherewithal that makes life pleasant and stout. The suspicion found instant lodgment in our mind that the load of potatoes, sweet corn, tomatoes, squash, cucumbers, apples, etc., which Mr. Teel unloaded from his team at our back door quite early the other morning was intended for Quincy Market and had found its way to our domicile by mistake. For just an instant it occurred to us, "does Mr. Teel drink?" No, and he retains his mental powers in a remarkable degree for a man 82 years old. Then why this whole load of the best vegetables and finest fruit from the Cambridge street farm thus unloaded at our back door? But when we got round Mr. Teel wasn't there to answer us, so the cartload of "produce" was carefully put away in the cellar for winter's use. With thanks.

— Misses Nellie and Lottie Ellis, daughters of Mr. Alex Ellis of this city, went down to Waterville, Me., last week, about which there was nothing very unusual. They have been in the habit of doing it in times past, for their father was a Waterville boy and passed his youth and early manhood in that beautiful college town on the Kennebec. But Miss Nellie did more than go to Waterville—she went to Carritunk Falls which lies many miles further up into the country. Her nephew, son of Mr. Fred W. Ellis of Eagle Pass, Texas, wanted to visit his mother's relatives in upper Somerset county and so while Miss Lottie stopped off and went about among friends at Waterville the young gentleman from the Lone Star State with his aunt Nellie continued on to Skowhegan about 17 miles further up the Kennebec. There they chartered a team and proceeded to Carritunk Falls, the home of the juvinile Texan's mother's people. * * * Miss Nellie says she will never forget that ride from Skowhegan to Carritunk as long as she lives. She found everything just delightful. The roads were of the finest kind; the scenery fair and beautiful; farms and farmhouses the neatest and most attractive; the banks of the Kennebec all the way up just charming; and to say that she was surprised to find such scenery, such roads, such bracing air, and general loveliness, would be drawing it very mild indeed. Miss Nellie and her nephew enjoyed the trip to the full extent of the law; their visit away up there was just as pleasant as anything could be; and the trio returned a few days after delighted and in the best of spirits.

The Cooking School.

Presumably Supt. Richardson is happy. The departments of the Industrial School, a pet measure of his, are all organized and doing business on Academy Hill. Carpentry with the things that go with it, sewing, and (at last) cooking classes, have been formed and the Superintendent says he is in hopes to introduce and establish a class in printing next spring, with which, he flatters himself, his cup of happiness will be full and overflowing. The three departments are making satisfactory progress, so Supt. Richardson affirms, at least two of them are, and the teacher of the third, the cooking class, which was opened last Monday, promises that her poorest scholar shall be able to turn out something altogether superior to "mother's cooking" in less than three months or be turned out of school.

We were sorry that it was deemed advisable to go out of town to procure a teacher of cooking. The fact does not speak well for the skill of Woburn women, unless some other reason than incapacity to teach the important art prevented the employment of some of them in the cooking department.

Competent judges say Prof. Carter is doing excellent work in the Boys Class and is sure to make good mechanics and useful men out of a large share of his pupils. And so it is in the Sewing Class—good work is being accomplished.

The whole establishment is at the present writing in full and very successful operation.

East Middlesex District Medical Society.

Dr. Harrison G. Blake of this city entertained the East Middlesex District (Massachusetts) Medical Society at the Central House on last Wednesday evening when and where a pleasant and profitable evening was spent. About 20 members of the Society were present and partook of the courtesies and generous hospitality of Dr. Blake, by whom nearly every locality in the District was ably represented.

Mrs. McDonald, Manager of the Central House cuisine, got up a very fine supper for the M. Ds, for which she received many warm encomiums at their hands. The tables were handsomely spread and contained the substantials and delicacies of the season.

There was after dinner speaking by the gentlemen at the banquet board, the theme being "Fracture of the Hip." It was intelligently discussed at full length and elicited many opinions and experiences from the representatives of the profession present.

Jacob Brown, Esq., of Canal street, was the only non-professional guest present. Last year he fell from the roof of his residence and had one of his hips terribly smashed, besides receiving other grave injuries. It was generally believed that he could not survive the accident, but the best of surgical skill and treatment enabled him to pull through and today he is a sound man. Dr. John M. Harlow of this city, his medical attendant, took Mr. Brown's case to illustrate his essay on the subject before the meeting.

At the close of one of the most satisfactory gatherings the Society ever held the members arose from the tables and with the compliments of the evening dispersed to their several homes.

Looks Like Allen.

The political indicator points strongly towards the nomination for Governor of Mr. Allen of Lowell by the Republican convention.

His canvass has grown rapidly during the last week or two and his friends are confident that he is the coming man and will be the next Governor of Massachusetts.

Hon. E. D. Hayden, a warm personal friend of Mr. Crapo and one of his original supporters, favors the nomination of Mr. Allen this year. He does so solely on the ground of availability, believing that while Mr. Allen would make no better Chief Executive of the State he would probably command more votes than Mr. Crapo. —A.

One of the hardest things in all public affairs is to keep the brass band from mistaking itself for the entire procession.

A number of the good friends of Mrs. A. F. Auctioneer Gregory says that some 24 nice cottages are to be built on property lately bought by a Boston syndicate on Academy Hill. About $100,000 is to be laid out.

Mr. Marshall Tidd of No. Woburn writes us a P. C. on which he says that he is so well pleased with Cornwall on the Hudson where he and Mrs. Tidd now are that he will remain there two weeks longer.

"Mollie Stark."

Mrs. Charles Sumner Jones of this city is a lineal descendant of General John Stark of New Hampshire, the hero of the Battle of Bennington, a costly monument in memory of which has been dedicated this week in the presence of 75,000 people at Bennington, Vt., where it was fought and a great victory for the American Colonies gained.

There has been much controversy over the alleged expression of General Stark on the eve of that battle: "or Mollie Stark will be a widow," the vital question hinging on the name "Mollie." It used to be supposed that General Stark's wife bore that Christian name, but such was not the case—her name was Elizabeth Page, and his mother's Christian name was Eleanor Nichols, of Londonderry, Ireland; and the fair presumption is that he never used any such expression.

Mrs. Jones traces her family origin on the Stark side back to 1495.

Alaska is not so bad a country as it might be. A party that were recently engaged in fixing the boundary line on the British border found grasses six feet high along the Yukon and Porcupine, which latter extends many miles above the Arctic circle. There were also salmon berries, blueberries, currants and raspberries in profusion, and hundreds of acres of cranberries.

"As long as she was merely my wife's mother," said Mr. Noodad, "I had her pretty well under control. But now that she is my wife's mother and the baby's grandmother, also, she is simply one too many for me."

It Will Make No Odds.

It will make no difference which way the cat jumps at the Republican convention—Editor Barrett will be sure to come out on top.

If Crapo is nominated that will be a defeat for Collector Beard and the Boston Journal.

A little later in the season Crapo will be beaten at the polls (his opponents say) and that will be a victory for the Collector and his organ.

If Allen is nominated that will be a victory for the Custom House. A little later in the season, Allen will be defeated at the polls (so his opponents say) and that will be Editor Barrett's knock-down.

With neither Crapo nor Allen can the Republicans win a victory, say the Democrats and some weak-kneed Republicans.

If the Democrats and weak-kneed Republicans are right, Editor Barrett's friends will turn round next year and say, "We told you so."

They will then insist on it that Editor Barrett is the only Moses who can lead the twice-defeated Massachusetts Republicans out of the wilderness, and they will make the party believe it.

Then what? Barrett will be nominated by popular acclaim; the election will come on; it will be Presidential year; every Granger in the State will crawl out from under the haystack and cast his vote: and Barrett will triumph be a big majority.

Thus a year from now it will be demonstrated that Barrett is the Moses, and his friends will cry out again, "Didn't we tell you so?"

The Advertiser's flop was shrewd politics!—X.

Chicks vs. Hens in Politics.

DEAR EDITOR HOBBS:—An editorial in your last issue relative to Mr. Charles F. Loring's "pecking at the public crib" for an office I interpreted as a gentle dab at Councillor Truell, who is an old political Hen, having fattened at the public crib for years, and should give the chickens a chance. At all events, since your editorial appeared Mr. Truell has withdrawn from the Sixth District Councillor contest leaving a pretty sure thing for the lean political Chick.

But did you know that this Loring is quite a Rooster in public walks? Well, he is, and as Grand Regent of 125,000 Arcanumites in America his reputation for executive ability is not confined to the State.

With your permission I will give a outline sketch of this future Councillor next week: till then the Chicken will peck away and the "cluck" of the Hen will be heard in the land.

A very enjoyable lawn party was given at the residence of Mr. T. I. Reed, Wednesday evening.

— Last Tuesday evening Mr. Arthur W. Wood was given a pleasant surprise on the occasion of his birthday at his residence at Arlington Heights. A party of his friends entered his house and took possession before Mr. Wood had any idea of their presence. He was the recipient of a fine crayon portrait of his little son, Master Ralph, who, in a cute little presentation speech, informed his papa that it was given by "mamma and I" and that it was a picture of "myself." A number of Mr. Wood's musical friends entertained the company with fine instrumental and vocal selections, and Mrs. Martha Sewall Curtis recited "Uncle Podger Hangs a Picture," with the moral that Mr. Wood should keep his picture on an easel. Refreshments to which the company did ample justice were served by Mrs. Wood. The rooms were beautifully decorated with flowers.

[Written for the Journal.]

James Russell Lowell.

"Time, like an ever-rolling stream,
Bears all its sons away;
They fly forgotten, as a dream
Dies at the opening day."

The death of one of our foremost men of letters, a man of New England, and one who was distinguished as a great thinker and a great power for good in the world, immediately calls forth tributes to his genius and character not only from his own people but from foreign countries where his special gifts were so well recognized.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL was born in 1819, and was surrounded in his youth by such minds as Bryant, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Whittier, Emerson, Sumner, and Motley—a galaxy of men who laid the foundation of America's literature. The wide range of Mr. Lowell's studies at an early period of his life, and his introduction to the quaint features of society and manners in foreign countries, prepared him in great measure for the places of distinction and honor which a grateful people were pleased to confer upon him, and he quickly added to his fame as a scholar the renown of a successful diplomatist.

At the early age of twenty-two Mr. Lowell published a volume of poems which has never been reprinted, although many of the poems were revised and incorporated into subsequent collections of his writings. The first series of the "Biglow Papers," one of his early and popular productions, is a satire on the great evils of slavery, exposing to the laughter of the world the politicians and public men of that time.

In 1848 appeared "A Fable for the Critics," a rhymed essay upon the principal American authors. "Among My Books," in two volumes, are found essays on Dryden, Spenser, Wordsworth, Milton and Keats. "My Study Windows" contains dissertations on Josiah Quincy, Lincoln, Emerson, Carlyle and others. "Conversations on Some of the old Poets." Three volumes of miscellaneous poems and one work called "Fireside Travels."

Of his recent works published as late as 1886 is "Democracy," including addresses on Garfield, and his eloquent address on the 250th anniversary of Harvard. A volume entitled "Political Essays" appeared in 1888, in which are chapters on the election of 1860; The rebellion, its causes and consequences; McClellan or Lincoln? Reconstruction, and the Independent in Politics. In his argument for a reform party he says:

"It is through its politics, through its capacity for government, the noblest of sciences, that a notion proves its right to a place among the other beneficent forces of nature. For politics permeate more widely than any other force and reach everyone of us, soon or late, to teach or debauch. Our politicians are so busy studying the local eddies of prejudice or interest that they allow the main channel of our national energies to be obstructed by dams for the grinding of private grist. Our leaders no longer lead, but are as skillful as Indians in following the faintest trail of public opinion. What we want is an active class who will insist in season and out of season that we shall have a country whose greatness is measured not only by its square miles, the number of yards woven, of hogs packed, of bushels of wheat raised, not only by its skill to feed and clothe the body, but also by its power to feed and clothe the soul; a country which shall be as great morally as it is materially."

His last work, entitled "Heartsease and Rue," is a book of poems and contains a steel engraving of Mr. Lowell. The descriptive power shown in many of these is one of their most striking merits, and his fancy is beautiful in fine imagery. On the death of Agassiz he writes:

Uprooted is our mountain oak,
That promised long security of shade
And brooding-place for many a winged thought.

* * *

Well might I, as of old, appeal to you,
O mountains, woods and streams!
To help us mourn him, for ye loved him too.

* * *

In shape, in gait, in voice, in gesture true,
And, with an accent heightening as he warms,
Would stop forgetful of the shortening night,
Drop my confining arm, and pour profuse
Much worldly wisdom kept for others use,
Not for his own, for he was rash and free,
His purse or knowledge all men's, like the sea.

* * *

At last arrived at where our paths divide,
"Good night!" and, ere the distance grew too wide
"Good night!" again; and now with cheated ear
I half hear his who mine shall never hear.

* * *

'Tis lips long cold that give the warmest kiss,
'Tis the lost voice comes oftenest to our ears;
We count our rosary by the beads we miss,
He knows at last if Life or Death be best:
Wherever he be flown, whatever rest
The being hath put on which lately here
So many friended was, so full of cheer
To make men feel the Seeker's noble zest.

* * *

We have not lost him all; he is not gone
To the dumb herd of them that wholly die;
The beauty of his better self lives on
In minds he touched with fire.
He was a Teacher: why be grieved for him
Whose living word still stimulates the air?
In endless file shall loving scholars come
The glow of his transmitted touch to share.
And trace his feature's with an eye less dim
Than ours whose sense familiar wont makes numb.

Footprints of the World's History.

Ben Franklin once made the statement, "Schools teach us the rudiments of language, but books teach us how to think; therefore, no man is truly educated unless he is a reader of books." Ben was right, but he lived in an age when books were so scarce, comparatively speaking, that but little of the pernicious in literature was tolerated. But in these days it is different. Your boys thirst for a knowledge of the world, and if you don't give them some wholesome reading to slake that thirst, they will get hold of cheap, sensational stories that will poison their minds and do them terrible injury.

There is such a vast amount of this trashy stuff being poured into the market at the present time, that it is a relief to pick up a new book that is at once thrilling, romantic, wholesome, pure and true.

Such a work is "Footprints of the World's History," the latest and greatest work of the two celebrated historians, John Clark Ridpath and Wm. S. Bryan. These distinguished gentlemen, having won their laurels by independent writings, have cooperated on this work, and produced a gem "of the purest ray serene." It is not a dry, uninteresting statement of the plain facts, but rather each of the most important events of history has been taken up and described by a master of language, who holds the reader entranced as he wends his way along the path of history, following carefully in the footprints of progress.

We are delighted with this superb volume. Perfect in thought, superb in style, and magnificent in execution. The bindings are sumptuous, as are also the many illustrations and colored plates. The Publishers have rightly concluded that such a gem should have a rich setting.

It is a valuable addition to literature. It is a book for the old as well as the young; the married as well as the single; the gay as well as the grave. Everybody will read it with equal eagerness and profit. It is sold only through agents, and the Publishers' advertisement appears in another column.

Boston Theatres.

Neil Burgess is making great preparations at the Park Theatre, Boston, for the production of "The County Fair," which he announces will open the early part of September, and continue for the entire theatrical season of 1891-2. He comes to Boston crowned with the laurels of a four years run in New York city, so there is no doubt as to his reception here.

The stage of the Park Theatre has been entirely rebuilt to accommodate the machinery used in the great race effect in which five horses run continuously in full view of the audience for three-quarters of a mile. Many new and elaborate additions have been made to the scenic, mechanical and electrical equipment used in the New York run, and New Englanders may expect to see marvellous effects in this natural and home-like play.

WINCHESTER.

The Star continues to boom lawyer McCall for the Legislature.

Mr. and Mrs. James Moulton were visiting Norway, Maine, last week.

Col. Nat. Richardson is keeping the Star people well filled up on harvest apples.

The dullness that pervades the town is getting to be extremely monotonous. —Star. Well, I'll be derned!

Editor Wilson of the Star has great faith in the Republican Editorial Association of Massachusetts of which he is proud to be a member.

Mrs. Moses A. Herrick's two Maltese kitties which weigh 12 and 14 pounds each still hold the champion's belt. They are beauties.

Turn your attention to the advertisement in THE JOURNAL this week of an auction sale by Mr. George H. Carter. This will be found an excellent opportunity to buy a firstclass cow.

Mr. W. S. Walbridge and family had a very delightful time down at Chatham, from which popular seaport they have returned. If anybody among us deserves a good time most certainly the Walbridge family do.

The Y. M. C. A. have made out a programme for an excellent course of entertainments this fall and winter, the first one to be given on Oct. 20, and to consist of a concert by Dudley Buck of New York, and Jennie Walker of Boston the soprano.

The following are the officers of Waterford Lodge, N. E. O. P.: Warden, Emmons Hatch; Vice-Warden, G. H. Dunham; Treasurer, G. H. Eustis; Secretary, R. T. Davis; Chaplain, J. P. Boutwell; Guide, G. P. Brown; Guardian, M. A. Cummings; Sentinel, W. T. Dotten.

Rev. Dr. Withrow, the famous Chicago divine, formerly for many years pastor of the Park Street Church ("Brimstone Corner"), Boston, preached at the Congregational Church last Sunday. The Mendelssohn Quartet of Boston furnished splendid music. Mr. George H. Gilbert is entitled to the credit of getting these pulpit and musical stars to come to Winchester.

We have two Dr. Churches in this town, viz: Dr. Benjamin T. Church and Dr. Adaline B. Church. These two popular and successful physicians are very nearly related to each other by marriage and occupy front seats in the best Winchester society. I think Dr. Adaline is in Europe at the present time perfecting herself in her profession. Two or three times before now she has been over to the other side to study in French and German Medical Schools, Hospitals, etc., for she is an ambitious woman and don't intend to let anybody surpass her in a knowledge of medicine and surgery. Dr. Adaline has Boston and Winchester offices and Dr. Benjamin has a Winchester and Woburn office. They are homeopathic M. Ds.

The reception given by Mr. George H. Gilbert at his delightful home, "Sunnyside," last Monday in honor of the 86th birthday of his aunt, Miss Lavinia Farnham, which occurred Sunday, was a rare social event. About 250 guests came from Winchester, North Andover and Boston to tender their congratulations to the esteemed lady, who assisted by her venerable sister, Mrs. Susan J. Smith, received the guests with all the ease and courtesy of a matron half her years. The parlors and other rooms were adorned with roses, asters and gladioli, and an elegant collation was spread in the dining room. Miss Farnham was the recipient of many beautiful gifts and messages of congratulation, of which she prizes none more highly than the following poem, written for the occasion by her devoted friend, Rev. J. E. Rankin, D.D., LL. D., President of Howard University, Washington, D. C. It is called "Rip'ning Heavenward."

Rip'ning heavenward, day by day,
Yielding to the harvest ray,
Walking as in raiment white,
Ready for the sickle, quite.
Till the angel reapers come,
And shall wake the harvest home.
Rip'ning heavenward, year by year,
Till my gracious Lord appear;
Till he clothe me with his grace,
And I see him, face to face.
Robe me in the spotless dress
Of his perfect righteousness.

Rip'ning heavenward, be it mine,
Through his blood, and grace divine;
Loins well girt, and staff in hand,
Nearing my Emanual's land
Till these sometimes weary feet
Tread, at length, the golden street.

Miss Lavina Farnham who has been as a mother to Mr. George H. Gilbert, his own mother dying at the early age of 24 years, will on Sunday, 16th inst., be 85 years of age. It seems most appropriate that her pastor for so many years in Boston, Rev. Dr. Withrow, could preach here on this anniversary day. To further commemorate the event, Mr. Gilbert has secured the finest male quartette in Boston, to sing on this occasion. The quartette consists of Messrs. George W. Want, Dovid M. Babcock, Joseph L. White and Thomas L. Cushman. With Rev. Dr. Withrow of Chicago to do the preaching and the Mendelssohn Male Quartette of Boston, to do the singing, there should not be many empty seats at the Congregational Church on Sunday.—Star. And besides all that Mr. Gilbert is one of the most public spirited men in Winchester.

HE IS THE BREAD OF LIFE

LESSON VIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 23.

Text of the Lesson, John vi, 26-40—Commit Verses, 33-35—Golden Text, John vi, 34—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

26. "Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled."

He reads their hearts, He sees their blindness, and that their only thought is for food for the body. Were they not very like multitudes in our own day, and like very many who bear the name of Jesus, but yet are wholly given up to laboring merely for food and raiment?

27. "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you."

We are reminded of the question in Isa. lv, 2, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto Me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."

"For Him hath God the Father sealed."

This is given as the reason why the Son of Man is qualified to give the meat which endureth. By comparing Eph. i, 13; iv, 30, with Acts x, 38; John iii, 33, 34, it seems to refer to His being sent by the Father and filled with the Spirit. These are our qualifications also.

28. "Then said they unto Him, What shall we do that we might work the works of God?"

He spoke of giving them enduring meat as His gift. They talk of doing something, so blind were they and so blind are we to God's way. How much had they done in the matter of being fed a little while before on the other side of the sea?

29. "Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent."

They spoke of doing the works of God, He speaks of the work of God, for it is impossible for God to work through instruments which He does not control. To believe on Him is to receive Him (John i, 12).

30. "They said, therefore, unto Him, What sign showest Thou, then, that we may see and believe Thee? What dost Thou work?"

It does not seem possible that those who had so recently witnessed the multiplication of five loaves and two fishes to feed five thousand men could ask for a sign.

31. "Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat."

Reminding Him that in the wilderness the people were fed with manna every day, and doubtless saying in their hearts, "You fed us yesterday, it is true, but now feed us again today, as Moses did our fathers."

32. "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven."

He would direct their thoughts not to Moses, nor even to Himself, but to the Father in heaven. This he always did.

33. "For the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world."

Bread is mentioned in this chapter sixteen times, and at least ten times it refers to the True Bread. By considering verses 32, 33, 34, 35, 41, 48, 50, 51, 58, and their context, it will be seen that He is Himself the True Bread, and that we are to eat Him, or eat His flesh and drink His blood (verses 53-56), which, by comparing verses 54 and 47, will be seen to mean that we are to believe on Him, for there are not two ways of obtaining eternal life.

34. "Then said they unto Him, Lord, evermore give us this bread."

Like the woman at the well, who said, "Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw" (chapter iv, 15), she thought only of natural water, and they think only of natural bread.

35. "And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst."

Continuing the thoughts of the last verse that He is our forgiveness, our peace, our assurance, our salvation, read such words as Eph. i, 6, 7; ii, 14; II Tim i, 12; Isa. xii, 2, and do as the people did with the words of Hezekiah, rest yourself upon these words (II Chron. xxxii, 8) and you will know the meaning of this verse of our lesson. "Hunger and thirst" is a phrase embracing all individual needs and unsatisfied desires of man, in all their variety.

36. "But I said unto you, That ye also have seen me and believe not."

"There are some of you that believe not." "Ye will not come to me." "How often would I, and ye would not." "In returning and rest shall ye be saved, and ye would not." "They despised the pleasant land; they believed not His word." "They could not enter in because of unbelief" (verse 64; chapter v, 40; Matt. xxiii, 37; Isa. xxx, 15; Ps. cvi, 24; Heb. iii, 19). Such is the sad refrain all through Scripture, while the loving, tender heart of God is seen in such words as these, "Oh, that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways! * * * He should have fed them also with the finest of the wheat, and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee" (Ps. lxxxi, 13-16).

37. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me, and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

The last part of this verse is familiar to all Bible readers and gospel hearers, and has given rest to many a soul which, having come to Christ, has gone on rejoicing and saying, "Thank God I am not cast out, I have His word for it; and if not cast out I am cast in, I am saved."

38. "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me."

He sought not His own will, but the will of God the Father, which He delighted to do (Ps. xl, 8). He sought not his own glory, but in all things glorified God (chapter viii, 50; xvii, 4).

39. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which He hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."

The elect will not enjoy perfected redemption till the resurrection of the just at the coming of Christ for His saints (Luke xiv, 14; I Thess. iv, 16-18).

40. "And this is the will of Him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on Him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

The Lord is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance (II Pet. iii, 9). He has provided redemption for all in the gift of His Son, that whosoever believeth should not perish, but have everlasting life (John iii, 16).

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

It is practically a tax rate of $16.80 instead of one of 12.60 over which Boston Democratic politicians pretend to be exulting. It will be a sad day for the local machine when the real truth about this double dealing gets to the people.

"GOD BLESS YOU!"

The phrase is trite; the insincere
And heartless glibly use it,
And often hypocrites austere
To aid their projects choose it;
But when 'tis spoken from the heart,
While griefs and cares oppress you,
The sun appears, the clouds depart—
That common phrase, God bless you!

Life often is a dreary road,
Where thorns and briers beset you,
And while you stagger 'neath your load
Small troubles sting and fret you.
It lights the eye and dries the tear,
When all these ills distress you,
If from a friendly voice you hear
The common phrase, God bless you!

And often when the heart would speak
Its impulse sweet and tender,
And other words are all too weak
Its meaning deep to render,
Or gratitude a medium seeks
In which it would address you,
Then in the phrase a volume speaks—
The common phrase, God bless you!

Baboon and Rat.

A curiosity in the way of baboons is offered out at the zoological garden, the name of the eccentric animal being Rocks. Until lately Rocks had the reputation of being a quite well behaved inhabitant of the "zoo," but recently he developed an astonishing love for rats, and in consequence it is almost impossible to keep the place free from the infesting rodents. The baboon is fed on sweet potatoes, and it is customary when mealtime comes for him to break a piece off of a potato and throw it in a corner which he knows is a den of rats, thus endeavoring to entice them from their lair to become his playmates.

When within his reach he fondles them in his own burly manner, which is none too gentle, and not knowing the frailty of the little beast he actually kills them with kindness. Finding the diminutive rodent lifeless it is Rocks' turn to mourn, and he immediately seeks a hiding place for the body in the straw which litters his cage. When the keeper comes to remove the corpse the baboon has the rat well concealed, and is loath to part with it. He barks and sets up a terrible howling, and it requires the combined strength of three keepers to deprive Rocks of his treasure.—Philadelphia North American.

Men and Their Barbers.

Men are often more fussy and particular about insignificant things than women. There are thousands of men in New York who go miles out of their way to get shaved. I know men who come down on the elevated, and who get off at some intermediate point to patronize a favorite barber. They have done so for years. The array of private cups in any shop illustrates the strength of this shaving habit. When a busy business man will sit half an hour in one of these shops and fumble the flash papers while he waits for his particular tonsorial artist to be at liberty, it strengthens the conviction that he is weaker than a woman. The man who doesn't learn to shave himself while his beard is young is laying up a life of slavery to public barbers. In the course of an ordinarily long lifetime he will spend about three years sitting around a barber shop and a year or two more going and coming.—New York Herald.

The Lip in Dental Operations.

A late invention in dental practice is the device for protecting the lower lip of the patient while operating. It consists of a suitably shaped strip of German silver plate, bent to form when placed in position an inverted letter L. A soft rubber pad is held within the bent portion, which is detachable, and is intended to rest upon the teeth to render the device more comfortable and secure. A loop of braid is attached to the lower end, by which the patient can hold the appliance firmly in place. Though designed mainly to protect the patient's lip, this device also protects the fingers of the dentist from the cutting edges of the lower teeth, assists in keeping the mouth open, and possibly partially distracts the mind of the patient from the operation.—New York Telegram.

Negroes in Heaven.

"I knew an Irishman in Amesbury," Mr. Whittier said, his eyes twinkling at the remembrance, "who was very much opposed to social equality for the negro. I said to him: 'But there are many Catholic negroes in Brazil, the West Indies and other places. Thy church accounts of them as it does of thee. And thee'll have to come to it in heaven. Thee'll have to meet the negroes there on equal terms.' I thought that I had silenced him with an unanswerable argument. He sat musing for a moment, then looking up at me, 'And can't the Lord make them white in heaven, Mr. Whittier?'"—Boston Pilot.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr. Frank Huffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds and at that time was not able to walk across the street without resting. USEFULNESS OF SWIMMING.

A Professor That Taught the Art and Yet Could Not Swim Himself.

In my boyhood days water never had any love for me. Whenever I used to go with my playmates to take a bath in the creek near the town where I was born, it would do all in its power to envelop me and draw me down to the bottom. I shunned it.

But a distressing incident changed my determination never to go near water again. I was crossing the old wooden bridge that spanned the creek near our house, when a woman and her child fell into the creek. Both were being rapidly swept away by the strong current and I jumped into the creek. I reached the side of the woman, how I do not know today, and tried to pull them toward the shore, but the antipathy of the water was again aroused and I felt myself sinking. Passers by rescued us and I was the guy of the whole town. Even today some of my friends remind me of that occasion.

Then I swore that I would learn to swim. Not far from where I lived was a school for swimming conducted by a corpulent, good natured gentleman, known as the "Professor." It was to him I went.

He made some sarcastic remarks about the inability of a young man of my age to swim. The first lesson came. A rope was tied around my waist and the professor held the end of it. The first thing I knew I was floundering at the bottom of the tank, gasping for breath. That good natured professor had thrown me into the water. I tried to cry out to him to pull me out, but my mouth filled with water. Presently I felt myself drawn to the surface, and the professor politely asked me how I enjoyed it. I calmed my wrath and told him it was the happiest day of my life. "Now," said he, "you do the strokes as I count."

"One, two, three. One, two, three."

A little more of that and the first lesson was over. So it went on for ten lessons, the professor never missing the chance to pitch me into the tank when I wasn't looking. I made rapid progress and was soon able to swim without anybody's assistance, although the professor still persisted in having the rope around my waist.

It was near my last lesson. The professor and I were alone in the school. He was busily engaged in beating time with his hand—"One, two, three"—and I was doing the strokes. Suddenly there was a heavy splash beside me that sent the water high in the air. The professor had fallen into the water. I had never yet caught him in the water and I felt that it was my chance now to get even with him for always ducking me so unceremoniously. His big, fat head presently appeared on the surface, and I was rather surprised at the peculiar strokes he was making—strokes so different from those he taught the pupils.

"For heaven's sake, save me," he cried. "I'll drown."

"Are you crazy?" said I. "Why should I save you?" I was afraid that he had some trick ready to play upon me.

"Don't stay there and look at me," he whimpered. "I cannot swim."

"You can't swim! Why, you are a professor of swimming."

"Yes," he cried, "but I only teach by theory; I never could swim myself." I crawled out of the water and laughed aloud. Was there ever anything to equal this? A teacher of a swimming school not able to swim himself.

My turn had come now. I called in all the pupils and explained the situation to them, and we looked at him helpless in the water and only greeted his cries for help with derision. However, when there was really danger of his drowning we pulled him out, and it is needless to say that there was no swimming school in that town after that. But although I was taught to swim by a professor who was only a master of the theoretical knowledge of that art, I became an expert at it, and I am happy to say that I was never guyed again after we had saved the swimming teacher from drowning in his own tank.—New York Herald.

A Druggist's Customers.

Retail druggists have two classes of patrons whose patronage does not help swell the profits of the business, and yet these patrons are very numerous. They are the people who ask, "May I look at your city directory?" and "Will you please sell me a postage stamp?" All drug store proprietors are slaves to the custom of keeping a city directory for public use, and but few of them can give any good reason why they should do so any more than retail grocers or the keepers of cigar shops. But the relentless slot machine has interposed between the apothecary's profitless good nature and the postage stamp and city directory patrons. An automatic clasp is now attached to the city directory, with this businesslike inscription across its face, "Drop one cent in the slot and it will open," and in many drug stores will be found a neat little case inscribed, "Drop in a nickel for two two-cent postage stamps."—New York Times.

PADDLE WHEELS OR SCREWS.

Reasons Why the Screw Is Superior for the Long Voyages of Steamers.

The paddle wheel was obviously the first instrument accepted by the early engineers as a means of propulsion. Long after the experiment of H. B. M. S. Rattler had demonstrated the contrary the public faith in the visible wheel was greater in reality and more sincere than that in the invisible screw, and it is probable that it was more the question of cost than anything else that gained the victory for the screw for ocean and general service.

The paddle engine is in itself heavier and occupies more room than the screw engine. It is as a rule more expressive per I. H. P., and in wear and tear—especially of the propeller itself—it far exceeds the screw. It occupies the best part of the ship, and its position is not a matter of choice, as with the screw engine, but is of necessity at or near the middle of the ship. It is evident that a paddle steamer must require more room, and that in moving among ships or other obstructions the liability to damage the propeller is greater than with the screw steamer, and in the case of a long voyage the paddle generally worked at a disadvantage, as at the commencement it was too deeply immersed and at the end not immersed enough for efficient working.

If the sails were set so as to steady the vessel, or if set in sufficient quantity to be of any use in quickening the speed, she was inclined until the lee wheel was "buried" and the "weather" wheel doing very little work, besides there being a general tendency on the part of the ship to turn around, which had to be counterbalanced by the rudder. The race of water from the wheels past the ship being at a high velocity, and raised above the normal level, causes a resistance to the ship beyond that due to her passage through the water, as in the case of a screw ship.

On the other hand, the paddle boat is more readily got into motion and her speed more rapidly arrested than is the case with the screw steamer; and it is claimed for the paddle wheel—although the foundation for such a claim is rather nebulous—that when at full speed the ship is prevented from excessive rolling.—A. E. Seaton in Scribner's.

Paraguayan Ideas of Work.

A French gentleman who has organized a colony called Villa Sana, about twenty leagues northeast of Villa Concepcion, on land belonging to the Paraguayo-Argentine Land company, told me that in the beginning, when he went to survey the ground and to ascertain its exact whereabouts—always a troublesome business in these countries, where there is as yet no topographical survey—he had the greatest difficulty in inducing half a dozen Paraguayans to accompany him. They told him that he would never find the land, that he would be unable to cross the river Aquidaban, and, in short, that his was a wild goose chase. However, when they arrived at the river and the Frenchman simply jumped in and swam across, their amour propre was touched and they swam after him.

These half dozen Paraguayans have remained attached to the colony, but they have lost the esteem of their countrymen. When after the exploring expedition, our Frenchman started from Villa Concepcion with his sixty colonists and his train of bullock carts and impedimenta, the loafers of the town said to the few Paraguayans who accompanied him and were helping in the loading, "What? Are you as big fools as those Europeans, to work like that?"—Theodore Child in Harper's.

Wanamaker's New Office Desk.

A unique feature has been added to his office desk, the addition being the suggestion of Mr. Wanamaker and the outgrowth of his daily experience in the administration of his exacting office. Instead of the usual cloth top a large plate glass covers the surface of the desk, and beneath it is a map of the United States, showing parts of Canada and Mexico.

A writing pad rests upon the glass, and there are the customary fittings, as well as the papers, which are usually found in the workshop of a busy man like Mr. Wanamaker. The map shows the counties in each state, the principal cities and towns, the lines of railways, etc., and when visitors talk to Mr. Wanamaker about the post routes and postoffices he can follow them on the map which is spread out before his eyes as he sits at his desk.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Colleges and Degrees.

Nothing cheapens the college more than the careless conferring of degrees. To degrade a degree into a mere personal compliment, without due regard to its essential propriety, is to wound education in the house of its friends. This sensitiveness of the leaders of education to the subject of degrees is a sign of the deeper interest in the higher education. But it must not be forgotten that the phrase is not exact. There is no point at which primary education ends and higher education begins. Secondary education is only more education.—Harper's Weekly.

Looking for New Books.

The other day a visitor entered the public library and passed some time in looking at the list of new books. Then he went to the counter and in a few moments the Librarian stepped along to attend to his wants. Some time was passed in inquiring about the latest publications, when he suddenly asked: "Have you any late books by Charles Dickens?"—Bangor Commercial.

I have had catarrh for twenty years, and used all kinds of remedies without relief. Mr. Smith, druggist, of Little Falls, recommended Ely's Cream Balm. It is soothing and pleasant, and I strongly urge its use by all sufferers.—Geo. Terry, Little Falls, N. Y.

SOCIAL WORK FOR SINGLE MEN.

The Part That the Bachelor Masters of Ceremony Play in Japan.

Whenever a festival came to pass the arrangements fell into the hands of a special class of the community called wakaishi. These were in fact the bachelors of the community. They formed a sort of society or guild, and no one could be admitted without proper indorsement and a vote of acceptance. They were rather a wild set; they could not be called industrious, and the wineshop was the favorite rendezvous of these pleasure loving youths.

A merchant who had an eye to his son's future would seldom consent to his joining the band; and it was thus more numerous where artisans, whose sons had greater liberty, were more plentiful. But Japan is a marrying country; very few men, and still fewer women, continue long unmated; and no cho contained more than fifteen or twenty wakaishi. There were two or three classes; one class was well off, and was expected to spend money handsomely; the others possessed less and were called on for less. It was into the hands of this gay company that the arrangements for merry making were always placed. The occupation was a congenial one, and this disposition of it came about naturally enough.

There was one part of the duties, however, which was not very pleasant—was, in fact, according to Japanese ideas, even a little debasing. This was the soliciting of contributions for festival expenses. The wakaishi played the disagreeable part in old Japanese life that the book agent and campaign fund collector play with us. As a festival approached the wakaishi went to the sahai-nin and the house owners, and received general directions about the mode of celebration. Then a number went the rounds to collect subscriptions. Everybody knew how much his neighbor was worth, and each was asked to give a certain sum, according to his means.—J. H. Wigmore in Scribner's.

Soldiers' Yarns.

It was in one of the soldiers' homes scattered over the country, and those familiar with the spirit there prevailing know that of all spots where questions of military merit are tenaciously discussed these are the most remarkable. Leaving out the earnestly fought arguments relative to the abilities of particular generals, the doings of special corps or regiments, the interest with which many individuals insist upon their personally having been more or less of a pivot upon which the fate of a battle if not the whole war turned, must be seen to be appreciated.

In this instance, that it was just after Decoration Day, when campaign memories are especially active and access to the outer world with its mellowing influences is easier, may have had something to do with it. But it goes upon record that never were three veterans—all belonging to different regiments—more strenuously self assertive regarding the parts they had played in the whole unpleasantness.

It had gone from simple facts to the farthest kind of long bow shooting all the way home. "Do you know," finally cried the one with the crutch, breaking down all vocal opposition, "at the first Bull Run I remember shooting thirteen of 'em at a stretch!"—Philadelphia Times.

Boot Polishing Machine.

A machine has been patented for use in the office or the home which will enable the matutinal "shine" to be achieved under new conditions of ease and economy. The machine is so constructed that the operator can seat himself in front of it, place his feet on the rests each side of a rotary roller, brush the inner sides at the same time, and by alternating the feet from one rest to the other enable the whole surface of the shoe to be effectively polished.

Underneath the brush is a depressible foot plate set on springs to afford easy position for finishing the top of the shoe. A belt from a driving wheel engages with a V-grooved wheel on the shaft of the brush and drives it at a multiplied speed. The shoes are cleaned of dust or dried mud very quickly, and the blacking is applied in the usual manner by a daubing brush, after which the polishing process is quickly completed.—New York Telegram.

Africans Wash but Never Wipe.

Great attention is given in most of the African tribes to the care of the body. The teeth are cleansed with a stick which has been chewed into a kind of a brush. The hands are washed frequently, not by turning and twisting and rubbing them together one within the other, as with us, but by a straight up and down rubbing, such as is given to the other limbs. This manner of washing is so characteristic that an African might be distinguished by it from a European without reference to the color. The sun is their only towel.—Paul Reichard in Popular Science Monthly.

Write Short Letters.

A young woman in Pennsylvania took a novel way of selecting a husband from her choice of six admirers. She bade each one write her a letter setting forth his proposal in due form. When the letters came they ranged in length from six lines to six pages. The young woman, believing brevity to be the soul of wit, chose the shortest epistle, which ran thus:

"I will always try to do my duty as a faithful husband."

The directness of this epistle won her heart and she has married the writer.—Detroit Free Press.

Woes of a Married Man.

Two old fellows were in the seat behind me in the car. They had just met by accident, after a long separation, and having discussed the weather, the crops and the Farmers' Alliance, they fell upon domestic matters.

"You married a Grayling, didn't you?" asked one.

"Yes, my first woman was a Grayling. Good woman too."

"Yes, I bet she was good if she was one of old Hiram Grayling's girls."

"Well, she wasn't as good to work as some of the other girls. Now when it come to pickin' bresh and helpin' with the clearin' she wasn't much good; said her back give out, and all that."

"Naw," said the other sympathetically.

"Yes; but then she was better than most women. I didn't do as well the last time."

"Is that so? Le's see—who did you marry last time?"

"I married that girl of Ben Evans', you know—the one who used to look so healthy. She got sick with typhoid fever right after harvest, two years ago, and lost all her hair. When she got well she was always dingin' at me for money to buy a switch. Now, my wife had on a good switch when she died, and we didn't even put it in the coffin with her. But do you think that Evans woman would put the thing on her head! No, sir. She said if I couldn't afford as many hair switches as I could wives I might go to grass. Just goes on talkin' that way, you know."

"Too bad," said the other man. "She'll be wanting a new coffin all to herself, the next thing you know."—Chicago Herald.

Charity Misapplied.

The superintendent of a children's charity institution remarked: "Ah, there is one lady of fashion in this city whose goodness of heart is certainly without a parallel among her set. I can't tell you her name, because she objects strongly to having her kind deeds known. She is a true Christian at work, even if she does dance a great many nights away and own a fortune's worth of diamonds."

"Does the lady give a lot of money to the institution?" the superintendent was asked.

"Oh, no," he replied, "she doesn't give money to us, but she labors for us. She does indeed. She cooks for us continually. Every day there are pies and cakes and puddings sent in to the children from her, and I have proof that they are all made by the lady herself. How she ever finds time for it all is more than I can explain. Only a few moments ago I received here two dozen custard pies, four suet puddings and six sheets of sponge cake, with this note saying that she had just baked them all and hoped the children would enjoy them."

"And they just will enjoy them, won't they?" said the listener.

"Well, no," replied the superintendent. "You see, they won't eat them."

"Won't eat them?"

"No. That's the only trouble with this good, charitable lady. No one can eat anything she cooks."—New York Sun.

Might Have Been a G. C. B.

No incident in Disraeli's career is more pleasant than his offer of a pension and a G. C. B. to Carlyle. A friend of Sir William Fraser walked with Carlyle for two hours on the day on which Disraeli's letter arrived. Carlyle described the letter being brought to him by a treasury messenger, the large black seal, his wonder as to what the official envelope could contain, and his great surprise on reading the offer, conveyed in language of consumate tact and delicacy. Carlyle said: "The letter of Disraeli was flattering, generous and magnanimous; his overlooking all that I have said and done against him was great."

He added: "The accurate perception of merit in others is one of the highest characteristics of a fine intellect. I should not have given Disraeli credit for possessing it had it not been brought home so directly to me." He repeated the words "generous" and "magnanimous" several times. Disraeli's letter, by the way, though it entirely deserves the praises above quoted for its tact and delicacy, is by no means impeachable in grammar, for it contains within a dozen lines two instances of the hanging "and which."—Pall Mall Budget.

Outside and Inside.

The ingenuity of people who think they are ill when they are not quite triumphs over any external evidence of health.

A very stout German workman went to a physician in the west and complained of being very unwell.

"But," said the doctor, "if you are sick it has not prevented you from getting pretty comfortably fat."

"Oh, dot fat!" said the German. "Yes, I am fat on de outside, but on de eenside, ach! I am so poor!"—Youth's Companion.

A Brave and Simple "No."

The American captain was asked why, with his ship in extremity and the waves washing men overboard, he had suddenly hauled down his flag of distress. He and his crew had seen that the British steamer was lowering one of her boats (it rescued them) and had doubted whether a boat could live in that sea. "I said then to my men, 'Shall we let those brave fellows risk their lives to save ours?' and they said 'No!' Then I hauled down the flag."—Academy.

Woman's Column.

Mrs. Hayes and Her Child.

The daily papers of the country lately told how a drunken and brutal husband took his two-year-old child from its mother and hid it in Canada. They told how the mother found it after months of search, a poor little neglected child, still wearing the one dress, all in tatters and dirt, which it had on when it was stolen away. They told how the mother was pursued by men with pitchforks, and how at the trial Canadian law still left the child with the father (such a father!) while the mother, by every testimony, was an excellent woman.

There are only six States in the Union where the same thing might not occur. So long as women excuse themselves, say they have all the rights they want, and neglect or refuse to lend a hand to the movement for the equal rights of women, there is no hope of a change in the law to protect mothers in their right to their children, or to secure other sacred rights. The legislature of Massachusetts, and those of other States, have long been asked that mothers may have an equal legal right to the children with their fathers, so that neither may dispose of the custody of the child without the consent of the other. But we have asked in vain. Women have no votes, and they will ask in vain till they do have votes. The women who have never lent a hand to secure equal rights for women must thank themselves for much of the injustice done to their sex.

A Fatal Mistake.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary in his new book on "Heart Disease," which may be had free at Chas. H. Buss's who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequaled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulder, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, dropsy, etc. His Restorative Nervine cures headache, fits, etc.

SOME PICTURES FROM LIFE.

BY A CITY MINISTER.

"There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

I have somewhere seen some pictures drawn from human life. The place and the author are forgotten. But the pictures themselves are indelibly impressed upon my memory. And they are so true to life, as we find it in some portions of our city, that I make bold to pen in my own language the ideas of another.

SCENE I.

It is the Sabbath. Its holy calm rests on sea and land.

The silvery tones of a church bell ring sweetly upon the evening air. Well-dressed people pass in through the door and take their places in the cushioned pews. The choir sings, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go unto the house of the Lord."

The minister preaches of Heaven to-night; and as he warms with his theme, men and women who came in burdened with care and sorrow forget it, and bask for a while in the borrowed glory of that sinless home. As he closes he repeats the text, and how much sweeter and tenderer it seems now than ever before. "There shall in no wise enter it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."

SCENE II.

Almost within the shadow of that church spire, not a block away, shines out upon that same calm Sabbath evening the rosy light of a saloon. It is no low groggery; it is a high-licensed saloon. Some of the officers of the church signed the petition that it might be established. And strange as it may seem, ministers are not wanting to defend its being open on the Sabbath.

Sleeping birds hang in gilded cages among the trellised vines that clamber over the door. The aroma of flowers breathes from its decorated windows; and floating out upon the evening air comes the voice of music and song. The song of the care-free. The song of the wine-full. Birds in a saloon! Flowers in a saloon! Music in a saloon! Light and warmth and welcome in a saloon! If this place were advertised as it ought to be, blood mark its portal instead of bloom; skeletons would hang amid its trellised vines; and instead of music and mirth, there would come from within the screams of the maniac and the curses of the damned. But who enter? Look! Young men with light and joy and hope before them. Old men with light and joy and hope behind them. Gray hairs in a saloon! Clustering brown hairs in a saloon!

But look! Who enter now? Men in middle life. Men on whose shoulders rest the responsibilities of matured strong manhood. Men who with voice and pen and hand are shaping the policy of government and the destiny of the nation. These men in a saloon! Oh! what scenes rise before the startled vision. If they could only see the tendency of such a course; the troops of undone duties left behind them; the silent, unconscious influence that go out from them; the imps of darkness that gloat over them; they would never enter the saloon again. But no! they only see the glint and the glitter. They are strong, and they laugh at the fears of others.

The clock strikes twelve; a form rises in the back part of the room and totters across the floor, pauses at the door to cast a half-idiotic glance at the sleek man who pours out the beverage of hell and clinks the money into his coffers. And a sweet boyish face, the pride of some mother's heart, goes out into the night, home. Home! did I say?

SCENE III.

A beautiful mansion. Rich furniture abounds in its apartments. Costly pictures adorn its walls. Art, culture, wealth and love have combined to make it a home indeed.

Father, mother and sisters have long since returned from church. Bright visions of the Heaven of which the minister spoke float round each quiet pillow.

A strong hand grasps the handle. The doorbell rings with such sudden violence as to waken every inmate. That can't be Willie! for he he has a night key. Ah! mother, your boy cannot use the night key to-night. His brain is inactive—locked by the last glass.

Police enter and lay upon the sofa the limp form of a boy just budding into manhood.

"My boy drunk!" falls from the lips of the mother and echoes through the corridors of that home. The father paces the floor in silence; the sisters sit by in tears. How now like mockery seem those pictures the minister drew of Heaven! The police go out, leaving the sorrowful home in silence, broken only by the sobbing of bursting hearts.

SCENE IV.

The church again. The bell is ringing. Not those merry peals that call the happy people to worship. It is the measured tones of the funeral knell. Slowly the people enter and take their places in the pews. In a beautiful casket before the pulpit lies the form of that boy. His beautiful locks parted from a manly brow disclose a dark scar, which tells its own tale—the work of the last glass.

The minister begins to read, "I am the resurrection and the life." But there echo and re-echo above these words—Does that mother hear, she who had borne that boy in sorrow, and guided his infant steps? Does that father hear whose heart is crushed and bleeding by the disgraceful death of an only son? Do those sisters hear? The minister continues: "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead"—but louder and still louder echo the wards, "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God." Yes. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Christian Intelligencer.

Practical Southern Chivalry.

A Virginia correspondent of the Woman's Journal says:

"A curious incident occurred recently in my own experience. I had befriended, in a small way, a poor woman living near here, giving her odd jobs, etc. I knew nothing whatever of her private life; but judging from appearances, she had very many children and very few clothes. She always arrived with two or three begrimmed little objects trailing after her at short distances. One day, however, she came without any children, and in a great state of perturbation. She sat down, and in queer mountain dialect gave me a glimpse of another life. It seemed she had married since last I saw her. Poor soul! Who can blame her for any experiment, however hazardous? The man proved to be worthless. In the very flush of the honeymoon, he had beaten one of her little girls "nigh on to death." So she decided to leave him, mother-love proving stronger than even this elusive grasp after happiness. She was then busy moving her few effects from his cabin to one she had rented.

"He can't keep my plunder," she said, "like my first man could; and I can still make a home for my young 'uns. Thank God, the law is I can keep what I work for; he can't tech it!"

I sat there amazed. This poor stupid working woman thanking God for a law I never dreamed she had even heard of! It is a recent law passed by the Virginia Legislature, giving a wife her earnings. Yet here it was, giving hope in life, and a refuge and home, to this poor woman and her helpless children.

This is the class that suffers and has suffered, without hope or redress, from unjust inequality in the law, in the old days of the Common Law, when Blackstone described so cheerily how big the stick must be with which a man must beat his wife. The ladies were protected by the spirit of chivalry, infinitely higher than the law.

Sudden Deaths.

Heart disease is by far the most frequent cause of sudden death, which in three out of four cases is unsuspected. The symptoms are not generally understood. These are: a habit of lying on the right side, short breath, pain or distress in side, back or shoulder, irregular pulse, asthma, weak and hungry spells, wind in stomach, swelling of ankles or dropsy, oppression, dry cough and smothering. Dr. Miles' illustrated book on Heart Disease, free at Chas. H. Rust's, who sell and guarantee Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, and his Restorative Nervine, which cures nervousness, headache, sleeplessness, effects of drinking, etc. It contains no opiates.

We are getting nowadays a great many "unsolicited testimonials," so to speak, to the products of American manufacturers. The latest is the letter from Mr. Johnstone, Secretary of the British Legation at Washington, admonishing intending British exhibitors at Chicago to send over only goods of the finest quality and workmanship, as the United States is able to undersell all of the cheaper manufactures.

A Little Girl's Experience in a Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescott are keepers of the Gov. Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich., and are blessed with a daughter four years old. Last April she was taken down with Measles, followed with a dreadful Cough and turning into a Fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "handful of bones." Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They say Dr. King's New Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get trial bottle free at F. E. Lovell's Drugstore.

IN THE WATER WITH A RATTLER.

Wiley Pressed the Button and the Snake Came Near Doing the Rest.

J. C. Wiley, of Brooklyn, who had been enjoying his outing in the vicinity of Blood's, this county, was a passenger homeward bound on Erie train 8. Mr. Wiley told a reporter at the depot that he was going home a week before his outing was over because he had a little experience with a rattlesnake on the Cohocton that had rather unnerved him.

"I was trout fishing Saturday," said Mr. Wiley, "and was wading down the stream with tolerably good success with the trout, when just ahead of me I saw a snake swimming the creek. I didn't notice what kind of a snake it was, but reaching down in the water I found a good sized flat stone and tossed it at the snake. My aim was so good that the stone struck the snake near or on the head, and carrying it to the bottom with its weight pinned it there. The head was held tight beneath the stone, but the tail and a couple of feet of the body were thrust above the surface, where they thrashed about furiously, and I discovered that the reptile was a rattlesnake.

"Acting on the impulse of the moment I did then probably as foolish a thing as any man ever did. I stepped to where the snake's noisy tail and writhing body were lashing about in the water, and seizing the tail jerked the snake from beneath the stone, with the intention of whipping it against a tree that stood at the edge of the creek. Although the snake's head had been jammed down on the bottom by a stone and held there for nearly a minute, the venomous and now furious reptile had plenty of life and no end of malice left.

"I had no sooner jerked his head from under the stone and above the water when he turned on me like a flash, shot his head back and sunk his fangs in the sleeve of my fishing coat just above the wrist. If he had aimed half an inch lower the curved injectors of his venom would have punctured my flesh, and I would doubtless have been saved all of life's subsequent trials. In another second I hurled the deadly reptile from me. It lay for a moment quietly on the water, and then slowly swam on its way.

"It was all I could do to get to the shore, so deathly sick and cold had I become when the full force of the peril my rashness had placed me in rushed upon me. I fell on the bank in a half unconscious state, and it was a long time before I could walk back to where I was stopping. That adventure spoiled all my inclination for rural vacation, and I am going home."—Corning Chronicle.

The Power of Prejudice.

The wife of a New Zealand missionary once had an interview with a native matron who confessed that she would die with shame at the idea of permitting her boy to "run about with an undressed face," i. e., with cheeks free from tattoo marks. The attempt to save native youngsters from the martyrdom of the absurd custom caused repeated riots and disagreeable scenes with the indignant relatives; and with a similar emphasis the eastern Hindoos protest against the abolishment of infant marriages.

In Calcutta alone the indignation meeting of the priests was attended by 185,000 natives, including hundreds of rajahs, merchant princes and scholars, besides tradesmen and peasants. The women of Bengal observed a general fast on the "day of protest;" shrieks and howls filled the air; the population of several cities seemed to have gone crazy en masse. One fanatic offered to sacrifice his life to propitiate the wrath of heaven, and considering the unanimity of the opposition it is the question if the abandonment of the proposed reform would not be a lesser evil. —Philadelphia Times.

Quakers in Great Britain.

It is commonly supposed that the Society of Friends is a dwindling body. Many will be surprised to learn that, so far from this being the case, its members and associates in this country have increased during the last twenty years from 18,000 to about 22,000. In Great Britain there are about 16,000 in actual membership, besides 6,000 others, who, by the regular attendance of its meetings, are practically identified with the body. These 22,000 Friends live mainly in England, where there are about 320 congregations. The Calvinism of Scotland and Wales will probably account for the fact that less than 300 Friends and only about ten small meetings are to be found in those countries. —London Tit-Bits.

Degrees of Comparison.

On public occasions Count Von Moltke was frequently called upon to propose the health of the emperor. At small gatherings he would confine himself to the formula, "Long live the emperor!" On more important occasions he would say, "Long life to his majesty the emperor." At large public banquets the toast culminated in the words, "Long life to his majesty the emperor; our most gracious king and master!"—Allgemeine Zeitung.

Pumpkins Two Feet Thick.

Quite a wonderful tree is the calabash of the West Indies, which bears enormous fruits that resemble pumpkins and grow to be nearly two feet in diameter. With the pulp removed they serve various domestic purposes—for carrying water and even as kettles for cooking—having the great advantages of strength and lightness.—Washington Star.

Nobody Knows

What I suffered for years with those terrible racking sick headaches. Life was only a torment to me; if you are so troubled, I would advise you to use Sulphur Bitters, for they cured me.

The meanest man in the world will agree to everything you say as long as he thinks you are talking about somebody else.

Pitt's Oratory.

The highest impression imparted to me by words spoken was by those which I heard from Mr. Pitt, whose form is even now distinctly before me. His powers were of a mighty order, for none heard him without an absorbing interest, which is proof conclusive. You felt you had been charmed in the listening. It was even to that which you had been thinking of within yourself. There was the secret in his elocution as it is in the antique. In debate caught on the moment he saw intuitively into the minds of his hearers. He identified himself with them and impersonated their prevailing thought, which they with rapture heard in his gorgeous language.

In his periods of majestic correctness, and sometimes so elaborate as to take two minutes in the delivery, he never turned from or broke in upon one impression which he felt was pervading the assembly; all was subordinated to its development—and yet tantalizing in expressing it—protracting as though to be surer of it—after an interval of breathless suspense, he then unfurled its full display, like that of Cæsar's mantle, at the instant of intensest expectation. They voted in delirium. He was the consummate master of his art, and the greatest leader the commons ever had or ever will have.—Pemberton Milnes.

The Cashier Was Sharp Also.

A new version of the flim flam game was tried on the cashier in Dennett's restaurant on Park row on Saturday, but the cashier recognized the game in time to beat the players. There were three of them, all young men, flashily dressed. Each laid a silver dollar down on the desk, and each laid a fifteen cent check beside his coin. While the cashier was fishing out eighty-five cents change for No. 1 in the row of men the men changed places in the row.

The cashier laid the eighty-five cents beside the first dollar, and No. 1 in the row, who had been No. 3 when the cashier began to make change, but was now nearest the door, swept both the dollar and the eighty-five cents change toward him, and was about to gather them up, when the cashier gathered in the pile with his right hand, while with his left he raked in the other dollars which still lay on the desk. Then he distributed the proper change to the men at leisure. They smiled viciously at him, but departed without a word.

"He tumbled blame quick," said one of the men as he stepped out of the door.—New York Sun.

Infantile Reasoning.

The process of the youthful mind when it gets to logical deduction is apt to be fearful and wonderful, and the adult intellect is not always easily able to follow:

At a kindergarten class not long since the teacher asked her pupils to give an example of a cylinder from some object which they had at home.

"Asparagus," one small boy responded very promptly.

"My mother had rhubarb," another said briskly, thus catching at half the cylinder idea, and yet improving an opportunity to boast of something which his family enjoyed.

The third, overcome by the connection of ideas on the culinary side, lost sight of the original proposition altogether and cried out with the air of one who is not to be beaten:

"Well my mother's going to make some root beer anyway!"—Boston Courier.

Peculiarities of Lichens.

The lichen is remarkable for the great age to which it lives, there being good grounds for believing that they endure as long as a hundred years. Their growth is exceedingly slow, almost beyond belief, indicating that only a little nourishment is necessary to keep them alive. In a dry time they have the power to suspend growth altogether, renewing it again at the fall of rain. This peculiarity alone is enough to make the lichen a vegetable wonder, as it is a property possessed by no other species of plant.

Another interesting fact about lichens is that they grow only where the air is free from dust and smoke. They may be said to be a sure indication of the purity of the air, as they are never found growing in cities and towns, where the atmosphere is impregnated with dust, soot, smoke and other impur

RATHER REMARKABLE.

Congressman Henry Cabot Lodge entertained the Suburban Press Association in regal style at his beautiful and luxurious summer home at East Point, Nahant, last Monday. Scenting afar off the rich and abundant larder of the young gentleman who in a couple of years hence is to take Mr. Dawes's place in the U. S. Senate the rustic craftsmen were out in full force and a merry time they had of it. Hospitality was never more liberally extended than on this occasion by Hon. H. C. and Madame Lodge, and for once country newspaper delvers on short commons (and none too good at that) learned what a "square meal" means.

But the following facts furnished by a friend are what suggested the heading to these few hasty and imperfect lines:

"At the Outing of the Suburban Press at Nahant last Monday, it was discovered that six former attaches of the WOBURN JOURNAL were present: Horace N. Hastings, who was foreman of the office in 1851-2; James A. Coombs of Middleboro, who was publisher in 1865; Henry C. Gray of Malden, who owned it in 1867-70; John L. Parker of Lynn, who was proprietor in 1870-80; F. F. Green of the Quincy Advertiser, who learned his trade on it, 1875-8; Frank H. Gray who was an apprentice when his father was publisher."

ATTEND THE CAUCUSES.

A correspondent in this number of THE JOURNAL hits the nail squarely on the head in the matter of attending primary political meetings. Republicans will do well to read the article and then practice its precepts.

Many good men fail to pay any attention to the primaries and then because everything was not done just to their liking they turn round and cry "cut and dried," when nothing of the kind was thought of.

The character of the work done in the conventions depends entirely on that of the caucuses. If Republicans allow these to go by default there should be no whining by them if their candidates fail to get the nomination.

Public interests demand that the best men of the party attend the caucuses. There is much more need of it than is generally realized, else there would not be so many stay at homes as is almost always the case. The place to correct abuses in the nomination of men for office is at the caucuses. If unworthy persons carry the convention the caucuses are to blame for it

Our correspondent lays the case fairly before the Republicans of this city. His words are timely and wise, and we sincerely trust they will be heeded by the Republicans of Woburn on the 9th of September.

A STRONG DELEGATION.

Because it is true that Senator Wyer will meet with no opposition in the convention, and likewise true that he will be re-nominated by acclamation, still as a matter of compliment to him, and as an expression of the esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens, a delegation composed of the best and most prominent men in the Republican party—men enjoying something more than merely a local reputation—should be chosen and sent to the Senatorial convention from this city when it takes place a few weeks hence.

We hope that when the Republican caucuses are held on the 9th of September this matter will be remembered and a good, strong delegation be chosen to appear for Senator Wyer in the convention, notwithstanding the fact that he will be the only candidate voted for in it.

FOR COUNCILLOR.

In another column we give a portrait of Charles F. Loring, Esq., the leading Republican candidate for member of the Governor's Council from this (6th) District, which portrait is accompanied by a biographical sketch of the original from the pen of Frank T. Robinson, a gentleman favorably known as a litterateur and journalist in Boston, New York and elsewhere. Mr. Robinson is well acquainted with the subject of his sketch and can therefore write understandingly concerning him That he writes honestly we have no reason to doubt, therefore we would ask for what he says a careful, unprejudiced perusal by the Republican voters of the Sixth Councillor District.

JUGGED AT LAST.

Last Monday Almy, the murderer of Christie Warden, was taken from from the hotel at Hanover and conveyed to the Hillsboro county jail, there to await his trial for his barbarous crime.

The weight of testimony seems to show that the alleged Almy is no other than Abbott, the great Vermont criminal of a dozen years ago; but the point is by no means settled. We do not accept the testimony or the theory that it is adduced to maintain.

STILL GROWING.

It looks very much as though Mr. Crapo's canvass was rapidly falling into a state of innocuous desuetude and that young Charlie Allen of Lowell is sweeping all before him.

His friends say they can count more than delegates enough to sweep the board, reckoning on a basis of local opinion.

It looks more and more like Allen.

— Towards evening yesterday the grease and oil factory of Mr. B. H. Nichols on Conn street, was badly damaged by fire. It was only a short time ago that the establishment was destroyed by fire and recently rebuilt by Mr. Nichols. No reliable estimate of the damages had been made at our going to press.

— Miss Gertrude Shepard of this city was one of the young ladies who rode in the Randall House coach on the East Side, White Mountains, coaching parade last Wednesday. Her companions were young ladies from Boston and Salem. They were a gay party.

— White Mountain landlords complain bitterly of the decrease of travel and patronage up there. They say the coast of Maine is attracting tourists and summer visitors more and more every year. Maine hotels have driven a thrifty trade this season notwithstanding a cold July.

— Mr. N. J. Simonds has recently invented a piece of machinery to be used in the manufacture of shoe stock which will, it is believed, prove a bonanza to the business and himself. It is said to be a great labor-saving invention. Mr. Simonds is famous for that sort of a thing.

— Some three or four weeks ago George F. French, son of Police Officer A. G French, was severely injured by being caught between the bumpers of freight cars on the Mass. Cen. RR., where he is a conductor. He has at last recovered from his injuries and returned to his train.

— Judge Johnson and family went to Bar Harbor last Tuesday. The Boston papers have had him about to start or on the brimy deep between Boston and Mt. Desert for nearly two weeks, but it remained for the JOURNAL to give a correct report of the Judge's vacation movements—as usual.

— Mr. James Partridge attended a reunion of the Partridge family held at Templeton last week. The gathering was composed of the descendents of Otis Partridge, and the meeting was presided over by Mr. Horace Partridge of Boston. The name is an honorable one in the history of the Commonwealth.

— Harry Hartwell will soon become the champion 'cyclist in this neck of timber if he isn't careful. He is what is commonly denominated a high-rate speeder. Ronco can't hold a candle to him, and it even makes letter carriers Callahan and Maguire pant like wild harts at the running brook to keep in sight of him.

— Burdett's Business College of Boston, acknowledged to be the leader of such useful institutions of learning in New England, will have not less than 10 W. H. S. Class '91 graduates enter its classes this September. That is a goodly number, and is in some degree indicative of the popularity of the Burdett Business College all over the country.

— The Woburn Brass Band gave a rattler of a concert on the Common last Wednesday evening which was highly enjoyed by hundreds of home people and from abroad. The programme was a fine one from beginning to end, and every number was executed in the best of style. Few bands only in this section equal in proficiency the Woburn Brass Band.

— The boys and girls, in view of the nearness of schools' commencement, begin to heave sighs, and indulge in wishes about the length of vacations, and make the most of fleeting hours and days. The resumption of school work is near at hand—quite near—much nearer than many boys and girls wish it was.

— Mr. B. A. Tripp, senior member of the undertaking firm of B. A. & C. E. Tripp of this city, was taken suddenly and seriously ill in Boston last Friday, but managed to get back home without an attendant. — The Lewis Music School will open for business on Sept. 7 next, as the JOURNAL reader may learn by referring to the advertisement of Principal Lewis in another column of this paper. The merits of this institution are too well known at home and abroad to require any commendatory or explanatory words from our pencil, it having been in successful operation five years, and is more flourishing today than ever before. Principal Lewis's card sets forth all the particulars respecting the opening of the fall term which are necessary to a full understanding of the same therefore we direct particular attention to it.

CHARLES F. LORING.

DEAR EDITOR HORNS:—As promised in last week's issue, behold the likeness of Mr. Charles F. Loring!

Now, this is the gentleman whom I would like to have known of men, both in our State and National halls of legislation. Take my word for it, his intellectual circumference will some day make him conspicuous before the people of this country. This is why our Sixth Councillor District should have the honor of first placing him in public position, thus hastening the day when a second GOV. ROBINSON shall take the field and redeem the State.

Mr. Loring is one of those irrepressable spirits that must ultimately rise above the mediocre affairs of life; above the matter of shift, and makeshift politics. His life thus far has been a success and the running reader may scan it as follows:—

He was born in Marlboro, Middlesex County, Mass. Embraced his Alma Mater in Andover, Essex County; and for many years has been a resident of Melrose. He is thus completely identified with the air and atmosphere, the knowledge and love, and is a legitimate heir of any honors which the Sixth Councillor District may vouchsafe a natural son.

His progressive force could not be confined to suburban encounters; the metropolis early found him studying law and by diligence, earnestness of purpose and fine aptitude, he has made a success in his profession, being now an important member of the Boston law firm of Moulton, Loring & Loring.

Again, in another sphere of usefulness he becomes a notable figure. By even, steady and progressive steps he has filled the various Chairs of the Royal Arcanum until to-day he stands at the head of the Order, is Supreme Regent, and his power extends over thousands of lodges in this country.

In his own town he has been honored with local gifts from the peoples' hands; he is on the School Board; is President of the Republican Club and Vice President of the Middlesex Club.

So reads the chronological outline of Mr. Loring's life; and coupled with these distinguished traits and honors which have been confered upon him, I must mention one which the creator has endowed him with, a gift never acquired, but born in man, i. e. that of eloquence. I am prepared to state that he is one of the most pleasant and refined orators now living.

Thus the District may feel assured that Mr. Loring is worthy of further honors, and I opine that the next Councillor Convention in the Sixth District will nominate him easily, and that hereafter honors will be thust upon him without seeking.

FRANK T. ROBINSON.

— Some beautiful bouquets were sent to Mrs. W. R. Putnam last Wednesday by friends just to let her know that the anniversary of her birthday had not been allowed to fade out of their memories; but otherwise the event was suffered to pass without any special note being made of it. But the thoughtfulness and kindness of friends were thankfully appreciated by Mrs. Putnam.

— Messrs. J. W. Hammond & Son will open a big closing-out sale at the Boston Clothing Co. store this morning and continue the same until the entire stock is disposed of. There isn't much doubt but that great bargains will be offered to the public, for the proprietors are bound to sell everything in the store at some price or other. This opportunity to buy clothing cheap ought to be improved. See ad.

— Capt. John E. Tidd and Mrs. Tidd returned from their summer vacation, which was delightfully spent down on Cape Ann, last Saturday evening. Capt. Tidd is a principal Deputy Sheriff of Middlesex County, with hands full of legal documents a good part of the time, and so his absence from the post of duty was not permissable for only about two weeks, but that brief period was enjoyed for all it was worth.

— It should be recollected that although tuition seems steep at the Lewis Music School, in reality as favorable prices for the student can be secured there as at any place. Arrangements have been made by the Principal for giving instruction at popular charges, and his system for furnishing music to the pupils so evens up the prices that they are cheaper here than at any place where equally good instruction is vouchsafed.

— John McSweeney, son of Bryan McSweeney, was present at the Warden farm when Almy or Abbott was captured last week. He reached the farm from where he was stopping at Lebanon about 8 A. M. and remained until the murderer surrendered himself. No doubt exists but that Almy is the notorious Abbott who escaped from the Vermont penitentiary some 12 years ago and who has been hunted for high and low ever since.

— The vacation ramblers are slowly turning their faces and feet towards home and soon the summer outing season of 1891 will be over and gone forever. A few of our good people of Woburn still linger on the sands by the ocean; some are still in the mountains; a few are slowly but surely wasting away on country fodder at country boarding houses; but all will be back and hovered around the dear home ingleside by Christmas, if not before.

— The names of the young gentlemen and young ladies who attended by special invitation the birthday party which Mr. and Mrs. Taylor of No. 77 Pleasant street gave to their nice little daughter Ida M. Taylor on last Saturday evening, were Misses Dora Ronco, Abbie Soles, Carrie Taylor, Edna Ronco, Nellie Winn; Masters Leonard Fowle, Bertram Strout, Charlie Hill, Charlie Calif, Charlie Taylor, Fred Hill. The party was an exceedingly pleasant one.

— Some of the bosses of the leather factories have notified their employees that there will be a shut-down every other week for an indefinite period giving the men work only half of the time. Such a condition of labor matters is rough on poor men and their families. Mr. Cottle, one of our largest manufacturers, thinks the business of leather making is on the eve of an important revival, and that there will be a plenty of work for everybody this fall. We hope he is right in his prediction.

— Mr. Charles Cummings, the well-known Cambridge street farmer and stock dealer, has got back, with his daughter Sarah and sister Anna, from a fortnight's pleasant vacation outing in Canada, and his card in another column says that he has brought along with him a carload of the finest Canada horses that ever struck Woburn. He has some very extra drivers which he wants the public to examine, and as for the workers they can't be beat. The horses are kept at Mr. Cummings's stables on Cambridge street.

— T. & C. Assembly, K. of L., will hold a grand picnic at Hudson's Grove on Labor Day (Sept. 7). City Clerk D. F. Moreland will be floor director; Daniel Sullivan, assistant, and the following named will be aids: Charles Wallace, Dennis D. Begley, Owen F. Reddy, Patrick H. Mathews, Levi Armstrong, Patrick Beatty, Peter Kenney, Thomas Annis, Frank Kenney, Owen Doherty. Calnan's orchestra will be in attendance and an Irish piper. Fifty dollars is offered in prizes.

— Mr. W. B. Winn, son of Rev. D. D. Winn of this city, is a member of the Editorial Staff of the San Francisco Chronicle and a resident of that city. A note received from him on Wednesday last seemed to prove that at the time the same was indited he was in the land of the living (if it were strictly true to thus designate any part of California), and we should judge that he is fairly resigned to life as he finds it in that far-away land. They say "Will" is an Editorial hustler.

— The military Companies which took part in the competative rifle shoot at Brookside Rifle Range in this city last Saturday afternoon were Co. G, 5th Regt. M. V. M. (Woburn Mechanic Phalanx); and Co. A, 6 Regt. (Richardson Light Guard) of Wakefield. The score stood: Phalanx, 280; Light Guard, 289. The Woburn men who shot were John L. Fowle, George H. Perkins, Frank Fowle, Austin McCarty, George Durward, George F. Hanson, George H. Nason. The Woburn team will shoot at Wakefield to-morrow afternoon.

— Miss Alice Champney, daughter of Mr. Benjamin Champney, the artist, of Woburn, who is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Taylor, Jr., at Marblehead Neck, has been making a week's visit to Miss Annie H. Young of 109 Columbia street, Dorchester.—Boston Herald. After visiting the birthplace of her father in New Hampshire with her cousin, Mrs. Robert J. W. Phinney of this city, Miss Champney returned to the summer home of the family at North Conway last week to prepare for the great East Side coaching party which came off last Wednesday.

— Dr. Frank W. Graves of Pleasant street and his wife and Mrs. Walker of McHenry, Illinois, who is the Doctor's aunt, expect to sail at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon on the Pavonia from Boston for Europe. They anticipate being absent about two months, a large part of which period will be spent in traveling in Great Britain and on the continent. No thought of a visit abroad had entered the mind of any of the party until last Friday when, more particularly for the benefit of Mrs. Walker, an early European trip was decided on. So, the party will leave as above stated.

— Master Leon R. Vaughn, son of Mrs. Anna Vaughn, is passing a delightful vacation at Mr. Butters's, a cousin of Mrs. Vaughn, at Methuen. He has the range of Mr. Butters's big farm, the handling of horses and neat cattle, hunting hens' eggs, and is happy. Just before he left for Methuen Leon obtained 20 subscribers to the Youth's Companion for which he received as a premium a nice, handsome Lovell's Safety Bicycle, which was sent out to him per express on last Saturday evening and is carefully stored away awaiting his return from Methuen. It is a fine roadster, and when the lad sees it and learns to ride it he must needs be perfectly satisfied with the world and all that's in it.

— We were as much surprised as pleased by the receipt the other day of a copy of The Juniata (Neb.) Herald, and to discover by reference to the colors at its mast-head that its editor, publisher and proprietor is no other than I. H. Rickle—the identical "Ike" who away back in the earliest of the sixties was the "Devil" on a Western paper of which we were the Editor—and about the toughest nut of an imp of the kind that we, in the course of 35 years experience with them, have ever had any business dealings with. Nevertheless, "Ike" was a good newspaper man when he left us for broader fields in the farther and woolier West on which to exercise his journalistic faculties and improve the human race, and from the looks and perusal of his bright, lively and well edited weekly we have an idea his dreams have been fully realized. May "Ike's" shadow never grow less.

— Last Monday evening Leonard Thompson, Esq., and Mrs. Thompson returned from a delightful visit to Bennington, Vt., where they went to witness the dedication of the Battle of Bennington Monument and the centennial celebration of the admission of Vermont into the sisterhood of States. Mr. Thompson told a JOURNAL man that he and Mrs. Thompson enjoyed the entire trip very much indeed. Although there were over 40,000 visitors at Bennington the best of order was preserved all through the celebration and nothing could have passed off more to the satisfaction of everybody than did that grand military and civic affair. Mr. Thompson admired the addresses of Mr. Phelps and other distinguished gentlemen, and Mrs. Thompson was equally delighted with the music, the marching, the parades and fine military display. On their return they visited Western Massachusetts, particularly Old Deerfield, where they enjoyed the privilege of examining the largest and best collection extant representing American Colonial life. Both were well and happy while away.

— The John I. Munroe Real Estate Agency in this city and Boston has sold the Levi Teel farm on Cambridge street to a man from Maine who will convert it into a poultry plantation and the like. Mr. and Mrs. Teel (both excellent people) have lived on this farm nearly a quarter of a century and when they move away to Waltham to reside with their son who is an extensive farmer there they will be greatly missed by their neighbors and people at the Centre. They have many warm friends all about here and their going away will be generally regretted—by nobody more than the JOURNAL. Many years ago Mr. Teel was a large and successful farmer in Sangamon county, near Springfield (the State Capital) in Illinois, and more than once he and Mrs. Teel and the little ones have made the journey between there and Massachusetts in "prairie schooners"—canvass-covered horse-power farm wagons. The Cambridge street farm was sold at a price satisfactory to everybody concerned. After a little it will know Uncle Levi and his estimable better half no more. They have the JOURNAL'S best wishes for "long life and a merry one" in their new Waltham home.

— Mrs. Robert J. W. Phinney of this city went to North Conway early this week to be present, according to promise, at the grand East Side coaching parade which took place last Wednesday and was the most notable and successful society event that the White Mountains have been able to boast of for years. Mr. and Mrs. Phinney are regular summer guests at Wentworth Hall, Jackson, and on the coaching occasion last Wednesday the lady appeared in the colors of Wentworth Hall, namely, red and white, in token of her loyalty to that large and popular mountain caravansary. * * * The pleasant summer home of Benjamin Champney, the artist, at North Conway, was splendidly decorated for the festive occasion, in which piece of work it is suspected Mrs. Phinney had a controlling hand. Miss Alice Champney, daughter of the artist occupied with a gay party of young people one of the most beautifully decorated of the coaches, as she has done in former parades. She is one of the leading young ladies of the Mountains and has a front seat tendered her at all the fashionable doings and goings-on up there. * * * Mrs. Phinney enjoyed the parade highly, and reports to the JOURNAL that it was a perfect success in every particular—beauty, gaiety and weather not excepted.

— The difference between the amount of freight and passenger business done at the Woburn Centre railroad station today and 40 years ago is vastly more than most people dream of. In the matter of passenger traffic take Aug. 1851—just 40 years ago—when Mr. Aaron Thompson was Station Agent. The books in which he kept a full account of the railroad business—freight and passenger—are three small thin passbooks, and even these are not wholly filled with figures. * * * The number of tickets sold for Boston during the month of August, 1851, was 1453 or 47 a day. The number sold at the office for all points was 2574, or 83 daily. The fare then to Boston was 25 cents; to Winchester, 10 cents; to Medford, 12 1-2 cents; to Somerville 20 cents. * * * We have no account of the freight business for Aug. 1851, but have Mr. Thompson's carefully kept books containing the receipts for Aug. 1848, as well as for other months of the year. He charged himself with $146.70 as the amount of cash received for freight that month, which seems to have been an exceptionally brisk one, for during the previous March the freight receipts reached only $78.49. * * * These old account books filled up by Mr. Thompson are quite a curiosity and their examination affords food for thought. The records are found to have been neatly kept and a glance is sufficient to disclose the state of the railroad traffic on any day. * * * The above figures, which are given merely as a sample of the whole which the little books contain, look insignificant enough when compared with the daily passenger and freight transactions of the present year. A whole month's business in 1851 would not reach that of a single week now, and yet some people have said Woburn is not a growing community!

— Mr. L. Houghton Allen, who returned to this city last Saturday, gives a graphic and interesting description of those parts of California in which he has lived, and others visited by him, during last year. He landed at San Bernardino early in December last and from there visited several cities, towns and districts in pursuit of the best spot on which to pass the winter free from rheumatism. For some years he has been an occasional visitor of the Middle West and Pacific Slope and has become quite enamored of many sections of California as places of residence. Last winter Mr. Allen passed considerable time at Los Angeles, Pasadena, Riverside, San Diego, besides the chief of the fruit-growing localities, with many of which he was well pleased. He reports the boom-struck cities—Los Angeles and San Diego—as recovering with measurable rapidity from the collapse of the land speculation era of 7-4 years ago, and has no doubt but that in good time they will regain their former population, business and wealth and advance far beyond what they were in the palmy days of the boom. Mr. Allen is a firm believer in the future of California as the chief fruit producing section of the Union and also of the vast wealth which is destined to flow into the pockets of the people there from this source. He had been told that as good oranges, lemons, figs, etc., could be raised in as great abundance in the Sacramento Valley between 600 and 700 miles due north from San Bernardino as at that place, Riverside, Pomona and other notable fruit growing localities, but the statement being generally denied in the latter country he visited the Sacramento Valley and found extensive groves of the fruit named in a thrifty state, yielding large crops, and of a quality equal to the best raised in Lower California. And not only so, but the proprietors of Sacramento orange groves marketed their fruits last year two weeks earlier than the proprietors 600 or 700 miles below. * * * It is probable that Mr. Allen will spend the coming winter in Southern California. He will remain with his son, Dr. Allen, at Southbridge, this State, the balance of the summer, and begin to creep Pacific Ocean-ward later in the fall,

About County Treasurer.

We judge from marked papers received containing favorable mention of the services rendered the County of Middlesex by Editor Hayden of the Somerville Journal in his capacity of County Treasurer, that he will make strenuous efforts to secure a renomination. There are rivals in the field who are making what capital they can of the energy displayed in changing the old regime and introducing more nearly a rotation in office in county affairs by the Somerville Journal and its friends; men who think the arguments used to oust the then incumbents apply with equal force as the six years of Mr. Hayden's official life draw to a close. —Arlington Advocate.

The Somerville Citizen emulates the WOBURN JOURNAL in a studied attempt to bring about a change in the incumbent of the office of County Treasurer this fall.—Malden City Press.

That one who ought to know reports that the Deputy Sheriffs of the county are all working for the re-election of Mr. Hayden as County Treasurer.—"They say" in Somerville Citizen.

Friends of Treasurer Hayden urge his re-election on the ground that he is "efficient," and also because he is a "good fellow." There are hundreds of Republicans in Middlesex County who would make a Treasurer every whit as efficient as the present incumbent; and as for "good fellows," why, the woods are full of them this season.

Besides all this, some think it is not sound business policy to keep treasurers in office for long periods of time on a stretch. Every voter in the county believes Mr. Hayden an upright man and honest public officer. Nobody ever heard this statement questioned. And yet the fact remains that many think a change derirable.

Again, Mr. Hayden has held the position of County Treasurer six years and no one can show with any degree of reason or fairness but what six years is as long as he is entitled to the office.

Proposed License Law.

Rev. Hugh Montgomery of Woburn proposes this unique license law:

Nine hundred and ninety-nine persons in every thousand are hereby absolutely prohibited from stealing; but if the town or city shall vote to license stealing, then the thousandth person shall be licensed to steal for one year from the first day of the following May.

Every person licensed to steal shall be of strict integrity and unquestioned honesty.

He shall not steal after eleven o'clock at night nor before six o'clock in the morning, nor on Sunday.

He shall not steal from minors or from persons from whom his associates in crime have already stolen during the day.

He shall not steal on legal holidays, except on Washington's birthday and Fourth of July.

As a part compensation for the poverty, wretchedness and misery he causes by his stealing, he shall pay one thousand dollars annually to the municipal treasury.—Milford Journal.

Republican Caucuses Wednesday, Sept. 9th.

Political activity at primaries and caucuses should be encouraged by all good citizens. Since the adoption of the Australian Ballot it has become more than ever important that only the names of such candidates as can command the respect and secure the support of the party should be placed on the ballot.

If the Republican party desires to succeed this autumn it must deserve success.

If the Republicans expect the conventions to make wise selections of candidates they must look sharply after the make-up of the conventions.

The time and place to do that is at the caucuses.

Too many in the past have been wont to say: "Oh, it will be all cut and dried by a coterie of wire-pullers: what is the use of my going?"

The absence from the caucuses of unselfish honest voters is just what has made it possible for a few to "cut and dry it."

If the good men and true, reliable representatives of the party are not chosen to the conventions it will be the fault of the Republican voters who stay away.

This is not the year for any Republican to shirk his political duty.

Let there be no stay at homes Wednesday evening, Sept. 9.

We entertained quality last Tuesday afternoon, as hot as it was, and in tolerable good shape too. They were editorial visits that we were favored with. First came Mr. W. A. Woodward, Editor of the Milton Journal, one of the livest and best of the suburban newspapers; and in a little while he was followed by Editor Wilson of the Winchester Star, a neat, nice, newsy and well patronized journal in Woburn's prettiest suburb—Winchester.—We enjoyed the calls of these worthy members of the craft very much, and hope they will come again some day.—[WOBURN JOURNAL.]

The enjoyment was mutual, Brother Hobbs. At our departure we were convinced that if there were more Hobbses at the helms of the papers of this State journalism would take a mighty stride forward, for a more conscientious editor never lived, and his paper shows this, too.—Winchester Star.

Coming from such an excellent judge of journalistic merit the above words of praise from the Star are highly flattering to our pride.

THE ARENA for September is as usual fully abreast with the advanced thought of the times. The paper which will probably attract most attention, owing to its timely appearance, is Fashion's Slaves, a profusely illustrated contribution on woman's dress reform, by the Editor. We do not know whether or not Mr. Flower had been informed of the proposed inauguration of the dress reform movement at Chautauqua, which has attracted such general notice by virtue of the radical position taken by its leaders and the encouragement given the move by such leading women as Miss Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Frances E. Russell, but he certainly scores another palpable hit in the timely appearance of this paper. Among the many other noteworthy contributions are the Rev. Dr. Geo. C. Lorimer's defence of Dr. Briggs and his associates; Frederic W. H. Meyer, of Cambridge, England, on the work accomplished by the English Psychical Society; Kuma Gishi, M. A., of Tokio, Japan, on Constitutional Government in Japan; Rabbi Solomon Schindler on Intermigration, and Sylvester Baxter on the Austrian Postal Banking System. THE ARENA has made for itself the foremost place as the review of advanced and progressive thought.

A Few Points on Church Etiquette.

Much has been written upon etiquette. We are told how to conduct ourselves gracefully and properly upon almost every occasion, but very little is said, comparatively speaking, upon our behavior at church, and that little has usually a purely religious bearing. Let us pass by, for this time, the religious aspect of the case and discuss a few questions relating to our "Church Manners" upon the basis of courteous behavior only. We will take it for granted that we are all too well-bred to whisper or twist about to observe the congregation and will pass on to other points:

Is it too much to ask simply as a matter of courtesy that we take the attitude of prayer in common with the rest of the congregation and in the manner customary in the church which we are frequenting? Can not you, my Orthodox or Baptist sister or brother, when attending an Episcopal service waive any little prejudice you may have and kneel with the rest of the congregation instead of sitting bolt upright and uncomfortably conspicuous? On the other hand, dear Church of England friend, why should you try to kneel where no cushion is provided making your friends feel in a vague way responsible for the discomfort they know you must suffer? Can you not pray as devoutly and sincerely with your head bent and your eyes covered? As a guest in your friend's house you conform to the usages of the establishment as far as you know them; does not courtesy demand the same concession on your part when you are a guest in your friend's church?

The choir favor us with a selection contained in the hymn book: Can you not hold the book in your hand until the hymn is finished, then close it gently, very gently, and place it quietly in the rack? Did it ever occur to you how annoying to the choir may be the rattling of books in the rack (in which the last line of the hymn is practically lost) and how discourteously suggestive the movement may seem of relief that the performance is over?

In most churches a collection is usually taken sometime during the service. Be prepared for it. Do not hesitate because the amount must perhaps be small. You are supposed to have received some benefit or pleasure from the service. Courtesy demands that you show your appreciation of the fact by dropping something in the box instead of looking the other way as if you resented the fact of its being presented to you.

Give the speaker the careful and polite attention he would receive from you if you met him in society. Possibly he seems to you a trifle prosy—so is old Gen. W— "who fights his battle o'er again" when he corners you at a reception. Why withhold from one the indulgence you vouchsafe to the other? He may hold a belief vitally different from your own. Can you not listen patiently to the other side? and can you not thus gather some pearls of thought on subjects of general religious interests wider than all creeds and including them all? Like the dear old lady of strong Calvinistic prejudices who was reproved by one of the deacons of her church for going to hear a Unitarian minister: "Well, brother Smith, he sartainly did say a good many good things."

There seems to be a widespread conviction that the special design of the reading of the last hymn is to give people an opportunity to put on rubbers, hunt up wraps, &c., &c., and alas! during the pronouncing of the benediction how many a hand reaches furtively for cane, or umbrella, or buttons a jacket, or settles a shoulder cape in position. Making no account of the irreverence evinced by all this—is it well-bred?

The service is over. The choir has chanted "Amen" and we turn to leave the church. Can it be very encouraging to the tired pastor who has been giving us the best fruits of his mind and heart to see with what eagerness his people turn to the discussion of business or other worldly topics? If any portion of your conversation, dear friend, should drift back to him will you not see to it that it may be some kindly appreciative remark about some part of the service which you can consistently praise and not the latest scandal, the price of a certain kind of stock, or a business appointment which you are making with your dressmaker?

I hope no one will think that I make no account of the religious bearing of these questions because I have not referred to it in this article. I simply leave that for wiser, more spiritually minded people than myself and bring before you a matter of good breeding which, after all, has a purely religious basis in the "Golden Rule," the tacitly acknowledged foundation throughout the civilized world of all true courtesy.—X.

For Governor.

EDITOR WOBURN JOURNAL: The most important question presenting itself at this time for the consideration of the Republican party in Massachusetts is the choice of the right man to lead in the coming contest for political supremacy. Such a man to be acceptable to the average level headed voter, must combine in himself the qualities of sound, political judgment, keen business discernment, an unswerving loyalty to American institutions, unimpeachable integrity, and added to all these a good record in his party. "Where shall such a man be found?" I think, sir, and but echo the sentiments of many others, that such a leader can be found in the person of the Hon. James F. Almy, of Salem and it is my firm conviction that if the Republicans of this State insisted in selecting him as their standard-bearer the result at the polls would justify the wisdom of such a selection. Keen, business-like, clean, honest and with the requisite amount of "back bone," he is an ideal candidate.

Respectfully Yours,

"Cap."

CHRIST AT THE FEAST.

LESSON IX, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 30.

Text of the Lesson, John vii, 31-44. Commit Verses, 31-33—Golden Text, John vii, 37—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

31. "And many of the people believed on Him, and said, When Christ cometh, will He do more miracles than these which this man hath done?"

The lessons of the fifth chapter were based upon the incidents connected with one of the feasts of the Jews; those in the sixth chapter were associated with the manna and the passover feast; these are in connection with the feast of tabernacles (verse 2), which points us forward to the coming kingdom of Israel and the time of blessing upon all nations (Zech. xiv, 16, 17).

32. "The Pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning Him; and the Pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take Him."

Always hating Him, and always seeking to kill Him, but unable to touch Him till His work was done (chapter viii, 20; xiii, 1). Professing to be children of God and the true seed of Abraham, they made it manifest by their conduct that they were not truly of God nor of Abraham, but rather of their father, the devil (chapter viii, 42-44).

33. "Then said Jesus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto Him that sent me."

Over thirty times in this gospel He speaks of the Father sending Him.

34. "Ye shall seek me and shall not find me. And where I am, thither ye cannot come."

Now, He had before said that "He that seeketh findeth" (Math. vi, 8), but there is no contradiction. We must only take His sayings in the light of all his other sayings, "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart" (Jer. xxix, 13). This kind of seeking never fails.

35. "Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will He go that we shall not find Him? Will He go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?"

Of the earth earthy, they understood not heavenly things. That He came down from heaven they did not believe, and therefore His going to Him that sent Him they could not understand. That many Jews were scattered abroad among the nations is evident from the Acts of the Apostles.

36. "What manner of saying is this that He said, Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me. And where I am, thither ye cannot come?"

If He could find His way to any part of the earth, why could not they follow Him if they saw fit? Such seems to have been their thoughts. Anything beyond the earth they neither knew nor thought much about. Talk of heavenly things, even now, to many church members and they have nothing to say, they know not the language; but let business, politics, pleasure or fashion be the theme, and they have no lack of words nor of interest.

37. "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink."

For seven days was the feast continued, and many sacrifices were offered every day, but the eighth day, the last day of the feast, was a special day (Lev. xxviii, 36; Num. xxix, 35-38). Although the special sacrifices offered on this day were less than on any other day of the feast, being only ten as compared with thirty on the first day (Num. xxix, 12-16, 35-38), yet it was in importance the great day, the most solemn and holy of all the days (Neh. viii, 18).

38. "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."

To the woman at the well He said, "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life" (iv, 14); but this is even in advance of that, for here He speaks of rivers of living water going forth from the inmost being of the believer.

39. "But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believeth on Him should receive."

From beginning to end of Scripture, and from the Garden of Eden to the new heavens and earth, the spirit is the mighty worker, or, as some one has said, "the Executive of the Godhead." To see the difference between an ordinary believer and one filled with the spirit we have only to consider Peter before and after Pentecost.

"For the Holy Ghost was not yet, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

The Holy Spirit, while in all ages the great worker, had up to this time not been given as He was at Pentecost, and the reason is mentioned in this verse. He had testified through the prophets of a coming Messiah and kingdom. He now testifies to a Messiah who came, was rejected and crucified, rose from the dead and is now glorified at the right hand of God. As Peter by the Spirit testified, "God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts ii, 36).

40. "Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the prophet."

Just as after the feeding of the five thousand the people said, "This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world" (John vi, 14). When John the Baptist said that he was not the Christ nor Elijah, they then asked if he was "that prophet" (chap. i, 20, 21). The passage which they had in mind was probably Deut. xviii, 18, "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put my words in His mouth, and He shall speak unto them all that I shall command Him."

41. "Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?"

They now think it possible that He may be the King of Israel, the Son of David, as foretold in II Sam. vii, 12, 13; Isa. ix, 6, 7. That the Christ or Messiah was understood to be the King of the Jews, and so looked for, is evident from Math. ii, 2, 4; Mark xv, 32, etc. But they could not think that He should come from Galilee, or, as Nathanael put it, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth" (chapter i, 46)? They evidently did not think of Isa. ix, 1, 2, and of the light that was to shine in Galilee.

42. "Hath not the Scripture said that Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem where David was."

Yes, truly, this was all plainly written in Ps. cxxxii, 11; Mic. v, 2, and other passages, but not any more plainly than the statements concerning Galilee and Egypt in the passages referred to in the previous verse. Their difficulty was just the difficulty of as many today: they take such Scriptures as seem to suit that which they wish to believe, but they will not take any interest in that which seems to conflict with their ideas.

THE TOUCH OF A VANISHED HAND

Oh, why should the world seem strange,
With its beauty around me still?
And why should the slope of my swarded path
Seem suddenly all uphill?

I had gone, with a buoyant step,
So cheerily on my way;
How could I believe so calm a light
Could turn to so chill a gray?

And wherefore? Because the hand
That held in its clasp my own—
Whose touch was a benediction such
As only the blest have known—

Was caught by the viewless hand
Of an angel, and upward drawn.
What hope, what comfort, what guidance now,
Since the stay of my life is gone?

"But a stronger is left to thee,"
Some comforting whisper saith—
"The arm that shall carry thee safe to him
When thou crossest the tides of death."

If Christ in His mortal hour
Had need of the chosen three,
To watch with Him through the awful throes
Of His dread Gethsemane,

Oh, surely His human heart
Will pity and understand
That speechless yearning, too deep for words,
For the "touch of the vanished hand!"
—Margaret J. Preston in Harper's Bazar.

The Invention and Manufacture of Pins.

It is flattering to our patriotism to learn that the first solid head pin, although made in England and its manufacture delayed until 1824, was the invention of an American, Lemuel W. Wright by name; and it was another ingenious American, Dr. John T. Howe, of Connecticut, who, some eight years later, invented the first successful machine for completing solid headed pins by a single process.

Marvelous, indeed, does this seem when we pause to consider that prior to the invention of this machine it required from twelve to fourteen men to complete a pin; there were as many different processes in its manufacture, each requiring to be performed separately and by a different hand. A single machine now turns out a constant stream of pins, averaging 200 a minute, all ready to be transferred into revolving barrels, where they are turned until scoured sufficiently to be plunged into an acid bath from which they emerge, bearing out the old saying, clean as a new pin.

One machine performs the several duties of holding and crimping the paper sheets and sticking the pins into them, in even rows, with remarkable dexterity.—Table Talk.

Trains Stopped by Grasshoppers.

I saw two freight trains at Springer stopped by grasshoppers. The idea that the trains are stopped by running into piles of the grasshoppers is wrong. They just cover the tracks, and the passing trains kill them. The oil from them greases the rails and wheels so that the latter slip instead of revolving, therefore the stoppage of trains.

The hoppers get so thick sometimes that they have to be brushed off the tracks. Sand is also spread along the tracks to keep them rough and prevent the trains from slipping from grasshopper oil. It is nothing remarkable that the oil from them should stop trains. A little grease rubbed on the tracks or wheels of a locomotive will have the same effect.—Kansas City Times.

Wrestling with the Muse.

There is a fruit vender of the basket persuasion in the city who is evidently in love, and, judging from his efforts at poetic recitation, his fair inamorata is not of his own race. He kills the weary hours that intervene between customers in committing to memory bits of love stuff with which, perhaps, to fan the flame in the bosom of his adored. He was heard Sunday wrestling with an old familiar rhyme, as follows: "Da rosa maka da red, da vila maka da blue; da shug maka da sweeta da cand; ma Carissima, sama da you!"—Birmingham (Ala.) News.

Vanity in Criminals.

A famous Russian writer, who passed many years among convicts, says of them: "This strange family had an air of strong resemblance. All of them were morose, curious, presumptuous and insufferably vain. Vanity was at the bottom of all their sentiments. During all the period of my observation I never saw the slightest sign of repentance or even of disquiet on account of their crimes."

Feats of a Blind Man.

Some little time ago Farmer Barbour, of Sterling, Conn., sued that town for exemption from taxation on the ground that he was blind. The town placed witnesses on the stand to prove that he could mow, hoe and load hay. Mr. Barbour explained how he could do these things, though totally devoid of sight, and gained his case.—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

A Convict Who Loves to Steal.

"Lord, how I do love to steal! If I had thousands I would still be a thief."

The exclamation was made by a young jailbird in the hearing of Dr. Robert Fletcher, who quoted it by way of illustration in the course of a lecture on the relation of the criminal to society.—Washington Star.

A Close Call.

"Oh, ma, I nearly had a horse!"

"Why, what do you mean?"

"There was a man out here with a horse, and I asked him if I could have it and he said no. If he'd said yes I'd a had it!"—Life.

GRIDER'S RIDE FOR LIFE.

Pursued by a Pack of Wolves, the Wisconsin Man Makes a Desperate Leap.

In one of the wildest portions of Wisconsin when it was a wild frontier state had settled the noted pioneer Hank Grider, a man whose wonderful endurance of limb is in a measure illustrated by this sketch.

One dark and rainy night of the year 1856 the brave pioneer, whose reckless nature had won for him the title of Wild Grider, and by which he was known far and wide, found himself some fifteen miles from home and with the Kakanook river, swollen and turbulent from the recent rain, between himself and his destination.

Wolves howled upon every hand, but he paid no particular attention to them, pressing steadily on in the drenching rain.

At length, however, he noticed that the grim scavengers of the forest were beginning to congregate in large numbers into the trail behind him, and drawing uncomfortably near, howling and snarling at one another as they came.

This served to give him a slight uneasiness of mind as he urged his horse forward.

Steadily the horde of wet, shaggy forms increased in number until it seemed that a thousand of them were crowding along upon the pioneer's track, making the night hideous with their babel of snarling voices.

How swiftly in pursuit came that writhing mass of now thoroughly enraged brutes, and though the pioneer was remarkably swift of foot he had to put forth every effort to keep out of their way, and there in the darkness of the Wisconsin wilderness ensued a desperate race for life and death.

The ground was fairly smooth, and this aided the desperate man somewhat, but he was compelled to use the spurs mercilessly to escape those clashing jaws.

Like the very wind he sped along, his only hope lying in reaching the river in advance of his fierce pursuers, for once across the turbulent current he would be safe.

But fully five miles lay between him and the river, and it would indeed be a miracle to reach it; but wholly undaunted the reckless fellow sped on, his teeth closed firmly and his eyes gleaming with all the fire of his wild, excitable nature.

Mile after mile was cast behind, and daylight was beginning to steal over the land when the swift and swollen Kakanook hove in sight.

The ground sloped toward it, and down this descent flew pursued and pursuers, with scarce six feet separating them.

For over five miles had that desperate race continued, and now, exhausted as he was by his superhuman speed, Grider performed a feat that was simply marvelous and almost unparalleled.

The banks of the stream were high and projecting, and scarcely eighty rods below the river fell over a mass of jagged rocks that no one could hope to pass over alive, while it would be impossible to effect a landing when once in the turbulent current.

With that horde of raging beasts close behind him, and the dangerous river below, and fully twenty-five feet between its banks, the brave pioneer was truly in a most desperate situation. But, scarcely realizing his danger, in his desperation and frenzy, he galloped down the slope, and, putting every effort of his horse's fast failing strength in one mighty leap, landed squarely upon the other bank of the river.

The wolves were unable to check their headlong speed, and many of their number went over the bank and were swept away, while the exhausted steed sank trembling upon the ground.

Three hours later, however, he reached his cabin in safety, and in a few days had fully recovered from the effects of that terrible ride for life—about the most extraordinary one in the entire record of the west.

Grider's life was one of remarkable adventures, and now, a man of superior endurance, although nearly sixty years of age, he resides at Moose lake, Minn., where his life is still a stirring and eventful one.—Yankee Blade.

Not a Musician.

One of Chicago's young men had been calling on one of Chicago's young ladies for a time. The young lady has a little brother, and a few Sundays ago the little brother and the admirer of the sister were left in each other's society. "Why don't you bring your violin with you some time?" asked the brother. "I have no violin, my little man," said the admirer of the sister. "Pa thinks you have," added the boy. "What did he say?" asked the lover, "that shows he thinks I have a violin?" "Why," said the ever innocent youth, "I heard him tell ma that he guessed you were fiddling around after some money." The foregoing is a true story, the sequel to which is the lover has ceased to fiddle.—Chicago Herald.

Cape Cod Is Disappearing.

There isn't the least doubt but that Cape Cod is gradually being eaten up by the greedy ocean. Less than 100 years ago a lighthouse was placed on the headland by the government. The original deed calls for a plat of ten acres in extent. At the present time the inclosure embraces hardly six acres. On a point just north of the marine stations at Highland light the face of the bluff has moved in nearly 250 feet in the last seven years. At this rate it is only a question of time when Cape Cod will be a thing of the past.—St. Louis Republic.

Blood Poison

Is very liable to follow contact of the hands or face with what is known as poison ivy, especially in hot weather or if the body is perspiring freely. The trouble may subside for a time, only to appear in aggravated form when opportunity offers. The great purifying powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla thoroughly eradicate every trace of poison from the blood as the cures it has accomplished conclusively show. It also cures scrofula, salt rheum and all other affections arising from impure or poisoned blood.

THE SINGER'S THREE SHAWLS.

How Henriette Sontag Became Connected with the Berlin Theater.

When the theater was founded in Berlin in 1824 the directors sought to gain special talent for the young stage in order to secure rich dividends.

Henriette Sontag, who was then eighteen, was the rising meteor on the artistic horizon. Two of the directors journeyed to Leipsic in order to induce the artiste to sign a contract for several years.

In Leipsic they met messengers from other theatres, who surrounded the lovely singer with the same appeal. After days of negotiation they made no headway. A rich financier from Berlin, tired of the delay, adopted measures which could not fail to have the desired effect upon the young and pretty but poor artiste.

He bought a beautiful shawl, and presenting it to the singer he pointed to the pen to sign the contract.

Never had Henriette Sontag possessed so pretty an article of apparel. Completely overcome by the splendor of so rich a gift, she turned to her sister Nina and said, "Nina, I am faint; please sign."

So she was bound by a contract, and formed the chief attraction for three years not only of the theater but of the city of Berlin.

The receipts of the theater were enormous, yet several shareholders reproached the managers of the treasury for making unnecessary expenditures, and demanded, therefore, strict account for the use of the money.

These expenditures were soon made public, and it soon came out in the newspapers that the shawl which the singer received in Leipsic was presented without the consent of the shareholders.

The morning this fact was published in the papers Fraulein Sontag sealed up the valuable present, and, with true womanly tact, sent it to the directors of the theater.

Her messenger had scarcely entered the assembly room when the news of the occurrence spread all over the city, and in the evening of the same day a Turkish shawl lay on the singer's toilet table. It had been sent by the king and was more valuable than the first one.

Early the following day the financier and director of the theater, who had given her the shawl in Leipsic, was announced, and as he presented her with a far costlier shawl he jokingly reproached the lovely Henriette for giving away his present and begged her not to let this one share the same fate. This present was from himself independent of the shareholders.

Finally, by a unanimous decree, the directors appeared in a body before the public's favorite to restore the shawl in question to its rightful owner.—Philadelphia Times.

The Only One of a Large Company Left.

A little story was related at the navy yard the other day which concerns Rear Admiral Thomas O. Selfridge, retired, who is visiting his son, Captain Thomas O. Selfridge, the commandant of the navy yard. Some years ago the admiral, who is the oldest living United States naval officer, being over ninety years of age, was dining at Delmonico's, in New York, with a distinguished company, among whom were Generals Grant, Garfield, Arthur, Sherman and Sheridan. At 10 o'clock, when the festivities were at their height, the old admiral arose from the table and called for his hat and coat. All were surprised at his action and asked for an explanation. He replied that he never permitted enjoyment to interfere with his health, and that 10 o'clock was a good hour for him to retire.

All present laughed heartily, chaffed him a little and begged him to remain.

He could not, however, be coaxed to remain. After bidding them good night he added, "Early to bed and sound sleep tend to longevity and I'm going to prove it to you all." All except the admiral who were present at the banquet that evening have passed away. The admiral has kept his word.—Boston Globe.

Giving Away Brides.

A novel gift enterprise has been introduced in the clothing business by a Washington firm, which actually give away a blushing bride to any of their customers who apply. All that the applicant has to do is to purchase a wedding suit. The firm do the rest—furnish the bride, the best man and the officiating clergyman. Six of their customers have already taken advantage of this offer, and it is claimed that the supply of brides, as well as wedding suits, is practically unlimited.

On the last occasion the bride, a tall and willowy brunette, was tastefully attired in a traveling costume of tan colored Henrietta cloth, with hat to match. The groom wore a black diagnal coat and vest, with dark gray striped trousers. Immediately after the ceremony the newly married pair drove to the station for an extended bridal trip.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Never Parted His Name.

Speaking of Judge Calhoun suggests a good story about his middle name, which is Ezekiel.

"I asked my father once," said the judge, "why he ever put such a thing as Ezekiel in my name, as, to the best of my recollection, no family precedent or close friendship with anybody of that name warranted it.

"'My son,' said he, 'I did it to keep you from ever parting your name in the middle,' and the judge has never parted it."—Atlanta Constitution.

Newspaper Callers.

The average citizen has very little idea of the number of calls which are daily inflicted upon the editor of a big newspaper. I was not with the colonel over five minutes, and during that time at least ten men called to see him on various matters. Men wanting positions, men with schemes and men with advice, men with favors to ask, men to borrow money and men with manuscripts to sell. They all insist upon seeing the editor, and each regards his business as the most important of the day.

It is a never ending stream, and each man is mortally offended if he is kept waiting or refused an audience, and yet newspaper men who are familiar with the manifold claims upon an editor's time are the loudest in their complaints about the "red tape" which compels them to send in their cards and state their business before they are admitted. They want to march right in to the editor's desk, roost on the edge of his table and compose themselves for a comfortable chat.

If a paper could be run without outside interruptions the editor would have an enjoyable time, but being the target for an assorted gang of cranks, bores and nuisances, he is obliged, in justice to himself and his readers, to hedge himself about with some protection. If men had more sense this would not be necessary.—Allen Forman in New York Journalist.

Witty and Pathetic Eugene Field.

Eugene Field, of Chicago, whose delicate humor and verses of pathos have given him a reputation not bounded by the confines of this country, is about forty-five years old. In personal appearance he is long and lank, and the hair on his head and face is not abundant. Few men probably possess wider extremes of character, and in nothing is this shown more plainly than in his writing and in his treatment of persons. He has made many enemies, his temptation to satirize friends as well as foes being under little restraint, while the propensity to play pranks which marked him while a schoolboy at Monson, Mass., is still strong in his nature.

The bump of veneration was evidently left out when he was made, and the higher the respectability of the victims of his jokes and jibes the keener seems to be the enjoyment of the perpetrator. But underlying this exterior is a tenderness for children which is touching. Mr. Field lives quietly with his family, and his home is filled with books, many of them strange old tomes, which none but a real book lover could crave.—Harper's Weekly.

Nature's Razor Strop.

There are now blooming in St. Augustine sixteen plants of the agave Victoria regina species, or what is commonly called the century plant. A towering column rises out of the center plant to the height of sixty feet, but it is often relegated to the rubbish heap as worthless, for the reason that as a thing of beauty it has no further charms for the eye. Yet many thousands of the shaving people of the Old World utilize this shaft of the plant. They make use of it as a razor strop.

Mr. W. Chambers, auditor of the East Coast railway line, has had one in use for many years, and it shows not the slightest defect from wear and tear. The strop is made by taking the shaft of the agave and cutting it into lengths of twelve inches; these are split into four, or as many "quarters" as posssble, allowing to each piece a sufficiency of the pulp or heart of the stalk to present a surface of not less than one inch, on which to strop a razor. The heart hardens in time and presents a fine, soft and naturally lubricated surface for stropping a razor.—Florida Times-Union.

Tar and Feathers in 1189.

In England the penalty of tar and feathers was introduced in 1189, when Richard I, before setting out for the Holy Land, ordained, in order to preserve the discipline of his fleet, that whosoever should be convicted of theft should first have his head shaved; that boiling pitch should then be poured upon it, and a cushion of feathers (de la plume d'oreiller) shaken over it. He was afterward to be put on shore at the first place the ship touched at; though, after a baptism of boiling pitch, the poor wretch, I fancy, would have little life left in him. In modern times the practice has found favor with the populace as a means of readily executing justice on an offender whom the law, perhaps, shows no anxiety to reach.—Gentleman's Magazine.

A Famous Clown.

"I have known in my life but one clown who was so naturally gifted as to justify the reputation that he gained both in this country and in Europe. That was Joe Blackburn, an uncle of the present member of congress from Kentucky. He was an educated, cultivated man, possessing rare mother wit, a fine singer and a natural orator. He came from a good Kentucky family, went to Europe in 1842 and played in London, where he became a conspicuous figure in the clubrooms, and, although a circus clown, was recognized by the aristocratic men of the day, who were glad to enjoy his society."—Dan Rice in New York Epoch.

Old Friend—Why didn't you marry Mr. Nicefello?

Sweet Girl—His father objected.

Old Friend—I shouldn't have cared for that.

The Standard of Pure English.

When the London apprentice laughs at the Scotticisms of the North Briton, and when the London Athenæum is depressed by the language of cultured Americans, there is to be discovered behind the laugh and the scoff an assumption that any departure from the usage which obtains in London is most deplorable. The laugh and the scoff are the outward and visible signs of an inward and spiritual belief that the Londoner is the sole guardian and trustee of the English language. But this is a belief for which there is no foundation whatever.

The English language is not bankrupt that it needs to have a receiver appointed; it is quite capable of minding its own business without the care of a committee of Englishmen. If indeed a guardian were necessary, what Englishman would it be who would best preserve our pure English—the shepherd of Dorset or the miner of Northumberland, the Yorkshire man or the cockney? If it is not the London apprentice who is to set the standard, but the Englishman of breeding, it is hard to discover the ground whereon this Englishman can claim superiority of taste or knowledge over the other educated men to whom English is the mother tongue, whether they were born in Scotland, Ireland or America, in Australia, India or Canada.—Brander Matthews in Harper's.

Books for Boys Who Lived Years Ago.

A lesson book for children is attributed to Alcuin, and it contains questions on arithmetic which are said to be found even in some current school books. Here is a specimen of them "An old man met a child. 'Good day, my son,' says he; 'may you live as long as you have lived, and as much more, and thrice as much as all this; and if God give you one year in addition to the others you will be just a century old.' What was the lad's age?" The first book given to his people in English by Alfred the Great was "Consolations of Philosophy," to which he added "The Universal History of Orosius," a very favorite book in monastery schools.

In the Tenth century Aelfric, "the grammarian," wrote a "Colloquy," intended as a reading book to help boys to speak Latin. It consists of conversation about everyday life. In one place a boy is made to say that he is too young to eat meat, but he was not too young to drink beer, as he says that he drinks ale, "if he can get it." In the same century appeared a book on astronomy for children, as well as a map, now preserved in the British museum, "less incorrect and having fewer fabulous countries than some made later."—London Saturday Review.

Full Jeweled Watches.

In timekeeping qualities and in finish there is no difference between a seven jeweled watch, a full jeweled watch and an adjusted watch. The advantage of a full jeweled watch is only in the patent regulator, by which the error can be reduced to a few seconds per month. The patent regulator moves the lever the ten-thousandth part of an inch at a time, while the least movement by the hand of the lever in cheaper watches must be one hundred times greater. All watches not adjusted to temperature will run fast or slow when subjected to changes. If one can spare time to regulate the watch to the new condition there is little advantage in an adjusted watch. The extra cost over a seven jeweled watch is not in the jewels, which are worth one cent each, nor in any finer work on the movement, but solely in the labor of adjusting the balance so that it will run the same in an oven as in a cake of ice, and in the profits to the factory. This factory profit comes in higher grade movements, the seven jeweled being sold at about cost.—New York Truth.

Briticisms and Americanisms.

Brander Matthews in Harper's shows that the "well of English undefiled" is no more the exclusive possession of Englishmen than of Americans. He asserts that "of Briticisms there are as many and as worthy of collection and collocation as were the most of the Americanisms the all embracing Bartlett gathered into his dictionary. In deed, if a Scot or a Yankee were to prepare a glossary of Briticisms on the ample scale adopted by Mr. Bartlett, and with the same generous hospitality, the result would surprise no one more than the Englishman. We should find in its pages many a word and phrase and turn of speech common enough in England and quite foreign to the best usage of those who speak English—Briticisms as worthy of reproof as the worst specimen of the mongrel speech adopted by some humorists in America."

A Gentleman.

What is a gentleman? It is a grand old name, but what does it mean?

At one time, to say of a man that he is a gentleman, is to confer on him the highest title of distinction that we can think of; even if we are speaking of a prince.

At another, to say of a man that he is not a gentleman is almost to stigmatize him as a social outcast, unfit for the company of his kind—even if it is only one haberdasher speaking of an other.

Who is a gentleman, and yet who isn't?

The Prince of Darkness was one, and so was Mr. John Halifax, if we are to believe those who knew them best, and so was one "Pelham," according to the late Sir Edward Bulwer, earl of Lytton, etc., and it certainly seemed as if he ought to know.—Harper's.

[From the Shoe and Leather Review.]

THE SAUCY SUNFLOWER.

The Review having had an interview with the Sun Flower, received the following practical hints regarding its claims for being selected as the National Flower.

"Look here young fellow," said this lordly star of earth, as he turned his open, frank face full front, "You and those shoemen would like to have the ladies' slipper as an emblem. It would be a compliment to the trade and be a big advertisement, but she's too modest to be a representative of the get-up-and-get spirit of the age. She's to conservative and has never changed her style since creation's dawn, and that won't do in this age of invention, this era of French tanicealities and the big soled shoes of the brutal Saxon. She's not aggressive enough to represent the American people. Now, when that bald-headed, howling swell, Old Sol, comes along, she and the voilet droop modestly among the clover and act like shy, bread and butter school girls behind the window blinds. That's not the way I do. I look the old masher square in the eye, like a seasoned ballet girl and give him to understand I'm up to his little game. The words of the poet,

Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air,

don't apply to me. I take the stump every time. I was born to be seen and by jingo, I'm not agoing to be set aside by no dude flowers that scent the perfumed air, and then scatter their leaves over their own tombs, and die to the slobbering of sentimental cry-babies. If it don't make me sick, then I'm a Jim Dandy! Bah! I'd rather be a thistle, and lend strength to the bawl of the Scotch ass, than live in that meek and lowly way. Then there's that Frenchified lily that coquettes with Old Sol, and hides behind her fan but forgets to cover up her arms and shoulders. She ain't no steady company. Droops and fades before half the season is over and the odor from a dying lily ain't romantic. But look at me! I commence the season early and stick it our till the snow flies. I'm not cut down in the bloom of my youth to bedeck the bosom of beauty at a ball. I'm too big and manly for such effeminate purposes. I just stay where I am and get high enough to see what is going on in the world. I'm no daisy to be eaten by every cow that comes along nor a violet to be sat on by two people who have got into the scrape of being engaged. I beat every flower going; when they get off color they depreciate but when I lose the bloom of youth I become dearer to all. I'm practical, I am. I don't go around all summer exhaling perfumes, and having a fine-old-watering-place sort of a time. No; I'm a forehanded kind of a flower. When autumn comes it finds me well heeled. Where are now the blooming dudes that poked fun at me for being plebeian? They are all done up, and even the tramp weed is ashamed of them of them. The letter carrier ain't no more loaded down with their big botanical names, and the few, whose friends had sense enough to pull them in out of the wet, are shivering in hot-houses and wailing in a demi-semi quaver, "When the Spring Time Comes, Gentle Annie." Are any of these fleeting shadows of a butterfly's ghost the proper symbol to represent the rugged and sassy land of Uncle Sam?

"You fellows don't know me, you don't. I'm from away back. Ancient Persia worships me as the emblem of the sun god, and long before the 'May-flower' came into port or Castle Garden was invented, the Montezumas of Mexico and the Incas of Peru held me in reverence as the beloved of the sun whom they all adored. Take note of it. My family portraits were not painted yesterday, and when your European ancestors were digging for roots and prowling around in bearskins and living in caves, I and my brethren garlanded the temples of a civilized race and were emblazoned on imperial banners. This is not Chicago talk I'm giving you. It's solid fact. I can refer you for reference to any boss historian from the city hall to the pyramids and I can bring the influence of past ages to endorse my papers. I'm a genuine American and when I start out I'm bound to get there, you bet. You may not know it, but, in fact, I'm incorporated with the constitution of the people. I don't die sentimentally. I'm neither interred nor cremated. My tomb is a chicken's stomach. I assimilate with the chicken, the chicken assimilates with the great American people, especially about spring time. A sunflower today, a chicken tomorrow, and a sovereign citizen of the United States the day after. Come, be practical. Beat the world by adopting an emblem that is a thing of beauty and one you can grow fat on. Just here I beg to state to the American people that the vealy, underdone youth, Oscar Wild, is not traveling for us and no longer represents the firm which has ceased to have connections with æsthetics and dime museums." JOE SERY.

Literary Notices.

The table of contents of the September COTTAGE HEARTH (published by the Cottage Hearth Co., Boston) comprises many things of rare literary and pictorial excellence. The letterpress was done by writers of note and is of the best quality. Prose and poetry alike are the products of able pens. The pages and plates devoted to adult female and children's late summer and early autumn fashions in costumes will be prized by the wives and mothers who look to the COTTAGE HEARTH for knowledge and direction in all matters of raiment, for they are the latest out and most reliable. THE COTTAGE HEARTH is a sterling magazine, and we hope it will be remembered that we give THE WOBURN JOURNAL ($2 00 per an.) and THE COTTAGE HEARTH ($1 50 per an.) for $2 00 payable IN ADVANCE.

In the September WIDE AWAKE there is good history, biography and travel: see The Prince Imperial and Stanley's Bananas, outdoor sport and indoor ethics: see Two Fishermen, The Margaret-Patty Letters and All Because a Bluebird Sang; curious natural history: see How I tended Silk-worms, An Odd Set, and Two Acquaintances of Mine; fanciful tale and the higher sort of fairy story: see Peterkin and Pollikin go to the Fair, and A Tale of the Black Forest; practical art-lessons: see Drawing the Child-Figure; a masterly serial see Margaret Sidney's The Peppers Crown Up; a fine array of short stories see Mrs. Bates's Red Lilies, Mrs. Sherwood's Sovereign of '45, Clarissa Potter's Aunt Betsey's Cap Box, etc.; pages of original anecdotes, and pictures and poems galore; among them Hassam's drawings of Gossamer Girls, and Mrs. Mary E. Blake's Masquerade, are especially delighting. $2 40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

Readers of HARPER'S MAGAZINE for September are confronted from the beginning with an embarrassment of riches. The number is opened by a series of superb illustrations of Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing—most of them full-page—from drawings by Edwin A. Abbey. These pictures, with Andrew Lang's entertaining and scholarly comment on the play, comprise the fifth instalment of the Illustrations of Shakespeare's Comedies which have been appearing at intervals in the Magazine. Following this paper is a comprehensive and popular article on the New York Chamber of Commerce, its history, purpose, and methods, written by Dr. Richard Wheatley, and richly illustrated; An Imperative Duty, Letters of Charles Dickens to Wilkie Collins, Peter Ibbetson, Glimpses of Western Architecture, A Wheat-field Idyll, London, H.; Under the Minarets, and many interesting papers nearly all of which are profusely illustrated.

, HARPER'S is sold by the New England News Co. of Franklin St., Boston; and by Sparrow Horton at the Old Woburn Bookstore.

The list of contributors to THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for September contains a goodly number of strong names. The opening article, by Prof. John Fiske, is on The Doctrine of Evolution: its scope and influence, and cannot fail to give the general reader a better understanding of this great process. There is an essay by Herbert Spencer on the Limits of State Duties. Dr. Andrew D. White continues his Warfare of Science series. A fifth paper is contributed by Prof. C. Hanford Henderson to his illustrated series on Glass-making. Dr. Charles W. Pilgrim tells what beneficial results have come from Schools for the Insane. A decidedly novel subject is presented in Views of Running Water, by J. Piccard. The sun-spot period now nearing its maximum gives occasion for a discussion of the question, Can we always count upon the Sun? A Classification of Mountain Ranges tells how various kinds of mountains are formed. R Francheschini writes about Musical insects. John Murdoch contributes an interesting account of Eskimo Boats in the Northwest. Dr. Karl Russ pleads for the lives of our feathered creatures under the title Take Care of the Birds! A sketch is given, with portrait, of the retiring President of the American Association, Prof. George Lincoln Goodale. The editor writes on The Warfare of Science and Individuality for Woman. New York: D Appleton & Company. Fifty cents a number, $5 a year.

The most timely and interesting feature of the September number of the NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE is a finely-illustrated article on the late Edward Burgess and his Boats. The writer is A. G. McVey, the yachting editor of the Boston Herald, who was for some years an intimate friend of the famous yacht designer and builder. Outline sketches and photogravures of his best-known yachts, the winners of the international races, embellish a thoroughly well written article. Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells opens the number with a sketch of Campobello and its old Brass Cannon, around which linger some of those memories savoring of feudal days, which William Black has made so familiar in his stories of the Orkneys. E. P. Powell, who is associated with W. O. McDowell, the leading spirit in the movement to draw the republics of the world into closer bonds, writes with fine enthusiasm on A Pan-Republic Congress, This preparation of the world for democracy is, he thinks, the work of this nineteenth century and a fitting gift of this generation to those who come after. Charles Howard Shinn, the well-known California writer contributes a paper on The University of California. It is well illustrated, and very interesting. It shows the growth of a great institution in spite of the indifference and political opposition of the demagogues and millionnaires of the Pacific Coast. Dr Prosper Bender in an article on The French Canadian Peasantry gives us an insight into the conduct of elections in French Canada, which is very entertaining and instructive. Himself a French Canadian, he does not hesitate to declare that there is almost universal corruption in French Canadian electorates. Caroline Christine Stecker writes on Philip, Pontiac, and Tecumseh, the prophets and warriors of the Indian race. A gossip on book and novelists by Walter Blackburn Harte, under the attractive title of In a Corner at Dodsley's is interesting. Arthur L. Salmon, an English writer, who is a contributor to all the leading London magazines, contributes a fine poem, A Buried City. There are other poems by John Allister Currie, Kate Whiting, and Caroline Thayer. David Buffum, Caroline Sinclair Woodward, and Mary L. Adams contribute bright stories. Winfield S Nevins gives an interesting account of the growth of the North Shore as a summer resort, which is lavishly illustrated. The Editor's Table and Omnibus are bright and pertinent.

MONEY SPENT FOR TELEGRAPHING.

Figures That Give One Some Idea of What It Costs to Run a Newspaper.

The records of the Western Union Telegraph company may be consulted to show the extent of the expenditures by the individual newspapers and the Associated Press for telegraphic tolls alone.

During the year ending June 30, 1890, the Western Union Telegraph company delivered at all stations 322,088,438 words of "regular" or Associated Press report. This was delivered to an average of two newspapers in each place, at an average cost of fifteen cents per 100 words for each place. This is rendered possible only by the great number of places served on a circuit, from thirty to forty being supplied in some cases at the same time.

During the same period the company handled 206,025,094 words of specials, at an average cost of fifty-one cents per hundred words. These figures do not include reports transmitted by the Associated Press over its leased wires, or special correspondence sent on individual newspapers' leased wires. Estimating these two classes and the reports of the outside press, there was delivered to the newspapers during that year an aggregate amount of 1,500,000,000 words of telegraph news.

On the regular service a little more than 22 per cent. is handled by the telegraph company in the daytime, while on the special service only about 5 per cent. of the volume is handled in the daytime. The day rate is twice the night rate. On the Associated Press leased wires the proportions are 34 per cent. of day report to 36 per cent. of night report, and the difference in cost the same as by Western Union lines. The total press receipts by the telegraph company for the year ending June 30, 1890, including regular, special and leased wires, were $1,848,247.23.

It should be borne in mind that these figures do not include tolls on other lines, or cable tolls, or the wages of correspondents and operators, or miscellaneous expenses, or the sums paid for news by both individual newspapers and the Associated Press, which would aggregate a very large sum.

One very interesting feature of news service, of which the public has no knowledge, is telegraphing in cases of storms and interruptions. It is on such occasions that the utility of a vast system is made manifest. During the blizzard of March, 1888, for instance, the Washington report was sent to Philadelphia via New Orleans, Memphis, St. Louis, Chicago and Pittsburg; while New York city received it from Albany, it having reached Albany via New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland and Buffalo.

A more extraordinary case is that of Boston, which received a condensed report from New York via London, it being sent by one cable from New York to London, and thence back by another cable which lands in New Hampshire. Boston is frequently served with New York news via Montreal, and Albany via Pittsburg and Buffalo, the route being via the Pennsylvania rail road to Pittsburg, thence across via Cleveland to Buffalo, and thence down the New York Central to Albany.—William Henry Smith in Century.

News by Rail in England.

Many news parcels are lost or delayed in transit. There is complaint on this score in some newspaper offices nearly every week. The revenue such dispatches bring to the railway companies is so small that they can hardly be expected to pay much attention to them. Rates vary with the distance, as may be supposed. One penny for every fifty miles is about the charge for news parcels, but the minimum, so far as the writer's experience goes, is twopence, and sometimes for a very short distance—when the lines of two companies have to be utilized—the cost is fourpence. Letters, it should be noted, are not allowed to be sent in such dispatches, but they are sent all the same.

The charge for a news parcel, whatever it may be, is of course defrayed by railway stamps. As a rule reporters and others are supplied with printed envelopes duly stamped.—London Tit-Bits.

The Heads of the Navajos.

Upon every occasion where I was permitted to do so, careful examinations were made of the heads of these people, both living and dead, as well as the methods of strapping the infant Navajos in their cradles, and, indeed, all else that might tend to throw light upon the subject.

Of some two or three dozen children of all ages, from the infant upward, that I have thus examined I have yet to find a case wherein the mother has not taken the special precaution to place a soft and ample pad in the cradle in such a manner as to fully protect the back of the child's head. Moreover, I have yet to see a case, except for a few days or more in the very youngest of babies, where the head is strapped at all. On the other hand, this part of the body is allowed all possible freedom.—Dr. R. W. Shufeldt in Popular Science Monthly.

Sweetness and Light.

Mr. C. Archibald Sharpe—Newpop's little boy is dead.

Mrs. S.—I didn't know he had a boy.

"He hasn't. I tell you the boy is dead."

"I mean I didn't know he had the boy before he died."

"Who in thunder said he was dead? It was the boy that died, stupid!"—Life.

A Remarkable Epidemic.

During the reign of Lysimachus, 286 B. C., so Lucian tells us, the people of Abdera were afflicted with a remarkable and unaccountable fever. "It was always at the crisis on the seventh day, and then it left them, but with their imaginations so distracted that they fancied themselves players. After they had apparently regained their health they were continually repeating the verses of some tragedy, as if they had been on the stage. Those particularly selected were from the 'Andromeda' of Euripides. It was a remarkable and curious sight to see many of these pale, meager actors upon the street at one time, each pouring forth his tragic exclamations. This delirium continued until the winter following, which was a very cold one, well calculated to remove it."

Modern writers, in attempting to account for the prevalence of this unique species of disease, declare that it was brought about by one Archelaus, an excellent player, who appeared before the Abderites in the heat of summer. Many of the people were taken sick while at the play, and as their imaginations were full of tragedy the delirium which the fever raised perpetually represented Andromeda, Perseus, Medusa, etc. How the same could have spread by infection to those who had never seen or even heard of Archelaus and his wonderful acting has never been made clear.—St. Louis Republic.

THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUSES.

In another column of this paper are notices of the time and places for holding the Republican caucuses in this city. Let all take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

It is especially desirable that these caucuses be fully attended. The work of the conventions will be of more than ordinary importance this year and good men should be made delegates to them.

Don't fail, Republicans, to be prompt at the caucuses, and when there, do your duty. If you fail to attend these meetings then forever hold your peace as to how the business at them was transacted.

ANOTHER CANDIDATE.

Malden has put in a claim for a share of the good things to be distributed by the Republican State Convention to be held on Sept. 16 instant. The particular thing that Malden asks for is the nomination of Henry E. Turner for the post of State Auditor, and the Boston News stands ready to "second the nomination."

Mr. Turner has represented Malden in the Legislature several times very creditably to all concerned, but he stands no sort of a show for the Auditorship unless Major Gould withdraws from the canvass.

THE THIRD PARTY.

The Prohibition party are abroad in the land once more. They propose to repeat this year the folly of former ones and do their best to defeat the Republican party—the only true friends the temperance cause ever had.

Several municipalties have already chosen delegates to attend a State Prohibition convention at which it was proposed to put in nomination a full State ticket as usual, not with any expectation of electing it but to damage the Republicans all they can.

OVERWHELMINGLY FOR ALLEN.

It is probably safe to say that the Republicans of Middlesex county are for Mr. Allen for Governor by a very large majority.

This may be accounted for partly on the ground that he is a Middlesex county citizen, but more because he is known to be a popular young business man, imbued with the right kind of political ideas, and will pull in the votes like a six-ox team.

☞ Indications in Woburn point to the election of Loring delegates to the Councillor Convention. From what we hear we judge, in fact know, that such a delegation will vouchsafe Woburn a Councillor in 1893.—*

☞ Brother Jefts of Hudson seems to be making headway in his campaign for the Councillorship. Lawrence did the handsome thing by him. There is one thing about it, brother Jefts is temperance to the spinal column.

— Chief McIntosh promptly warned a "policy" promoter to quit town the other day and the fellow quit without any farther parleying. The Chief don't want any such chaps in this city and it won't be healthy for them to try to ply their trade here.

— Chief McIntosh is a proud father of a bouncing big girl baby, and there is a happy grandmother in the family too. The Chief's heir apparent put in a very welcome appearance last Monday morning bright and early. Her weight in her stockings was 10 lbs. plus.

— A report is current that Mr. Houston is about to quit the leather business and embark in something more profitable. He has been a very successful manufacturer, but the hard times in leather for the last three years induce him to seek some other livelihood.

— Methodist clergymen and bishops would find Mr. George F. Harris's a good place to go if they love "yallerlegged chickens" as well as it used to be said they did. George has raised 2000 of them on his chicken farm at Walnut Hill this season. How's that for high!

— Mrs. S. C. Bailey is a rare vocalist and a very successful teacher of singing. She enjoys a reputation second to no lady in these parts. We are glad to learn that she has left Winchester and come to Woburn to live with Mrs. Nancy M. Parker at 706 Main street.

— A roystering quartet of youngish sort of men left this city last Monday morning for a staving old time at Lake Massabesic which is handy by or an annex to Manchester, N. H. The names of these gay, jolly chaps were: Charles R. Brown, newsdealer and stationer; F. H. Lewis, Principal of the Lewis Music School; Jack McConnell; and Herbert Richardson, of Richardson Brothers, proprietors of the biggest steam laundry in the county. They laid out one of the programmes we read of for the week's outing and tomorrow evening will see them all at home again.

— The Labor Day Amusement Committee of the A. O. H. who are to picnic at Baldwin's Grove on Sept. 7 are getting up some fine sports for the boys. A tug-of-war open to all competitors, $15 prize, will be a prominent feature. There will be music and dancing galore.

— Mr. Frederic A. Flint returned from his summer vacation visit to Camden, Maine, where he has been enjoying life for a month or more, early this week and has already peeled for the fall's business campaign. He looks healthy, hearty, and (if it were possible to paint the rose a brighter hue) more beautiful than ever.

— PIANO-FORTE: The card of Miss A. Josephine Lang may be found in another column of this paper. This announcement will be of interest to a large number of students of the piano-forte. That Miss Lang is a popular and successful teacher is shown by her large and increasing list of pupils.

— The Ladies' Auxiliary of St. Charles C. T. A. Society will hold their first annual reunion in Lyceum Hall on the evening of Oct. 9 next. It will also be in honor of Fr. Mathew's birthday, the anniversary of which falls on the next day—Oct. 10. It is expected to be a notable society event.

— Last Saturday night the Woburn Press Club, in solemn conclave, voted not to go fishing any more this season. They have housed their yacht for the winter in a barn in the upper part of the city. It is generally understood that abundant success has not attended their piscatorial activities this season.

— Mrs. Edward Singer of No. 30 Union street, this city, is visiting her grandmother at Canaan, N. H., where she will remain through the month of September. During her stay up there Mrs. Singer will visit the White Mountains, autumn being the "season" and the best time for a trip through them.

— The families of C. Willard Smith, C. M. Strout, E. E. Thompson, Jacob Wright, Abijah Thompson, Mrs. Emma T. Dow, and T. Benton Tidd went to Waverly last Tuesday to attend the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Jewett. Mrs. Jewett is a sister to Mrs. E. E. and Mrs. Abijah Thompson and Mrs. Jacob Wright.

— Mr. B. H. Nichols is rebuilding his rendering establishment which has been twice destroyed by fire within a year. Both times he lost what the fire burned up for there was no insurance on the establishment on account of the excessive rate charged for it. Mr. Nichols is plucky and wide-awake, which means a new factory in short metre.

— We met Mr. Jacob Wright of Kilby street last Saturday moving along with a step as elastic as that of a boy although he is rising 82 years old. "Hale and hearty, Mr. Wright?" "Aye, Mr. JOURNAL, hale, hearty, and happy," and we thought that from his look and step he was in full enjoyment of the three hs, as we knew he deserved to be.

— Dr. Frank W. and Mrs. Graves, and Mrs. Walker of McHenry county, Illinois, left here last Saturday for a two months trip to Europe. They sailed from Boston on the Pavonia, and quit the shores of America in high glee. May health and pleasure attend their footsteps abroad, and favoring breezes waft them safely home when ready to come.

— Mr. John R. Carter returned the fore part of this week from Bathurst, N. B., where he has a large interest in saw, shingle and other mills. He reports business as good in the Provinces especially the lumber business, and while at Bathurst he made plans with his partners for increasing the capacity of their plant three fold. Mr. Carter was well pleased with the business outlook down there.

— Miss Emma Fosdick will resume her classes on the Banjo, Guitar and Mandolin on the 15th of this month, providence permitting. The prospect for a large number of pupils is excellent. Miss Fosdick has met with marked success as a teacher on the above instruments and her scholars come from many adjacent towns as well as from the best families in this city.

— In relation to visiting the Columbus World's Fair at Chicago, Fred. B. Leeds is agent for the orginators and promoters of "A chance for both Rich and Poor to attend" which is worthy of a close examination. It is a neat scheme of the World's Fair Excursion Co. of New Bedford, and for full particulars concerning it the reader should call at Leeds's at once. It is a good one.

— In the rifle contest between the Woburn, Wakefield and Stoneham teams last Saturday the Wakefield won by 14 over Woburn and 41 over Stoneham. The best individual score made however was by a member of the Woburn team, Priv. J. L. Fowle whose figure was 46, while the next best was by Buglar P. S. Kilian of the Wakefield, 44. The Stoneham boys, as usual, were away behind in every respect and took their defeat as a matter of course.

— Mr. Marshall M. Tidd has been elected by the Woburn Sewerage Commissioners as their engineer. It was the best choice that could have been made. As an hydraulic engineer he stands second to no one in the State. He has built some of the largest waterworks in New England and the Provinces, and his services are in constant demand for such engineering work from far and near. The Commission did well when they elected Mr. Tidd for their engineer.

— An informal farewell reception was tendered to General Secretary Alfred H. Whitford and wife at the Cambridge Young Men's Christian Association last Monday night. There was a large attendance and music was furnished by the Association orchestra. Mr. Whitford leaves Cambridge next Tuesday for his new field at Rochester, N. Y. Alfred H. is a young man in whom the Christian people of Woburn take great pride, for he is a "Woburn Boy;" was educated in our public schools; learned his a b c in Y. M. C. A. work here; and has proved an honor to his native place and his profession. May peace and prosperity follow the footsteps of him and his as long as he lives.

— Republicans, don't forget the date of the caucuses—Sept. 9. They will be important ones. At them delegates to all the conventions are to be chosen and they should be the right kind of men. It is earnestly hoped that the caucuses will be fully attended. They are the most important meetings of the campaign. The kind of work which the different conventions will do rests on the primaries. Republicans turn out to a man and attend them.

— The ladies of this city will be interested in a card in the present issue of the JOURNAL from Miss Conant of Church street because it relates to a business which they can patronize with much profit and advantage. It is a business for which there seems to be strong demand here, and as it is well known that Miss Conant understands it thoroughly and is particularly careful to please her patrons and to do honest work for fair pay, it is believed that she will meet with firstclass success.

— The Harris Specialty Company, whose advertisement may be found in another column, showed here about three years ago to the unbounded satisfaction of everyone who witnessed their performances at Lyceum Hall. It was pronounced firstclass by a verdict that was unanimous. They are coming here again on next Monday evening—Labor Day night, and we have no doubt but that the announcement will draw a full house. A fine entertainment will be given and everybody ought to be there to enjoy it.

— The Mutual Benefit Association of this city deserve great credit for their promptness in paying over the first death rate they have been called on for during the year of their existence. Mr. William S. McGregor, a member of the Association, died very early Saturday morning, and on the afternoon of the same day Mrs. McGregor, the widow, received $158 from the Treasurer of the Association, that being the amount due. Such prompt attention to duty was worthy of all praise.

— Mr. Webster Woodman, for many years the faithful and popular head salesman at Mr. Charles M. Munroe's large clothing and gents furnishing establishment, 423 Main street, this city, suffered a violent attack of rheumatism on Monday morning and was able to be about only by the aid of stout walking-sticks. Mr. Wooodman was a great sufferer from rheumatism some years ago but has been quite free from the distressing ailment for some time. The JOURNAL hopes he will be all right again very soon.

— If we were in the least under the weather (as most people are at the falling of the leaves in autumn) Sulphur Bitters would be the remedy we should resort to at once. A. P. Ordway & Co. of Boston, as honest a firm of chemists as live, have made and sold Sulphur Bitters for years, and today it is one of the most efficacious and popular medicines extant. The systems of human beings change with the changing seasons when they need something to "brace them up," and if there is anything made that will do it it is Sulphur Bitters.

— Prof. Clark, organist at the First Congregational Church in this city, is building an organ in the new music hall at his home just over the Reading line which, when it is completed, will be the largest in this part of the country. The Professor, who is a practical organ builder as well as an acknowledged master of the art of playing it, expects to have his mammoth instrument finished and ready for dedication by Sept. 1, 1892. The dedication will be a grand musical event in which the most eminent talent in America will participate.

— Good Deacon Gage is one of the pluckiest men we have among us. As sick as he is and has been for many months past he took a herdic drive down town last Saturday, and better still went into the old store and rested awhile. We couldn't discover but that he looked as healthy in his face as he has for the last three years; his spirits were high, and the edge of his wit at the editor's expense evidently had not been dulled any to speak of by time or illness. He was as bright as a dollar, and it was cheering to see him outdoors once more.

— Miss M. L. Bancroft has a professional card in the JOURNAL this week which imparts information respecting the fall work of that lady in the line of musical instruction important to those who are seeking an education on the piano-forte. Attention is respectfully called to her announcement. Miss Bancroft is a popular and successful teacher. She is au fait in all the latest methods of instruction, having lately been a pupil of the most famous pianist in Boston, and her classes graduate from her hands skilled players. Miss Bancroft enjoys a large patronage in this city and surroundings.

— Profession and practice should go hand-in-hand. Precept and example should work together. "Who drives fat oxen must himself be fat." Those who set themselves up as public teachers should practice their own rules. And yet the Woburn Press Association do not do it—at least one of them does not. The law respecting hats is that a straw one must not be worn after Sept. 1. This has been so for many years. Straw hats are positively not allowed under any circumstances after that date. But notwithstanding this law one member of the W. P. A., to our certain knowledge, still sports his old straw!

— Principal Mendum of the Woburn High School has been about the city this week viewing the field of his rapidly approaching pedagogic labors and shaking hands with friends. His ruddy cheek and bronzed brow bear unmistakable imprint of a vacation spent in the open air amid Nature's health-imparting scenes. He looked as though fishing, shooting and tramping in the woods and pastures of rural regions had occupied a considerable part of his summer vacation, and a bright eye, elastic step, care-free smile, and nervy hand-grasp, prove that these have been a balm to a jaded, tired and pretty well worn out physical frame. We are glad to see the Professor on deck again, and to be assured that country air and fodder, close communion with old fashioned Down East Nature, as well as sea breezes and mountain climbing, have done their perfect work of recuperation for him.

Piano-forte Instruction.
Miss A. Josephine Lang,
Residence, 413 Main Street,
Will receive pupils Sept. 19, 1891.

— On Monday afternoon we enjoyed the pleasure of an introduction to Professor Young, organist of the Unitarian church at Hopedale, by Prof. W. H. Clark, organist of the First Congregational church in this city. Both are eminent in their profession, and the soul of each is brimful and running over with melody. Prof. Young is a brother of Rev. George H. Young, formerly pastor of the Woburn Unitarian church and for some years pastor of a church of the same denomination in Boston. There is a strong personal resemblance between the Organist and the Divine in this if nothing more: both are gentlemen.

— John Henry Parker and Edward H. Richards went on ahead to spy out the land and get the camp ready, and T. Marvin Parker will follow next Monday. Their objective point was Parlin's Pond in the upper part of Somerset county, in Maine, a locality which this same party, or some of the members at least, have visited before. Fishing and hunting are the ostensible purposes of these people, but those who know them best believe that rest and recuperation, not to mention fun, are the things mostly sought by them. There have been no fish in Parlin Pond within the memory of man, but it is a romantic region, and Parker, Richards and Parker are romantic gentlemen. Hence, etc.

— Arrangements can be made at the Lewis Music School to furnish teachers for any musical instrument desired. The teachers are the best in their respective branches that Boston can produce on Violin, Flute, Piccolo, Clarionet, all string and brass instruments, in fact anything. Piano-forte lessons are the principal feature at the school. Four teachers are connected with the piano-forte department. Lessons can be furnished for a dollar and upwards apiece, according to the length of lessons, teachers engaged, time, payment etc., etc. Mrs. Lewis has no equal as lady teacher in this vicinity, being specially popular with children. A splendid system of study is provided for. Many new pupils are expected this season.

— Gregory, the enterprising real estate agent of this city and Boston, has made the following sales since our last issue and has several others "working": the Prudence Duren estate. No. 15 and 17 Glenwood street to Thomas Costello for $1675; Capt. Charles K. Conn, homestead on Scott street, $2200; Ellen M. Brannigan estate on Swanton street, Winchester, to Patrick Hanlon for $1000; John Daly estate to John Wood for $1300. This shows movement in real estate and the presence of money in the community. Cooper & Rand of Woburn and Boston report that their agency is doing a fairly brisk business in this city and vicinity, several sales having been recently made by them. Mr. John I. Munroe reports a fair business.

— Just prior to his departure for the other side Dr. Graves performed an operation on the broken leg of Mr. Charles H. Taylor of Pleasant street for the purpose of removing fragments of the shattered bone. Abcesses had formed and given the patient considerable trouble. On Tuesday morning last Dr. Hatch, assisted by Dr. Chalmers, increased the size of the opening in the wound made by Dr. Graves and then took away several pieces of bone, gave the remainder a thorough scraping off, and left the leg in a condition that warrants the opinion that it will soon be healed. It had got into a bad and perhaps dangerous condition but both Dr. Hatch and Dr. Chalmers are confident of a speedy recovery and tolerably good leg. Mr. Taylor was etherized during the operation. He is now bright and hopeful of a speedy recovery.

— Labor Day is to be observed here in the best of fashion. Goings-on will be numerous if the weather is good. A few of the chief amusements to be indulged here and about here are set forth in the following paragraph: Red Men and Daughters of Pocahontas' picnic at Sprague's Grove, Spot Pond; Division 3, Ancient Order of Hibernians' picnic at Baldwin's Grove, Central Square; Assembly 2956, Knights of Labor picnic at Hudson's Grove; Stoneham Light Infantry, Co. H. Sixth Regiment, M. V. M., field day, with target shoot, dress parade, banquet, and ball in the evening; Middlesex County Championship Tennis Tournament on the Mt. Pleasant Lawn Tennis Courts, Corner of Prospect and Mt. Pleasant streets, Woburn; Y. M. C. A. Tennis Tournament at Stoneham; there will be a celebration at Montvale by Division 18 A. O. H., and Veterans of Co. K, 39th Regiment, will attend the twenty-fifth annual reunion at the old camp grouds at Lynnfield, Mass.

— We are informed on very good authority that the municipal political pot has begun to boil. Things are going to beterribly mixed in December. It would be a hard thing to guess within 40 rows of apple trees who the next Mayor of this city will be, although the present Hon. incumbent is now slightly in the lead. It isn't at all likely that Kenney will try it again. Everett Thompson would fill the bill but there is no knowing whether he would consent to run or not. It isn't probable that City Clerk Moreland will take a very active part in the contest. He's got a good berth and wants to keep it, therefore he will let the politicians fight their own battles without his aid this hitch. Possibly Ald. Davis of Ward 1 has aspirations for the Mayor's chair, but he would hardly deem it wise or friendly to buck against Mayor Bean. Perhaps Ald. Ham may have ambitions in that direction, but we think not. This however we know good and strong: there will be a big political fight when our next charter election takes places—and don't you forget it.

— A crayon portrait of ex-Mayor Edward F. Johnson is to be executed and hung in the City Council Chamber in Municipal Building. The artist employed to make it is Albert Thompson whose work in the crayon line, as it is in oil landscapes and cattle, is of the highest grade. He will make a picture of Mr. Johnson worthy of the subject, the confidence reposed in his merits as an artist, and of its ultimate conspicuous hanging. This starting out with the portrait of ex-Mayor Johnson for the Council Chamber should be followed by that of Mayor Bean and every future incumbent of the chair. Posterity demands this. What wouldn't the present generation give for a portrait of Capt Edward Johnson, the first Town Clerk of Woburn, and of his successors, and those of all the Selectmen of the town from their earliest date down to the time when the old town form of government ceased to exist—1889? They would be priceless. There never was a better time to begin to hang portraits of Mayors in the Council Chamber than now. And the city authorities could not have selected a better man to execute the first one of the series than Albert Thompson.

Tennis Tournament.

The Courts of the Mount Pleasant Lawn Tennis Association in this city will, if nothing splits, present a gay and lively appearance on Labor Day which comes next Monday, Sept. 7. The occasion of it will be the annual champion tournament of the Middlesex County Tennis League which has been set for that time and place, and which, it is expected, will be largely attended by the members thereof as well as by many scores and hundreds of lovers of the fashionable game who reside within hailing distance of the Courts. Information has been received by the managers which warrants the conclusion that this tournament will be the most numerously patronized and the most interesting that the League has ever held.

The following is a skeleton of the programme of the day, a perusal of which will no doubt afford the participants, amateurs and lovers of the game much pleasure: Play will be as usual for singles only, and will be called at 9 A. M. First and second prizes will be offered, the second prize to be given to the runner up. The entrance fee will be $1, and all entries must be sent to the League Secretary, J. F. DeLoriea, 89 South Market street, Boston, not later than Friday, Sept. 4. Drawings will be made Saturday, Sept. 5. The winner of the tournament will play the present holder of the championship cup, H. G. Bixby of the Lowell club.

The Courts of the Mt. Pleasant Lawn Tennis Association are on Mt. Pleasant street, in this city, and are said to be as good as they make anywhere.

A Good Idea.

But it is not the money raised, that could be spent to such grand advantages in the line of education, that would be the most important factor in the gain made. No man contributes money for any purpose without taking an increased interest in it, and no voter paying 5 cents a week through the month of October would fail to be at the polls in November, if alive and well. It would be his party that was meeting the enemy; his political principles and policy seeking vindication in the ballot box; his loyal and patriotic comrades incited to the performance of the full duty of citizenship by his example. When this element of personal pride in political action is reached, when the matter of personal responsibility is realized, there will no longer be a stay-at-home vote to worry about, and with this accomplished every other menance to the home and its dearest interests would vanish.—Arlington Advocate.

A High Honor.

It is with the keenest pleasure that the Editor of the JOURNAL is privileged to publish the fact that MRS. IDA M. CURRAN, wife of Lawyer Franc P. Curran, of Scott street in this city, was unanimously elected one of the Vice-Presidents of The Women's Press Department of the World's Fair at a meeting held at Parker's on last Tuesday afternoon.

Madame Curran was formerly the accomplished and highly successful Editor of the City Press published in this city during which period she became a member of the N. E. W. P. A., and soon arose to an honorable and influential position in the same.

Madame C., allow us to cordially congratulate you on the high honor so deservedly conferred on you by the New England Women's Press Association.

Obituary.

DIED. At the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, on Saturday morning, August 29, 1891, WILLIAM S. MCGREGOR, of peritonitis, after an illness of about 10 days.

The deceased was born in Scotland, near Anderson, in April 1852, and was therefore less than 40 years old at the time of his death. It may truthfully be said of him that he died in the strength of early manhood when the prospect for many years of useful life was fair.

Before he was seven years old the lad lost both parents by death and at that tender age he was apprenticed to a florist in his native Scotland with whom he served seven years and became a master of the art. Besides the knowledge acquired by a long apprenticeship he had a taste for flowers and floral work which fitted him in a peculiar manner for his chosen occupation. Among florists in general and in the Boston Florist Club and among Flower merchants there Mr. McGregor was held in high esteem and was always regarded as one of the best of the craft. He had many warm friends in the trade as well as in all classes of community.

Mr. McGregor came to this country some 18 or 20 years ago and has steadily pursued his chosen avocation ever since, having spent nearly all of these years at the greenhouses of the Dows in this city. The Dow houses are among the most extensive in this section of the State and by his industry, activity and good business judgment they have been notably prosperous under his management, assisted by Mr. Michael Maguire and Mr. Walter Stackpole, the latter a fellow countryman of the deceased. He was also largely interested and had means invested in Winchester greenhouses at the time of his death.

On May 17, 1881, Mr. McGregor was united in marriage to Miss Julia Weldon of this city, who, with two small children—Eddie, 8 years, and another nearly 2—remains to mourn the early death of a kind and dutiful husband and an indulgent, loving father. These deeply bereaved ones have the heartfelt sympathy of all. A brother also survives him and lives in Scotland, and a sister is a resident of this city.

Mr. McGregor was a prominent member and officer of Clan McKinnon of the Order of Scottish Clans in which he took a deep interest, and which comprises in its membership the best of Scotch blood in society. His obsequies were conducted by Clan McKinnon in uniform. He was also a member of the Gardeners and Florists Club of Boston; of the Woburn Mutual Benefit Association; Order of Solid Rock; and other social and mutual benefit organizations. He was active and influential in all these and in each could count warm friends by the score.

The deceased was a large-hearted man—kind, sympathetic, and generous to a fault. His death is generally lamented in this city and Boston. He possessed a good mind; his brain was clear; and he had a heart and a hand open to the needy everywhere and always. His fellow citizens held him in high esteem; his untimely death cast a gloom over the community; regret and sorrow at his loss were deep and general.

The funeral of Mr. McGregor took place on Monday afternoon at the First Congregational church, of which he had been a member for10 or more years. Rev. Daniel March D.D., conducted the religious exercises which were touching and solemn in the extreme. His remarks were tender, considerate, and well fitted to the occasion. The sympathy which he expressed for the deeply bereaved family of the deceased; the wise counsel he gave to the clansmen assembled to pay their last sad tribute of love over the bier of a departed brother; the appeal to everybody to live good lives—all these sentiments clothed in pure, simple language strongly impressed the minds and hearts of the listeners as any observer could easily see. The audience was a very large one and composed of our best people.

The music was unusually fine. The singing was done by the Ladies Schumann Quartet, which is one of the best musical societies in this city. The pieces which they gave were appropriate and very sweetly rendered, their names being: "Blessed are the Dead" and "Gathering Home." The rendition of these beautiful selections by the four gifted female vocalists contributed largely to the solemnity and interest of the funeral.

Prof. Clarke's music on the organ was beautiful. In deference to the nationality of Mr. McGregor he played only sweet old Scotch melodies: "My Heart's in the Highlands," "Land o'the Leal," "Farewell to Loch Antum," "Highland May," and other airs dear to every loyal Scotchman's heart, and it was in breathless silence that the audience sat and listened to the melodious notes of the organ so splendidly played.

The church was profusely and beautifully adorned with flowers and plants. There was a great profusion of roses made into special pieces and bouquets, and the casket was lined with them. Quantities of smilax was woven into the decorations, and many beautiful ferns, palms and other plants were placed on the walls of the choir, the altar, the stairs and elsewhere. It is very seldom that such a display of flowers and plants is seen anywhere. Some of the set pieces were: harp of roses and smilax from Clan McKinnon; then there were a cross of the same material; a pillow; "goodbye;" "Husband;" and many others equally rich and elegant; all of which were lovingly contributed by Messrs. Maguire and Stackpole; by Mrs. McGregor; Mr. and Mrs. Hovey, florists; Mr. and Mrs. C. Ingham; the Florists Club of Boston; fraternal societies; and neighbors and friends.

The pall-bearers were: Past Chief J. W. Hutchinson; Warden, J. B. Sweetin; Treasurer, Alex Murray; Seneschal, James McDonald, all of Clan McKinnon; John Black, Secretary of the Grand Clan, and Chief William Brennan of Clan Stewart of Somerville. Piper Duncan McLean of Clan Stewart headed the funeral procession and played solemn music on the bagpipes. Clan McKinnon in kilts led the cortege.

The burial service of the Clan was performed at Salem street cemetery where the earthly remains of William S. McGregor were laid at rest.

DIED. At the residence of her parents, No. 514 Main street, this city, at 8 o'clock on Monday evening, Aug. 31, Mrs. ALICE HUTCHINGS CASE, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George H. Hutchings, and wife of Mr. Walter W. Case, of Greenville, Penn., of consumption.

The subject of this notice was born at Townsend in this State on Oct. 11, 1866, consequently she would have been 25 years old on the 11th of next month. Her whole life however was passed in Woburn, to which place her parents came when she was an infant. She grew up with the present generation of young people, went to school with them, and graduated from the High School with a large class of them in 1886. In 1889 Miss Hutchings graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music where she was esteemed by her tutors and associates and by the public in this town as an accomplished musician. She was a young lady of literary culture as well and in every way fitted to adorn society and enjoy life with people of education and taste. She was a member of the First Baptist Church of Woburn and was ever active in religious work, having been a teacher in the Sabbath School and an organizer of the Young Peoples' Society of Christian Endeavor and its first Secretary.

On the evening of June 14, 1891, Miss Hutchings was united in the bonds of matrimony with Mr. Walter W. Case, an estimable young gentleman who was cashier of a National Bank at Greenville, Penna., since which date the couple have lived in the White Mountains for the benefit of the bride's health. Although ill at the time, the wedding, which was solemnized at the pleasant residence of Dr. and Mrs. Hutchings, was a very pretty one and a happy occasion for all present. From that hour Mr. Case lovingly devoted his whole time and attention to the comfort and pleasure of his youthful bride and in doing all that lay in his power, aided by the best medical skill, to prolong her life. But alas! the seeds of disease had been planted in her system; they had begun their work; and medical science was impotent before its progress. All that a fond husband could do was to make the life of his dear wife as comfortable as possible.

Finding no sovereign remedy in the bracing air of the mountains, but growing weaker constantly, Mrs. Case returned to the home of her parents about three weeks prior to her decease and has been nursed and tended by them with love and sorrow ever since. She failed daily but did not complain or murmur over her lot. Rather, it was accepted with Christian resignation as the will of the Master which can never be wrong, and as the end approached she viewed it calmly and without fear, anxiety, or doubt. Just as evening set in on Monday, after spending the afternoon below stairs with the family, she passed peacefully away to the Better Land.

The deceased was a true Christian young woman. She possessed in large measure the Christian graces. She had a sweet disposition which, with her kind and gentle deportment, endeared her to a large circle of friends who now deeply mourn her early death. All who knew her were her friends. In her death society and the church have lost a worthy member.

In their deep affliction the parents, husband and other relatives of Mrs. Case will receive the sincere sympathy of this community.

The funeral services were held at the residence of Dr. Hutchings at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The Star thinks the Boston Record wants to defeat Lawyer McCall's aspirations for another term in the Legislature. The Star seems to forget that Barrett and McCall, as politicians, have always "hunted in couples," and that personaly Damon and Pythias were never more lovingly united. A search into the "true inwardness" of the business would doubtless disclose the fact that the Record is doing nothing to injure the candidacy of Brother McCall.

A meeting of the directors of the V. I. A. will be held some evening next week to take action looking to an exhibit of fruits, flowers and vegetables. It has been suggested that the day of the annual meeting, the third Thursday in September, be set apart for this event, and that the exhibition be held in the small hall in the afternoon, with a grand supper, awarding of prizes and speecl.making in the evening in the large hall. This suggestion will be considered by the officers, full particulars of which will be given to the public.—Star. That is a good idea. A real enjoyable time might be had in this way. I "second the nomination."

Boston Theatres.

The theatres of Boston opened the season last Monday night with attractive entertainments at each. Good plays were presented at all of them and full houses rewarded extraordinary efforts to please a theatre-going and appreciative public.

THE BOSTON MUSEUM.

"Ye Early Trouble," a dramatic creation of American Revolutionary times, was warmly greeted by a solid house at the Museum, where it was presented for the first time. Its cast was made up of the public favorites of the theatre who were generously applauded for their good work. The stage setting and costumes of the actors were very fine.

THE GLOBE.

"Mr. Barnes of New York" was the attraction Monday night at this popular theatre and it gave perfect satisfaction to a large house. The company is strong in that it is an even and well-balauced one. The strength and rugged manhood of Hugo Toland as Mr. Barnes was a splendid counter to the impetuous, yet charming, Miss May Wheeler as Marina, or the lovely and lovable Enid Anstruther of Miss Emma Field. So, too, the work of Sheridan Block as Count Masso Dannella, a finished piece of acting, cleverly brought out the candor of Maud Chartris, so well portrayed by Miss Ethel Haines. The scenery was beautiful.

BOSTON THEATRE.

"After Dark" was the piece that drew an immense audience to the Boston and afforded a great deal of pleasure although it was not its first presentation in Boston.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

A very large audience at the Grand Opera House last evening testified by its unbounded applause, to the fact that "Kit," which has been seen in this city for so many years, is still a favorite. The title role was essayed by Henry Chanfrau, a son of the much lamented actor who made the play of "Kit" so famous. To draw a comparison would hardly be fair, but, be it said to the young man's credit, the part was not only well rendered, but it was presented in a manner which won the instantaneous support of the audience. Eugene Bertram, as Manuel Bond, made a typical villain, while Messrs. Mac. M. Barns as the Judge and Bassett Willard as the Major, provided an unusual amount of fun, much of which was new and original. As a whole the performance was remarkably smooth, and will insure entire satisfaction to the large audiences which doubtless attend during the remainder of the week.

Full houses greeted "A Straight Tip" at the Hollis, and "Mr. Macaroni" at the Tremont.

REG. 11.—The Board will order the removal of all swine, goats or other animals where their presence appears to be prejudicial to the public health and comfort.

REG. 12.—When any physcian is called to attend upon a person in this city sick with small-pox, scarlatina, or other contagious disease dangerous to the public health, the said physician shall immediately give notice thereof to the Board of Health. Said notice shall contain the name of the person sick, the name of the disease, the name of the householder, and the street on which the sick person resides, and all physicians are requested to immediately report fatal termination.

REG. 13.—Any householder in whose family any case of contagious disease occurs shall immediately give notice to the Board of Health, and use all reasonable measures to prevent infection of others.

The Board takes the liberty to suggest further that the people avoid the unnecessary use of water, which, in the absence of proper drainage, will saturate the soil in the vicinity of their houses to a dangerous degree; and also to suggest the daily use of dry earth or sifted ashes to cover the contents of privies or open receptacles of sink water, to absorb poisonous gases and prevent exhalations.

N.B.—Parties can have their vaults and cess-pools cleaned by leaving their order and $2.00 for each with the Chief of Police; where more than one load is to be taken from each vault and cess-pool $2.00 for each load must be left. No order will be received without the money accompanying it.

THE CHILDREN OF GOD.

LESSON X, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 6.

Text of the Lesson, John viii. 31-47. Commit Verses, 33-36—Golden Text, John i, 12—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

31. "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on Him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed."

He is still at Jerusalem, teaching in the temple (verse 2), and it is just after the feast of tabernacles.

32. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

To know the truth is to know Himself, for He is the Truth (chap. xiv, 6), and to know God and Jesus Christ is life eternal (chap. xvii, 3). There is a vital connection between Jesus, the Living Word, and the written word which tells of Him and is full of Him. Acquaint now thyself with Him and be at peace (Job xxii, 21).

33. "They answered Him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man. How sayest thou, ye shall be made free?"

Being only natural men, they understood not His spiritual sayings, for it seemed foolishness to them (I Cor. ii, 14).

34. "Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin."

As the Spirit through Paul has said, "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." And the servants of sin are free from righteousness (Rom. vi. 16, 22).

35. "And the servant abideth not in the house forever, but the Son abideth ever."

In these words He seems to carry us back to the story of Ishmael and Isaac, of which Paul makes so much in Gal. iv, 21-31, bringing out the difference between that which is born of the flesh and that which is born of the Spirit, to which also Jesus made much reference in His conversation with Nicodemus.

36. "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

By an outward conformity to the law they thought to obtain righteousness, not understanding that the law, so holy and just and good, could not possibly give life to a sinner, but could only condemn him (Rom. iii, 19, 20; Gal. iii, 21, 22).

37. "I know that ye are Abraham's seed, but ye seek to kill me, because my Word hath no place in you."

They were children of Abraham by natural descent, but they were not like Abraham spiritually, for Abraham rejoiced in the Christ (verse 56), but they wanted to kill Him.

38. "I speak that which I have seen with my Father, and ye do that which ye have seen with your Father."

As to His Father, He was continually speaking of Him, proclaiming that the Father sent Him, and that He said and did only what the Father taught Him, that the Father was with Him, and that He always pleased the Father, that to know Him was to know the Father.

39. "They answered and said unto Him, Abraham is our Father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham."

They still cling to the idea of natural descent being sufficient, but John the Baptist had taught them the folly of saying, "We have Abraham to our father" (Math. iii, 9); and on a previous occasion Jesus had taught at Capernaum that many would come from east and west and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom, while many who thought themselves entitled to do so would be cast into outer darkness (Math. viii, 11, 12). Only they which are of faith are true children of Abraham (Gal. iii, 6, 7; Rom. ix, 7, ii, 28, 29); and wherever there is faith like that of Abraham there will be works to correspond (Jas. ii, 21-23).

40. "But now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God. This did not Abraham."

41. "Ye do the deeds of your father. Then said they to Him, We be not born of fornication: we have one Father, even God."

In Isa. lxiii, 16; lxiv, 8, we find these words, "Doubtless Thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer: Thy name is from everlasting." "O Lord, Thou art our Father; we are the clay, and Thou our potter; and we all are the work of Thy hand."

42. "Jesus said unto them, If God were your father ye would love me, for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but He sent me."

The Lord had said through Malachi, "A son honoreth his father and a servant his master; if then I be a father, where is mine honor (Mal. i, 6)? And in John v, 23, Jesus had said, "He that honoreth not the son, honoreth not the father which hath sent Him."

43. "Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word."

"Through faith" is the only way to understand (Heb. xi, 3), and if the disciples understood not many things till after Pentecost, even though they believed in Him (chapter xii, 16; xiv, 9), how could these people understand anything when they had no faith in Him whatever.

44. "Ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do."

He had twice told them that they acted like their father (verses 38, 41), and now He says plainly who their father is.

"He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar and the father of it."

Here is the character of their father, a murderer from the beginning and the father of all lies and liars, and Jesus, who utters these words, is not judging by appearances but by the hearts of those whom He addressed, for He read the heart (John ii, 25; vii, 24; Isa xi, 3).

45. "And because I tell you the truth ye believe me not."

Paul asks, "Am I therefore become your enemy because I tell you the truth?" (Gal. iv, 16). Truth is to a heart that loves lies like salt to a wound unhealed, or like a strong light to weak eyes.

46. "Which of you convinceth me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?"

They could not convict Him of sin, for there was no sin in Him; He knew no sin; He did no sin; He was without sin (I John iii, 5; II Cor. v, 21; I Pet. ii, 22).

47. "He that is of God heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God."

Not of God, not of my sheep, neither part nor lot in the matter (chapter x, 26, Acts viii, 21). There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life (Rev. xxi, 27). Let the questions earnestly search our hearts: "Am I of God? Do I love to hear His Word? Are His words more to me than any other words?

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. There is an immense garden in China that embraces an area of 50,000 square miles. It is all meadow land, and is filled with lakes, ponds and canals. Altogether it is as large as the States of New York and Pennsylvania combined.

PESSIMISM.

As the sound of the sea breaking on a rocky coast
At midnight, when the winds are up and the clouds fly
Terrible, rushing headlong on athwart the sky
Far as the eye can track them, a wild, tumultuous host,

So come to me the sound of the surge of existence
In the deep hours of the night of my soul's sorrow;
I see with wan eyes the clouds rushing on, and no morrow
Respite shall bring from grief's ever gnawing persistence.

For what is lost is lost, and I never shall find it;
Cruel and unreturning are the cold and unshaken dead.
My grief is mine own, and unheeding of me on my head
Still beats the storm, the wind ever driving behind it.

Thou, sitting here beside me, listening on the sad shore,
Seem'st to hear voices come to thee out of the night.
Dost thou see aught in the storm and the swift clouds' flight?
Is it eyes or a form thou shalt see, alas! no more?

It shall never come back to thee. 'Tis a wraith storm born,
Tossed up from the tumbling waters broken on the shore;
The voices thou hearest are the wind and waves' roar,
Speaking to thee alone, who mournest of love forlorn.

And thou, who beatest thy breast and strides along
Moaning thy fate and lifting thy hands to the skies,
Crying Woe's me! and suspiring deep drawn sighs,
What? madman! thinkst thou the weak shall have help from the strong?

And thou, with upturned eyes and arms on thy breast still crossed
As thou standest in patience that hopes in the pitiless storm,
Will the holy sign thou makest make the dead heart warm
Or all thy prayers bring back to thee what thou hast lost?

Only black night and winds in an ever storm racked sky,
And the sound of the pounding of billows on the shore;
On through the night that dreary and monotone roar,
As on in the night to the night the night goes by!

—James Davis in London National Observer.

The Care of Brushes.

It is very common to find people who are dainty in all their surroundings and who consider themselves thoroughly neat, who yet are careless about drying their toilet brushes. To wet a brush and have it shut up in a close box insures its being moldy and rank in a short time. All toilet brushes that are used for the hands, mouth or teeth should be thoroughly rinsed and hung up where they will dry in a draft immediately after they are used. It is a good plan to rinse them and hang them in strong sunlight.

There are little racks which hang on the wall to hold the nail and the tooth brushes, and which serve the purpose of drying them better than any other contrivance which we have. If they are dried in an ordinary mug the water drips down and discolors the tip of an ivory handle. Above all things, the tooth brush should be kept scrupulously clean, and it cannot be done unless it is kept thoroughly dried after being used and occasionally exposed to the purifying effects of the sunlight.—New York Tribune.

Sold the Ticket.

An enterprising member of a popular cycling club in Rochester recently held a raffle of a valuable wheel. The tickets were two dollars each, and among the purchasers was a clerk in an up town store. The clerk was not present when the drawing occurred, but his ticket proved the winning number. Several hours later an acquaintance dropped into the store and casually asked the clerk what he would take for his ticket. He named three dollars as the price and the bargain was promptly completed. "That ticket is the winner," said the purchaser gleefully, holding up the cardboard. "I know it," was the response, "and I've just been down after the wheel."—Rochester Democrat.

A Married Look.

Mrs. Grumps—Your friend, Mr. Baldpate, did not mention his wife the whole evening.

Mr. Grumps—Wife! He's an old bachelor.

"Well, I declare! I took it for granted he was married."

"Why?"

"Oh, I don't know. He has a sort of a married look somehow."

"He used to live out west, and once he was treed for three days and three nights by a grizzly."—New York Weekly.

Free Ice Water.

The proprietor of an open air oyster stand in South street supplies free ice water to all who desire to drink it. The pail stands upon one end of the counter, and a card attached to it is plainly marked, "Ice water for all, welcome all." There is a convenient dipper in the pail, and one has only to help himself. There are two men at work at this stand, and it has an air of prosperity.—New York Sun.

A Long Sentence of Six Letters.

Here is a sentence of thirty-two words which some ingenious person has constructed of the six letters found in the word "maiden:" "Ida, a maiden, a mean man named Ned Dean, and Media, a mad dame, made me mend a die and dime and mind a mine in a dim den in Maine."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Difference in Pies.

Hostess—Te he! I beg pardon, Mr. Downeast, but really the New England custom of having pie for breakfast seems very funny.

Mr. Downeast—Ah, madam, if you could taste New England pies you'd want them three times a day.—Good News.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. F. E. Lovell, Druggist.

Stamped out

—blood-poisons of every name and nature, by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It's a medicine that starts from the beginning. It rouses every organ into healthy action, purifies and enriches the blood, and through it cleanses and renews the whole system. All Blood, Skin, and Scalp Diseases, from a common blotch or eruption to the worst Scrofula, are cured by it. For Tetter, Salt-rheum, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Goitre or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands, Tumors, and Swellings, it's an unequaled remedy.

Don't think it's like the sarsapa rillas. They claim to be good for the blood in March, April, and May. "Golden Medical Discovery" works equally well at all seasons. And it not only claims to do good—it guarantees it. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

You pay only for the good you get.

INDIAN FIGHTS TO A FINISH.

Rules Under Which One of the Principals Is Sure to Be Knocked Out.

John T. Miller, of Fort Reno, O. T., while seated in a group at the Laclede hotel, pugilism being the topic of conversation, said:

"When you talk about a fight to a finish and knockout blows, both are witnessed in the aboriginal degree of perfection when a fight between two Indian bucks is seen in a ring, the circumstances of which is not a rope, but a string of interested human spectators. It is a fact that among Indians of the same tribe, though they may number thousands, there are few cases of quarrels among them that ever result in murder. This is strange when it is remembered that the Indian is passionate, uncontrolled in his impulses, cruel and ferocious by nature. They have their difficulties and quarrels, however, but arbitration of the old men prevents bloodshed or murder.

"Yet once in a while a fight occurs, and it is a novel sight to witness. One buck challenges another to combat, and, accompanied by their friends to the battle ground, each buck is stripped to the nudity so pleasing in high cultured art schools among the pale faces, and made to confront the other. Between them lies a war club—a smooth, long piece of hard wood, seasoned by years of service and regarded as a sort of mascot because of the blood stains on it received during war.

"The seconds of the surly looking duelists toss up a piece of bark on 'the wet or the dry' principle, when boys long ago chose sides in playing town ball. The winner picks up the club, and his opponent, folding his arms, sturdily plants himself, bending his head. It is the club bearer's privilege to whack his antagonist just as hard as he can and with all the vigorous maliciousness he can command on the back. It is a foul blow to strike above or below the back.

"One blow is struck, and then the man who has endured it picks up the club, and his opponent is subjected to all the force he can command. So the whacking goes on, and almost every blow is a knock down one, until the duelist last knocked down rises to his feet and refuses to accept the club from his opponent. He has had enough and the party breaks up.

"The severity of the punishment inflicted and endured in these duels is marvelous. The club used has a jagged edge, and every blow struck brings blood, making deep cuts and fearful bruises. I have seen two such fights and they are brutal and nauseating in the coolness of their procedure and the appearance of both contestants after victory is won and defeat confessed."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Deliberation at the Table.

Why is it that Americans, who evidently have a keen appreciation of the pleasures of the table, generally rush through their meals in such hot haste? The celerity with which they bolt their food, though less offensive to the epicure than it was fifty years ago, still appalls a foreigner and indicates a lack of discrimination among the dishes set before him. They appear to regard all edibles, salmon and canvasback duck alike with codfish and baked beans, as means only of quieting a barking stomach—lenientum stomachum latrantem—and none of them as substances gifted with rich essences, subtle flavors, that require to be brought out and analyzed.

Not so with our cousin, John Bull. Whatever the quantity of edibles and potables he gorges at his meals he never dispatches any of them, ab ovo ad mala, in a hurry. He sits down to his roast beef or "Southdown" as a warrior would sit down before a fortress, and proceeds calmly and carefully to discuss each slice, as if he were fully sensible of its delicious qualities and profoundly thankful to the gracious providence that thus ministers to his deepest sensual cravings.—Professor William Matthews in Boston Traveller.

A Maine Incident.

A lady cottager in the harbor allowed her young son to go sailing one evening, with the stipulation that he should be home at a certain hour. She herself went out and returned before the time at which she expected her son, who, however, didn't appear. She decided to sit up for him, and grew more and more anxious, till at midnight she was in a fever of suspense, when it occurred to her to look in her son's bedroom, and there he was sound asleep, having returned home before she did. She wanted to wake him up and shake him. Who ever heard of a boy's getting home from a pleasure trip before it was necessary.—Portland (Me.) Transcript.

PURSUING A NOISY PHANTOM.

Experience of a Daring Sailor in Hunting Down a Real Ghost.

A. S. Chatfield was in the United States navy several years and cruised in every sea.

"The experience that left the most lasting impression on me was one I had with ghosts," said he to the reporter. "Now I do not believe in ghosts for one minute, but the experience I had is one I am not able to explain away. There is hardly a day of my life that I do not think of it. We stopped at a Mexican port, and hadn't been there very long until we learned that the natives were much excited over a haunted house that stood off by itself in a lonely part of the town.

"All the brave men in the place had visited the house to hear the ghosts, and the experience was such that no one could be induced to go back a second time. The second mate of our ship and I decided to investigate the ghosts. We firmly believed that some one was slipping into the house and making the strange noises reported as being heard. The mate was a man who knew no fear, and we agreed that we would go prepared to kill the first ghost that made its appearance.

"We prepared for the expedition by cleaning and loading four good revolvers and by providing a dark lantern. In the afternoon we went to the house and examined it carefully for secret entrances. Every foot of floor and wall was examined, and we saw that the doors were all securely bolted on the inside, except the one to which we had a key. Soon after dark we went to the house and made a second examination, and found it as we had left it in the afternoon.

"We then took our seats in the front room, with our face toward an open door leading into another room. The house was quiet as death. The mate held the dark lantern, with the slide on, and we each held revolvers in our hands. After we had been there perhaps half an hour we heard a noise like one makes in slightly pulling a chair nearer a table.

"A moment later the chair in the room which we were facing seemed to be picked up and set down again. Then we heard footsteps, and pretty soon the room resounded with noises. The scant furniture, it seemed, was being thrown pell mell, and the racket became unearthly.

"'Now is our time,' said the mate in a whisper. At that he turned on the dark lantern and sprang into the room. The moment we entered it the noises ceased and it was vacant. More than that, the furniture stood just as we had left it. We examined the doors and windows, and they were as we had left them. The floor, too, was examined, and no opening was there. Before we had finished our examination noises began upstairs and in other rooms.

"A dozen men with heavy boots seemed to be running up and down the stairway. With our dark lantern we ran up stairs and through the several rooms, but could see nothing. Whenever we would enter a room the noises would seem to be in the next room—or all over the house for that matter, except in that one room. To make the story short, we remained in the house until daylight and the noises continued all night.

"We chased from one room to another until we were almost completely exhausted, and not once did we catch sight of any living object. We couldn't have been mistaken in the noises. It couldn't have been imagination, for neither of us was excited or frightened. Those noises were made in the house, but what by is the greatest mystery of my life."—Indianapolis News.

Japs Less Docile Than Chinese.

Whether Sir Edwin Arnold has not given us a just idea of the Japanese people or whether the American atmosphere has demoralized the guileless sons who have come from the "Flowery Kingdom" to the western coast it may be too soon to determine. But the experience of a vinegrower of Napa, Cal., who employed nearly two score Japanese in his orchard has brought with it the conviction that in industry, sobriety and discipline they cannot compete with the Chinese. This man says that his workmen one day refused to work. He discharged them and hired substitutes in their places, but they returned armed with knives and took possession of his house. From this intrenched position they were only ousted by a body of police.—Chicago Tribune.

To Measure the Sea Level.

An apparatus for measuring the mean level of the sea is announced. It is based on the principle that when a liquid wave traverses a capillary tube or a porous partition its amplitude diminishes, and it is retarded in its phases without the mean level of the wave changing. It consists of a glass tube, the lower end communicating by a flexible pipe with a plunger which is lowered beneath the lowest water level. There are two cells in the plunger, the lower being filled with sand and open to the sea, the result being that the column of water in the tube rises and falls very little with the tides, and the mean sea level can be read from a graduated scale.—New York Sun.

A HARD MAN TO SURPRISE.

One of His Own Experiences on Shipboard as Related by Himself.

A party from the village where old Uncle Bill Williams lived camped out a few years ago on the Hudson's bank about a mile above West Point. Their stay was cut short by an incident which was not over welcome. The cadets at the Point had been having a mortar drill and had been firing at the target on the face of Cro' Nest, the mountain that towers half a mile north of the military academy. There was a cessation of the fusillade, and one of the camping party was collecting firewood in the rear of the tents. The unexpected report of a large gun at West Point broke the stillness of the air. Almost immediately following came a whirring sound. Looking up, the camper saw a black object coming straight at his heard from the direction of the Point.

He didn't stop to examine into the nature of the flying mass, but made for the bushes with all speed. He had not gone fifteen feet when the missile struck and buried itself three feet in the earth, just beyond the spot on which he had been standing. By great good luck he had cleared the tents and no one was injured. After much labor the mysterious messenger was dug out of the bank and turned out to be an iron shell, weighing 176 pounds.

Fortunately it was empty. If it had been loaded it would not, in all probability, have been carried home, as it was, for a souvenir of the trip.

With singular unanimity, considering the circumstances, the party that night voted to return home the next day. The reader may have some difficulty in seeing what connection this tale of the camping party has with Uncle Bill Williams. Here it is: The shell was taken home in one of the boats, and was shown to the old man, and its story was told him. The narrator of the tale expected that it would astonish him, but he reckoned without his host.

"Humph!" grunted Uncle Bill, "that ain't much; why, Cap'n Broat an me es had lots o' them things go through our mains'l while passin the P'int. One time we was comin down ther river on ther slop (sloop) with a load o' wood, an when we got down opposite ter Col' Spring the wind guv out. There was a big tide runnin down, and so we kep' movin. The fellers on the P'int was a-firin at their targets on ther water. Some of their shots hit pretty clost to ther targets, an some of 'em didn't. We was lookin at 'em so hard that we didn't see where we was goin, when all of a suddent somethin come kerthrash through the mains'l, an dropped inter ther water on ther tother side o' the slop.

"'Lor, Bill, what was that?' sings out the cap'n.

"'Looks as though it mought be a shell from the P'int, cap'n,' ses I. Just then 'nother shot come through the sail.

"'Look-a-here, Bill,' yells the cap'n, 'we've got ter git out o' this, or there won't be nothin left o' us.'

"'That's so, cap'n,' ses I, 'but what yer goin ter do about it?'

"'Why, there ain't narthin wo kin do, Bill, but sit an cuss.'

"An I kin tell yer we did cuss them West P'int fellers, while they sent shells through our mains'l an jib, an knocked off more'n half our load o' wood. One o' the shots come within er foot o' my head, an its wind knocked me over flat on ther deck."

"Didn't you try to get some explanation from the officials at West Point, Uncle?" inquired the listener.

"Ya-as, I went to ther commandant, but he laughed at me. 'Taint no use tryin to git anything' out o' them fellers."—New York Tribune.

Where Woman's Intuition Counts.

In many branches of the treasury service women have arisen to the proficiency of experts. This is especially true as to the office of the treasurer of the United States, where the most expert, rapid and accurate counters of mutilated currency and detectors of counterfeit money are women. A woman detected the first counterfeit $100 bill of a very dangerous issue. When called upon to explain why she thought it was counterfeit her answer was, "I knew it was."

It took a day or two for the engravers and cashiers to make a detailed explanation, so that bank officials could understand the reason. However, it was discovered that these same cashiers and bank officials had received a good many of the bills, while the woman had detected that they were counterfeit.—Washington Cor. Boston Journal.

Little Danger of Cold When Swimming.

Some object, it is said, to swimming on the ground that it is productive of colds, that it may cause heart failure, and that when indulged in at the seashore there is danger from sharks.

An expert claims that there is little danger of taking cold. Of course there are many weak people whose lungs and heart are in such a condition that they should not venture to swim; but at the same time the neglect to learn in early childhood—the neglect of this eminently hygienic exercise—is probably largely responsible for many flabby hearts and weak lungs.—Boston Herald.

Contents of the Coal Bin.

It is interesting to consider that in your own coal bin you have a store not only of heat for the kitchen range, but also of the aniline dyes, which are the most vivid colors obtainable in chemistry, as well as a stock of remedies that will soothe the nerves and put the family to sleep.—Interview in Washington Star.

A Good-Looking Face

We like to see. Yet Erysipelas disfigures the features and the disease is as dangerous as it is repulsive. It is sometimes called "St. Anthony's Fire," and often ends in sudden death. S. B. Carpenter, Grandville, N. Y., had it in both legs, and was cured by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. This medicine excels all others for the blood.

Douglas Jerrold and the Deserters.

A story connected with Jerrold's short period of naval service may well find a place here. On one occasion as midshipman, having gone ashore with the captain, Jerrold was left for a time in charge of the boat. While the captain was away two of the men asked for permission to go and buy something. Permission was given by their youthful and too good natured officer, who added:

"By the way, you might as well buy me some apples and a few pears."

"All right, sir," said the men, and off they went.

The captain returned, but not the men; search was made for them, but they were not to be found; they had deserted, and Midshipman Jerrold was in sad disgrace. The event made a lasting impression upon him, so deep a one that he declared he could recognize the deserters at any time, as indeed he did. Some thirty years afterward, as he was passing along the Strand, the ex-midshipman was struck by the appearance of a baker's man who was looking into a shop window; he walked up to him, and rapping him sharply on the back, said:

"I say, my friend, don't you think you've been rather a long time about that fruit?"

The deserter was horror struck at being discovered, and could only gasp out, "Lor'! sir, is that you?" when Jerrold went on his way laughing.—Exchange.

Searching for James the Second's Crown.

A romantic story comes from the pretty village of Triel. There, it is said, James II buried his crown and the valuable relics of his family, and for more than forty years all over the neighborhood, from time to time, people have dug for the buried treasure. Nearly half a century ago a mysterious woman appeared at Triel. She bought a house and large estates, and went up and down the village, having no dealings with the inhabitants and arousing great curiosity; but after a time some neighbors made her acquaintance, and learned that she was in search of the crown of James II.

Legend and romance soon took root in the soil upturned by this woman's mysterious diggings on her estates, and rumor finally said that the lady, Mme. Deville, was a daughter of George IV and Queen Caroline, and in proof thereof the fleur de lis, as everybody knew, was on her shoulder. Moreover, in her bedroom was an ancient bed adorned with crowns on escutcheons. Lord Palmerston was said to have visited her.

Finally she died, but the legend did not die with her. The land was sold to a person who had received her confidence, and who continued the quest. This successor is a Parisian shopkeeper. The digging still continues, and still the crown with its priceless stones remains undiscovered.—London Times.

Her Majesty's Goat.

The Welsh Fusiliers had a goat with them at Bunker's hill, and they seem always to have had one since. In 1844, Major Groves says, the then regimental goat died, and to compensate the Twenty-third for their loss her majesty presented the regiment with two of the finest goats from a flock—the gift of the Shah of Persia—in Windsor park, and since that date the queen has continued to supply the Royal Welsh Fusiliers with goats as occasion has required.

"Billy," or "Her Majesty's Goat," as he is always styled, bears between his horns a handsome frontlet—a silver shield, surmounted by the Prince of Wales' plume and motto, upon which is inscribed "The Gift of Her Majesty Queen Victoria to the Royal Welsh Fusiliers. A. D. MDCCCXLVI. Duw. A. Cadwo. Y. Frenhines." Billy always marches at the head of his battalion, alongside of the drum major. The First and Second battalions of the Welsh regiment (formerly the Forty-first Welsh and Sixty-ninth South Lincolnshire) also have goats as "pets."—London Art Journal.

The Arab's Pride in His Horse.

Arabian horses need no praise. Of the many beautiful stories told of the Arabs that given in the well known poem, "Achmid and His Mare," surpasses all. Achmid had a mare of wondrous speed and guarded it with jealous care. A robber stole her, leaped upon her back and shouted to Achmid to catch her if he could. Achmid and his tribe mounted and went in hot pursuit. Suddenly the thought came to him, "If I overtake my mare she is then outrun; she will lose her fame." Shouting to the robber, "Quick, pinch her ear!" he revealed the secret sign his darling knew so well. Achmid lost his mare, as he knew he would, but her glory was secure.

I knew that if her ear be nipped
The darling prize could never be outstripped.

Feminine Humor.

The people who have sometimes uttered the very unsafe generalization that "women have no sense of humor" must be unacquainted with the genuine American girl, whose gift for a sort of humor which almost seems to be the peculiar property of this country—comical comparisons and odd exaggerations—is beyond doubt very great. A certain young New York girl of eighteen is well known to her friends to possess this sense of humor. Of a particularly haughty and repellent woman she remarked, "She steps as if the ground were not good enough for her to walk on; and, therefore, she always wears rubbers!"—Youth's Companion.

Plumb Believes in Local Newspapers.

Senator Plumb, of Kansas, subscribes for every paper published in that State. He also takes all the leading New York papers, several from Chicago, one from Philadelphia and other large cities. In speaking of newspapers the senator says:

I believe in the local newspapers. They are the leaders the makers of public sentiment. They are nearer to the people than any other papers. Their editors mingle with the people, and consciously or unconsciously reflect the views of their readers.

By my private letters from all parts of the State, and by reading the local papers, I can tell just what the people of Kansas are thinking and talking about. I can feel the pulse of the people and take their temerature. I am amazed, too, at the excellence of our county papers. The majority of them are carefully and ably edited. They not only print the news of their neighborhood, but have opinions which I find it worth my while to read and reflect upon. I get no better return for any of the money which I spend than for that which I pay out for the local newspapers of my State.

Queer world! Queer people! Here are men and women by thousands sufferingfrom all sorts of diseases, bearing all manners of pains, spending their all on physicians and "getting no better, but rather worse," when right at hand there's a remedy which says it can help them because it's helped thousands like them. "Another patent-medicine advertisement," you say. Yes—but not of the ordinary sort. The medicine is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and it's different from the ordinary nostrums in this—

It does what it claims to do, or it costs you nothing!

The way is this: You pay your druggist $1.00 for a bottle. You read the directions, and you follow them. You get better, or you don't. If you do, you buy another bottle, and perhaps another. If you don't get better, you get your money back. And the queer thing is that so many people are willing to be sick when the remedy's so near at hand.

A STRANGE STORY.

That many of you will laugh at its probability I do not doubt. However, we laugh most at that which we do not understand and cannot explain.

I was not as a boy particularly different from other boys my age. Perhaps I was more fond of books and reading than the average, but that I inherited from both parents, and I am afraid that I was not at all particular about the quality, either—dime novels Scott, ancient history or Smollett—everything that came in my way.

One thing was a great source of trouble to me as I grew older, and has remained a great mystery until this day. It was this: I was often awoke out of sound sleep by somebody speaking my name. At first it frightened me, and later I would spring out of bed, and, striking a light, search everywhere, but nothing could be seen. Then I tried locking my door, but it made no difference; the voice or voices, whatever they might be, were still there.

I told my father, but he only laughed, and advised me to see a doctor.

And now the voices, if anything, became more frequent, until they came to be an old story, and I was 19 years of age when the events I am about to tell you of took place.

We lived in the college town of C—and, being well-to-do people, moved in the best society of the place; for, you know that, no matter how small a place may be, it has its grades of society, and there is always "the best." Father had been a professor, but ill health obliged him to give up teaching; and with a fair income, in a congenial neighborhood, his last days seemed to be pleasant ones. It was a great source of grief to him that his only son would not enter college. But on this point I was obstinate, and finding that I was so opposed to a college life, he—bless his heart!—finally gave in, and I entered the counting room of a wholesale house in the city.

And sister Nellie—she was not a beauty as we judge of beauty; but she was bright, lively and happy—like sunshine wherever she went. Every face brightened when she came near: old and young had only words of praise for "Miss Nellie."

She was a great favorite with the college boys, and many a quarrel did they have on her account. Yet she showed no preference for any. When I joked her about them she would laugh, and, putting her arms about my neck, say: "You dear old brother, you are worth more than the whole lot!"

Nellie, darling Nellie, how I loved her! And she—well, nobody ever had such a brother and no lover found favor in her eyes when "brother Will" was around.

It was in 1861. Fort Sumter had been fired upon and taken, South Carolina had decided to leave the Union, and war was declared. Everybody was full of excitement and I among the rest. I begged my father to let me enlist, for, not being of age, I could not without his consent; but he refused though his eyes flashed as he read the papers, and in his impatience longed to be young again. He could not give his only son.

I remember so well when he placed his hand on my shoulder, and, pointing through the open door where my mother sat reading, shook his head and left me.

But those days—who of us can ever forget them! The spring and summer passed by, and those who had said that the war would be over in a few months began to lose confidence in their own predictions, and as winter came on they, with the rest of us accepted the sad fact that it was to be a long, hard struggle. Both sides were brave and determined.

Nellie was very enthusiastic and very patriotic; she sympathized with me in desire to fight for my country; and yet, after one of those long talks to cheer me up, she would—woman like—spoil it all by putting her arms about me, and exclaiming, "No, no, brother Will; we can't let you go."

How busy she was in those days! doing everything for the comfort of those who were fighting, and cheering those who were left behind. Many were the blessings that were called down upon her for her words of comfort and her other acts of a more substantial nature.

One day in December I was sitting in my office at work, or, rather, I should have been at work but a feeling of uneasiness possessed me without any apparent cause, and I had laid down my pen and was looking out of the window, watching the people pass and thinking of nothing in particular. I did not know what was the matter with me; I only felt uneasy. Suddenly I heard a voice at my side speak as those voices never had before: "Willie! Willie!"

I sprang from my seat so thoroughly frightened that the other clerks noticed it, and fearing I was going to faint, came to my assistance.

Did any of them speak to me?

No.

Did they hear any one call my name?

No.

It was nearly 6 o'clock, and knowing that I could do no more work that day, I put on my hat and coat and went home. I cannot tell you how I felt, I wish words could express it, but as I neared home I knew something had happened. I went in. Everything seemed as usual. Father sat in his library, and nodded as I passed by, and mother kissed me as she always did when I came home at night.

"Where's Nellie!" I asked.

"She went down to Mrs. Brown's, at the further end of the town, this afternoon. You know her husband is in the hospital at Washington, and she is going to him. So Nellie went to see if she could be of help. Still, she has been gone a long while, and it is time she was back.

Six o'clock and dark, yet no Nellie. I was getting more worried than I wanted to own, even to myself, and jumping into the sleigh, I drove to Mrs. Brown's, to find that Nellie had left there long before dark. Then, one after another, I visited all the places I knew she would be likely to call at; but at every one I met the same reply; "She has not been here."

By this time the rest of the family were as frightened as I, and summoning assistance, we began to scour the country on the outskirts of the town. Being near a large city, the roads were frequented by hard characters, and we feared—what we feared we did not dare to speak aloud.

We searched for hours, but without any trace or clew, and most of the party had decided to wait until daylight before continuing the search. I, too, had turned back, when one of those voices, now so familiar, spoke my name. I waited. "Turn to the left. By the big oak you will find Nellie." You may not believe it. No matter. I had no thought of hesitating—my faith was sure—and turning my horse, I fairly flew over the snow. It was only a short way, and I was at the oak. I sprang out of the sleigh and flashed my light here and there, then gave one cry, "Nellie!" and knew no more.

* * * * * * *

When I came out of my father's house again the snow had disappeared, the trees were putting forth their tiny leaves and the brave little crocus was in full bloom. Winter had retired in favor of spring. Most of the time was a blank to me. From the moment I saw Nellie's upturned face under the old oak I knew nothing until, weeks after, I found myself in my room, with mother bending over me.

When I was able to bear it, they told me all there was to tell. Nellie had been found lying in the snow, dead. There were tracks of a sleigh, but so far as they were able to judge, there was no struggle of any kind. Where her head lay there was a large stone, and a mark on her forehead made them theorize that perhaps she fell from the sleigh and came to her death through its means. But why was she there, and who was with her? Detectives had failed to find any clew. The country was in such a state of excitement all the time, that the occurrence was forgotten sooner than it might have been, except by the heart-broken family and immediate friends.

Yes—one other did not forget it. He who had caused her death could not forget it. All the theories in the world could not shake my belief that she had been murdered—but by whom? My life should be given to find out. I grew better, but the great shock had taken all the ambition and aim of my life out of me. Work I could not. Even if I did busy my hand with this thing or that, my mind was not with it; it simply used up time.

Father and mother, though they had their own heavy grief to bear, sorrowed still more to see me in such a state. And I—my God how I suffered!

At length I could stand it no longer. The President was calling for more troops—here was a chance of relief. I went to my father and told him it was my only hope—I must get away from myself or die. I can see him now, as he sat in his study, his face buried in his hands, struggling against love and desire. At length, clasping my hands, he placed the other on my head, and said: "William, it is for the best—go, and may God protect you!"

I will pass over the intervening days, for though I had my desire, and all thought it was for the best, the parting was no less hard. I obtained an officer's commission, and went out with the home regiment. In the hardships and the excitement of army life I grew away from my old self and grief, and became a man.

* * * * * * *

It had been a day of heavy fighting and many of our brave men lay dead and dying on the field. My regiment had been in the thickest of it, and after it was all over I went forth to look after my men and to render such assistance as I could or that might be needed. I was wandering about in the vicinity where we had been fighting, when one of those "voices" that still haunted me, but no longer gave me any uneasiness, said: "Willie!" I waited. "Turn to your left. Remember Nellie!" Perhaps you can imagine how this startled me; not the sound of the "voice"—that was an old story—but those words, "Remember Nellie!" Remember her! I never forgot her or her sad fate. Sleeping or waking I seemed to see her upturned face as it lay there on the snow; but the "voice" said, "Remember Nellie." I turned and walked on mechanically. I knew I was being led for some purpose, and soon the "voice" said, "He is here." Who was here?

I looked down and there lay a young man in an officer's uniform; he had a familiar look but my memory refused to place him. Suddenly, as by a great effort, it flashed across my brain that he was one of the students at college, and a great admirer of Nellie's. He was of Spanish birth, and Nellie often said she was fairly afraid of him.

And there he lay cold and lifeless. But why had I been led here? I stooped down, and saw that one hand had drawn a small leather case half out of his pocket. I loosened it and opened the case. Inside I found his name and a few papers, then a picture. I gasped, and almost fell. It was Nellie's, and fastened to it was a lock of hair. Then it flashed across my mind, as thoughts will, without any apparent reason, there lay Nellie's murderer. I asked the question, in my mind, and, turning my face upward, I waited for an answer. It was only a few seconds—it seemed like an age; then a "voice" close to my ear whispered "Yes."

They tell me that I was picked up insensible, and many were the questions poured in upon me by my comrades. What excuse I gave or what story I told them I have forgotten. Had I told the truth they would have thought as you do now, that my brain was disordered; and so I have kept the story to myself, telling only my own family.

How he came to do it I never knew, but in my own mind there was never a doubt that he did not commit the deed. You will say a court of law would never take such evidence. They will never have the chance. I found that he left college the day after Nellie was found and enlisted. His comrades say he was sober and morose, but brave and daring as a very devil, and that he met his death as the result.

To me there was a reason for all this—he was a haunted man. I am of the belief that he suffered as only one with a load of guilt to bear can suffer.

My story is told, and I feel, as I said in the beginning, and you think it is only the imagining of a disordered brain. Never mind—call it what you will—call it as I do, "Another Strange Story."—Frank Leslie's.

The Secret of Success.

Charles H. Buss druggist, believes that the secret of success is perseverance. Therefore he persists in keeping the finest line of perfumeries, toilet articles, cosmetics, drugs and chemicals on the market. He especially invites all persons who have palpitation, short breath, weak or hungry spells, pain in side or shoulder, oppression, nightmare, dry cough, smothering, dropsy or heart disease to try Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, berore it is too late. It has the largest sale of any similar remedy. Fine book of testimonials free. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is unsurpassed for sleeplessness, headache, fits, etc., and it contains no opiates.

A vigorous appeal from "W. H. B." appears in the Transcript, calling for the use of covered patrol wagons on the ground that the unfortunate erring men and women should not be subjected to the curious stare of every person on the streets. The innocent, also, he adds, are liable to similar exposure to the desertion of thoughtless crowds.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town says: Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50c, a bottle, at F. E. Lovell's Drug Store.

The fishermen of San Diego have utilized electricity in their war upon the fish. Incandescent electric lights are lowered into the water at night, and a large net is lowered below them. The fish are attracted by the light and are plainly visible. When sufficiently numerous the nets are hauled up. The catches are enormous.

Be Careful!

No matter what disease you may have. Be sure that the medicine you take is reliable. Such a medicine you will always find Sulphur Bitters. They are not a cheap rum drink, but are made of the choicest roots and herbs to be found in the vegetable kingdom.—Daily Argus,

A farmer at Norwich, Kan., was robbed of his entire wheat crop one night after it had been cut and stacked. The thief had it threshed at night and sold the grain for $1000, with which he decamped. The farmer's house is a long distance from his farm.

It Is Good Work to Give Health.

The only remedy for blood disorders is one that will expel the germs of disease, and make the blood pure and rich. That is best effected by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., a medicine of great value in the treatment of all blood disorders and diseases of the Kidneys. It tones the system and helps to do good work.

Budgely says the most difficult part of a drinking song is the "refrain."

A Texas Prodigy.

Mr. G. D. Hoffman, of Woodland, Tex., has a calf-sheep. Exactly half of the calf is covered with wool running along the back bone and on the under side half way. Half of the tail is wool, and the two right feet are like a sheep's. The hide feels like a sheep on one side, the other like a calf; eyes are blue. You may pull the wool off its side and get wool from a sheep and you cannot detect the difference.

The side on which the wool is appears a great deal lighter in color than the other. Its mother is a very large cow, while the freak is tolerably diminutive.—Cor. St. Louis Republic.

She Knew Better.

Mrs. Jaysmith (to grocer) — Ten pounds of sugar.

Grocer (as customer walks out)—I beg your pardon, but you didn't pay for that sugar.

Mrs. Jaysmith—Of course not. Sugar's free now. I read the papers, I do, and you can't fool me.—New York Epoch.

Barrack Room Amenities.

Corporal (to recruit)—The fellow is a regular scarecrow—filthy to excess, uncombed, not a button to his coat. Why, man, you nearly look the image of a regular civilian!—Feld und Lager.

Stolen Dogs in Paris.

Stolen dogs that are to be sold to dealers are first rendered unrecognizable. If the animal has long hair, he is clipped; if he is black and white, the stealer blackens him all over with a dye mixture that holds its color for several weeks. Short haired dogs have their ears and tails cut. The dealers who sell these dogs may be frequently seen in the Champs Elysees, the Bois de Boulogne or in the public gardens, leading five or six animals at a time. Other dealers make their trades at the dog markets, of which there are two—on Sunday afternoons at the horse market on the Boulevard Port Royal, and on Tuesdays at the bird market on the Quai aux Fleurs. The dealers pay a tax of three cents for each place occupied by a dog.—Paris Cor. New York Epoch.

Florida's Aquatic Scavengers.

The city of Jacksonville protects catfish in the river as scavengers. It is a five dollar fine to catch one of them, and the fish seem to know it. The river is full of them, and they vary in size from a baby to a 200 pound man.—Atlanta Constitution.

No Reason for Crooked Teeth.

A short time ago there was no method for straightening the teeth, but now there's no reason for people to have crooked teeth. We can take a person, the teeth of whose lower jaw protrude beyond those of the upper, and make them fit nicely. In fact a beautiful girl can be made out of a fright by a good dentist. Cases have been known where people died from a dead tooth which caused an abscess and resulted in blood poisoning. But this is almost impossible today, if a good operator is seen in time.—Interview in Philadelphia Record.

Pity He Couldn't Have It.

"If I had a million dollars," said a man who was likely to get it the other day, "I should spend it. I had rather live rich and die poor than live poor and die rich."—Boston Traveller.

The Dog's Name.

"What is your dog's name?" asked a man who was waiting at the postoffice, of a young fellow with a particularly bright dog.

"Ask him," answered the young fellow coolly.

"You don't seem to understand, sir. I asked you what was your dog's name?"

And I answered "Ask him."

"You are an impertinent snob," said the older man, brandishing his umbrella.

"My dear sir, the dog

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

ABOUT COUNTY TREASURER.

The time has come for a new County Treasurer. We say this without any disrespect to the present incumbent, or questioning for a moment his integrity or ability, but because we see on every hand indications of a new "County Ring," which is not for the interests of the County. Mr. Hayden is of necessity a part of it. Break it with a new nomination and a better state of affairs is sure to result.—Arlington Advocate.

That is sound doctrine. The Republican party cannot afford to foster rings of any sort, much less a "County Ring," which is the most pernicious and dangerous shape assumed by them. On this ground alone hundreds of prominent Republicans in Middlesex county believe that a change in the office of County Treasurer should be made this fall, but lack the courage of their convictions. They are afraid to speak out lest somebody should be offended.

Should the convention, in obedience to a popular wish, select another candidate the present incumbent would have no cause to complain. He has held the position six years, which is a longer period than he had any right to expect to fill it. Even were he the model officer that his "workers" claim him to be that fact should have no weight in favor of giving him a life lease of the place. Who is Mr. Hayden, or what has he ever done for the party to entitle him to such an unusual share of public patronage?

For the reasons herein given, and many others which may be made public before the day of the County convention, it is our candid judgment that Treasurer Hayden should be succeeded by some other man this fall, and we hold this opinion while at the same time we claim to be his friend.

JEFTS FOR COUNCILLOR.

It will be quite safe to bank on Woburn giving her Councillor delegation to Brother Jefts of Hudson. He is the favorite of this city by a large majority as between him and Loring of Melrose.

Only a very few men did anything for Loring here. His name didn't appear to take with Woburn Republicans. They prefered Brother Jefts, although it must be admitted there was considerable of "Hopkins's choice" in the matter.

But the Hudson aspirant for the Councillorship is morally sure of the Woburn delegation. It looks as though he was morally sure too of getting a big majority of the votes of the convention.

STATE COMMITTEE.

A good many Republicans in this State are decidedly of the opinion that if the State Central Committee was a stronger one intellectually and a better one success at the polls would not be so doubtful as it is.

The Republican party may truly attribute its gradual going down hill for the last few years to putting cheap men in charge.

ALLEN, SURE.

The Republican caucuses held since the last issue of the JOURNAL have selected delegates to the State convention which makes Allen's election sure.

Last Tuesday evening the Republicans of Somerville held caucuses and gave Allen the entire delegation of 20 members. Springfield too gave Allen her 49 delegates, and other places of less population have followed suit.

It is Allen, sure!

STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican State Convention will be held on Wednesday, September 16th.

Its President and Committees were selected weeks ago by the State Committee, and everything is cut and dried for business.

Allen will undoubtedly be the Republican nominee for Governor.

— That alleged Italian shooting affair was the biggest newspaper fake out of jail. It was another case of "great cry and little wool," and so Judge Johnson threw the complaint out of Court and ought to have served the complainant in the same fashion.

— Dr. Sherman H. Sanborn, dentist, left here last Wednesday for a fishing and hunting trip in Northern Maine. His objective point was Mt. Kineo, an island in Moosehead Lake, a fashionable summer and autumn resort, while the forests and streams of the main land are a paradise for sportsmen with gun and rod.

— There was held a very pleasant wedding anniversary at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. F. B. K. Marter, Montvale, last Saturday avening, which was attended by a large number of their friends. It was their 20th anniversary. Many beautiful presents were made; there was spread an elegant repast; and a delightful evening was spent.

— Pupils of the High School are requested to prepare their courses before the opening of the school. The Principal can be found at the office of the Superintendent of Schools during afternoons and evenings of this week from 3 till 5.30, and from 7.30 till 9.30, where he will be glad to consult with parents and pupils regarding the work of the coming school-year.

— Last week Thursday Mr. J. J. Grothe met with a serious accident at his wagon factory on Everett street. He fell while getting some iron from a rack and cut a gash some five inches long on his arm and severed some of the principal muscles. He was attended by Doctors Harlow and Blake, by whose orders Mr. Grothe was taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital.

— Miss Mary D. Prior and Clara L. Nichols of Class '90 and '91, W. H. School, and Edith Hanson and Florence Munroe, former graduates, left their homes in this city last Wednesday to take up their studies at Wellesley College. They are among the brightest and most talented of our High School's small army of graduates, and our prediction is that they will make their mark in life.

— Lots of bright young Woburn people have entered Burdett's great Boston Business College for a course of thorough business training. Among them are: Irving R. Bancroft, Elliott F. Trull, Patrick F. Carney, Edmund E. Walsh, Chester L. Fish, and Miss Mabel T. Newton. These expect to enter next month: Wilbur E. Felch, Walter Dodge, George Ellard. Burdett's carries off the palm.

— Mrs. P. A. Bancroft writes the JOURNAL from George's Mills, N. H.: "We have a fine view of Sunapee Mountain and Lake from the Stow Lake House which brings to mind the passage, 'as the mountains round about Jerusalem.' But with this panorama of beauty spread out before me I am not quite satisfied without the WOBURN JOURNAL. We are today at Sunapee Lake which is very beautiful."

— C. Vey Holman, Esq., proprietor and publisher of the City Press, and Mrs. Holman, with a large party of ladies and gentlemen from Maine, Massachusetts and Minnesota, were registered at Moosehead Inn, Moosehead Lake, and will be the guests of Mr. Harry P. Ross of Bangor, Me., said to be one of the heaviest lumber operators in that State, at his fine estate at the head of the Lake this week.

— Lovers of A1 horseflesh have been getting just what they wanted at big bargains at the stables Mr. Charles Cummings, No. 35 Cambridge street. The last carload of roadsters and work horses which he brought from Canada 10 days ago "take the cake" for size, color, style of carriage, fleetness of foot, and substantial working qualities. Everyone says they are a neat lot, and we have been told that they are going with a rush. Prices are away down.

— Poor Hannah Dillon died at East Cambridge last Saturday of heart disease. She was about 24 years old, a bright, intelligent girl who with proper breeding would have made a good woman and become a credit to her sex. As it was, her life was a wreck. It is to be hoped the unfortunate girl will be happier where she has gone than she was here—she can't be much worse off. We do not envy the feelings of those who were said to be the authors of poor Hannah Dillon's ruin.

— The JOURNAL'S German Orchestra put in its first post-vacation visit here on last Wednesday. We felt a little regretful because our reportorie contained so few new musical productions, our only excuse for which being that the season at the Beaches has been a very busy one and time for making additions to our collection too limited to do but very little at it. Still the new pieces presented were from the best operas, and appeared to please musically inclined people on the streets last Wednesday.

— In its issue of Aug. 15, The Republic of Boston contained an interesting historical outline and description of the famous Richelieu River of Canada and country adjacent thereto from the pen of one of Woburn's "ready writers," Miss J. Gertrude Menard. The history of the region described by the lady's pen is filled with romance, while its traditions are more interesting than almost anything else found elsewhere in any part of North America. Miss Menard is a graceful writer and her descriptions are fine.

— Mr. James McDonald, whose professional card is published in this paper this week, is one of the most skilful piano tuners and regulators in this section of the State. Years ago he acquired a thorough knowledge of the piano and his long experience as tuner and regulator has placed him at the head of the profession. Mr. McDonald does the tuning for all the first families in this city and vicinity. They all like and speak highly of his work. His terms are reasonable; and his patronage is deservedly large.

— Mr. Edward L. Shaw is very ill of heart trouble at his summer home at Swampscott. Dr. John M. Harlow of this city was summoned last Saturday by Mr. Shaw's family to proceed with all possible haste to Swampscott to attend the sick man and has attended him closely ever since. Mr. Shaw's condition was regarded as critical especially as there were symptoms of pneumonia. Dr. Harlow brought him safely through a severe illness of pneumonia two years ago, and it is hoped he will do as well by his patient this time.

— After an intermittent rainstorm of a fortnight's duration, a portion of which period it poured down like great guns, especially so on Saturday, Sunday and Monday last, night and day, the weather cleared away at sunset on Monday evening and on Tuesday the weather was nice, bracing and sunny. There was nothing very intermittent about the rain on Labor Day; contrariwise, the downpoor was constant and big. It spoiled all the fun planned for that holiday and nothing worth mentioning was done here in the way of a celebration.

— Mr. Clifford Sprunt has a professional card in this number of the JOURNAL to which we call particular attention. It reads all right as a single glance of the eye will show. From what we have heard respecting this young gentleman's accomplishments on the violin we have no hesitation in recommending him to the people of this city as an instructor on that instrument and the viola. He is unquestionably au fait in the business. You will see, too, that Mr. Sprunt furnishes the best kind of an orchestra for parties, dances, etc., on liberal terms. See his card.

— By reference to our business columns it will be observed that on next Friday, Sept. 18, there is to be a grand excursion by special train over the So. Div. (Boston & Lowell) of the B. & M. and Concord & Montreal Railroad, via Nashua, Concord and Wiers, which will be the most delightful of the famous autumn excursions of the Boston & Maine Railroad Company. Just read the advertisement carefully from start to finish and see what a splendid trip the Company offer for such a small amount of money. The people who do not take in this excursion will lose a big thing.

— "The above [in JOURNAL] is from our old employer, Geo. A. Hobbs, whom we served nearly thirty years ago. It is very likely that outself and a running mate in the old office frequently made life a burden to our friend, but we meant no harm, and we are often grateful to him for teaching us the newspaper business in a thorough and correct manner. And we appreciate the kind words above written by one who has not forgotten us after such a long lapse of years. Here's to memories of the olden time, friend Hobbs." —Juniata, (Neb.) Herald. Our Pupil may rest assured that the Old Preceptor never forgets any of the graduates of The Republic the memory of whom is worty of preservation—as "Ike's" certainly is.

— Rev. E. P. Telford, the London Evangelist, who is to conduct a series of meetings at the M. E. Church will commence his work next Sunday evening, Sept. 13, at 7 o'clock. He is a man of wonderful power and has had remarkable success. In England and America many thousands have been brought into new life through his ministry. In a meeting of less than four weeks 1500 men and women testified their conversion and decision for Christ. He has labored for such well-known ministers as Dr. J. W. Hamilton of Boston, Dr. Cleveland of Philadelphia, and D. L. Moody of Chicago. Gospel Hymns No. 5 will be used. Fine Congregational singing will be led by chorus choir at each service. At each service Mrs. Telford will sing an appropriate solo. The public are cordially invited.—*

— The Woburn Red men and Daughters of Pocahontas celebrated Labor Day in fine style with the Stoneham tribes at Sprague's Grove, Spot Pond, Stoneham, where they held a big Powwow and Corn Dance to the unbounded delight and gratification of these innocent children of the forest. In accordance with the immemorial customs of the aborigines, besides dancing there were athletic games, races, jumping, etc., in which young and old heartily participated, and which afforded rare sport for all. But what pleased us the best of anything was the fact that a young Indian maiden, the fair Fannie Menchin of Woburn, carried off the first prize for fleetness of foot and in doing so distanced all competitors. The prize was a silver napkin ring appropriately inscribed, and it was borne in triumph to the Lodge of the Pocahontas in this city. It was a beautiful trophy fairly won.

— Mr. B. A. Tripp, senior member of B. A. & C. E. Tripp, undertakers in this city, and Mrs. Tripp expect to start on next Tuesday, Sept. 15, for a visit of six weeks or so among relatives and friends in the West. They will tarry a short time at Niagara Falls when en route for Chicago to see the sights and perhaps take in other places of interest along the way. At Chicago they will make a considerable stop with Mrs. Tripp's brother, who is a gentleman at the head of musical circles in that city, and from there they will go to Kansas City, and where Mr. William Tripp, a brother of Mr. B. A., lives and is engaged in street railroad business. Their next objective point will be Sedalia, Mo., where Mr. Tripp's brother John resides; and from there parts of Nebraska will be visited and such points of interest as the couple may take a fancy to see. Mr. and Mrs. Tripp have the best wishes of the JOURNAL for health and pleasure while away and a safe return to their Woburn home.

— We are in receipt of a copy of the Hollis (N. H.) Times which contains a full report of the reunion of the Tenney Family which was held in that village on August 12-17 last and was numerously attended. From all accounts it was a great merry-making, a gay and festive occasion, one of the principal figures of which was our highly esteemed friend Ralph A. Tenney, a prominent Chicago merchant, and the owner of the old, original Tenney homestead at Hollis. He was Chairman of the reunion. The homestead has been in the family since 1747. The Tenneys first settled at Rowley, Mass., and emigrated from there to New Hampshire. John S. Tenney, once Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, was a native of Rowley and a member of the family whose representatives held this reunion. If our friend Ralph A. had brought along this copy of the Times in person, as we confidently expected he would, our pleasure would have been greatly enhanced. But he passed us by on the other side. We saw another familiar name in the list of those who celebrated, viz: Henry G. Little of Grinnell, Iowa.

— Col. Edward Simonds, Probation Officer at the Fourth District Court, General Overseer of things in and around Municipal Building, etc., kindly took a representative of the JOURNAL through what a certain reporter of a Boston paper pompously alludes to as City Hall last Tuesday and showed him the improvements therein recently made. They were many and great. From the Mayor's Room clean down through the scale, or gamut, footprints of the hand of improvement were easily discoverable with the naked eye. Coats of paint of almost endless hues were run afoul of on every side. Carpets rich in color and texture had taken the place of rags. Cherry-stained furniture reflected the fine physiognomies of the reporter and his chaparone. Order rained, and good taste prevailed in the arrangements of everything. Our City Fathers have luxurious quarters, and the servants of the city are splendidly housed. Handing the reporter a moderate sized apple which he had "mellered" to the last degree by pounding it on the door-jamb and had carried in his pocket all the season apparently, our courteous conductor shook us cordially by the hand, wished us "many happy returns of the same," and bid us goodbye for the present.

— We can tell the Arlington Advocate something about the first fire engine West Cambridge ever had, anent which inquiries were made through the columns of that paper some years ago. The first engine was built by Thayer of Roxbury and called the Good Intent. It wasn't much bigger than a washtub and not much more effective at a fire. After being in use several years it was "given its time" and stored away in a shed belonging to the Tufts Tavern on what was then called High street. There was an efficient Fire Company in those days whose services were appreciated by the citizens of the town. One night several years prior to 1838 some of the members of the Fire Company stealthily effected an entrance into the shed where Good Intent had stood so long inactive and silently and speedily proceeded to remove the ancient machine to the street. It was not however allowed to stand there long. A score of stalwart hands seized the ropes; a whispered "go it, boys" was given; and in less than 30 minutes thereafter the little fire-fighter of former days ingloriously sank to the bottom of Spy Pond where it has remained unto this day—close on to 60 years. The successor of Good Intent was also a Roxbury built machine. It was a great improvement on its predecessor and proudly bore the name of Eureka. But it was a modest affair compared to the "tubs" of later make and especially to the steam engine of these modern times. One, at least of the "b'hoys" who "run with the Mash-een" Good Intent and helped to sink her in Spy Pond is still hale and hearty. The fate of their first fire engine has always remained a mystery to the people of Arlington, and this is the first time the story of its fate has ever been publicly told.

Reunion of the 39th Regt.

Last Monday, notwithstanding the mighty rain storm that prevailed nearly all day, the 39th Massachusetts Regiment of Volunteers held their annual reunion at Lynnfield and enjoyed it as much as ever they did in their lives. The remnants of the Regiment were out in full force, as they usually are, and only a few failed to answer to roll-call. It may be stated here that only three members have died since the last reunion, one of whom was Converse Mead of Company K, Woburn.

The reunion of 1890 was held in this city and a grand gathering it was. Six of the Companies, of which Co. K is one, were town Companies—Somerville, Medford, Natick, Quincy, Woburn, etc.—each of which takes turns in entertaining the Veterans of the old organization. No Company was raised at Lynnfield, but the Regiment was encamped there for a month in the summer of 1862 before leaving for the front, and it was in honor of the old camp-ground and the claim which it has as such to recognition from "the boys" that the reunion was held in that quiet rural place this year.

The Veterans were cordially received by the good people of Lynnfield by whom everything was done to make them comfortable and happy. The day was most agreeably spent. A grand good dinner was no unimportant feature of the reunion, and a patriotic address by the old Chaplain of the Regiment, speech-making, songs, stories, and cordial greetings of comrades, helped to fill in the time in the most pleasant manner. The Chaplain had not seen many of his old army comrades since the Regiment was mustered out of service and was a stranger to the most of them. He soon got to know them.

Between the showers the Vets sallied out to find landmarks of their camp which stood there for a month or more 29 years ago. After donning their "thinking-caps" and getting "the lay of the land" many things once familiar as a part of the camp-grounds were discovered and the memories they conjured up were rehearsed inside with the pipe.

Company K went over from here in good force. Nearly all of the members were on the ground and everybody had the best kind of a time.

The names of the members of Co. K (Woburn) who attended the reunion were: Capt. Luke R. Tidd, John Gilcreast, George E. Fowle, Abijah Thompson, Andrew R. Linscott, M. B. Baldwin, Albert P. Barrett, Charles K. Conn, W. H. LeBaron, George W. Linscott, Timothy Mahoney, Rufus F. Poole, Albert H. Richardson, Charles H. Johnson, C. H. Colegate, Edward Hoskins, J. Fred Leslie, Albert L. Richardson, William McDevitt, John H. Sheehan.

Labor Day.

Picnics and picnics; dances and dances; athletic games; indoors and outdoor amusements galore, et cetera, et cetera, had been planned by the people of this city for Labor Day, but on account of the inclemency of the weather they all came to naught, or next to it. The rain poured nearly all day in torrents and a poorer look for fun and things was hardly ever presented to anxious men and women. A few people were seen in the streets and some of them resembled more closely wet hens than human beings.

Although there was no rum sold here (in a horn!) groups of men stood about the entrances of a good many of the saloons all day, and a few got quite "over the bay" on the air that those places emitted.

In the afternoon the Hibernians held a picnic in the Rink and a great crowd gathered thereat. Dancing was the principal amusement, although one man at least managed to get considerable fun out of using a knife on a fellow-picnicker. This affair broke up about 9 o'clock in the evening.

Harris's Specialty Company gave a fine entertainment at Lyceum Hall which was attended by a large crowd of people. The show was pronounced of the best quality.

The Indian tribes of this city went on the war-path to Spot Pond in Stoneham in full force. The hardy aborigines of this country are never turned aside from their purpose by a summer rain however tough it may be, nor were they last Monday. One would have thought such to be the case if he could only have listened to the blood-curdling war-hoops that made the primeval forests of Sprague's Grove tremble and the welkin ring all the afternoon.

The Veterans of Co. K, 39th Regt. went over to Lynnfield to enjoy a Regimental reunion and view the ground on which they camped for a month before going to the front just 29 years ago. About 20 went over. [See account of it elsewhere].

The Carpenters' Union had lotted on parading in Boston with other labor organizations, but alas the rain! How it did step into and upset their plans! None went.

And thus Labor Day was spent by Woburn people.

Golden Wedding.

A very pleasant gathering occurred at Waverly, Mass., on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 1891, the occasion being the 50th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. William Jewett of Waverly. About 50 of their relatives, with numerous friends and neighbors, spent a very enjoyable season at their home on White street where was held a reception, after which a bountiful collation was served by Caterer Dill.

Among those present were five sisters of Mrs. Jewett (Mrs. Jewett making the sixth), all accompanied by their husbands with one exception. There were present from Woburn: Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Wright, Mr. and Mrs. Abijah Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Thompson, Rev. and Mrs. Leander Thompson, Mr. T Benton Tidd and family, Mrs. Emma T. Dow and family, Mr. C. M. Strout and family, Mr. C. Willard Smith and family. From other places were: Mr. and Mrs. Luther Cram of South Lyndboro, Mrs. D. R. Marshall and her son Elmer D. from Nashua, N. H., Miss Fannie Lovering of Georgetown, Mass., and others.

Brief congratulatory remarks were made by Mr. E. E. Thompson who acted as master of ceremonies; Rev. Daniel Butler, D. D., Rev. Leander Thompson, Luther Cram, Esq., and Mr. Abijah Thompson; also a letter was received and read from C. W. Hackett, Esq., of St. Paul, Minn., the only brother of Mrs. Jewett living, expressing his great interest in the occasion and regrets at not being able to attend.

After the collation and speech making music was provided, both vocal and instrumental, consisting of solos, duetts, quartetts, and choruses; also several pieces very pleasantly rendered by the children present.

The worthy couple were the recipients of many valuable gifts both useful and ornamental. Mr. Jewett was born in Groton, Mass., and is 76 years of age. Mrs. Jewett was born in Lyndboro, N. H., and is 75 years of age. There are few people of fifty years of married life who are as active in all good work as Mr. and Mrs. Jewett.

And may they live to attend the Golden Wedding of the remaining four sisters and one brother (the oldest sister, Mrs. Wright, having celebrated her golden wedding last June) is the sincere wish of—ONE WHO WAS PRESENT.

Merchants Day.

If we remember the facts about it, the unanimous verdict of our traders concerning "Merchants Day" last spring was that it was the biggest success on record. As an advertising scheme they said it beat everything. In its subsequent influence on trade it proved a winning card. There was never before anything like it in this city, and we never heard of such an enterprise being attempted elsewhere before the result of Woburn's became noised about in business circles.

Well, some of our people declare Merchants Day of April 23, 1891, might with great advantage to all concerned be repeated some time this month and ought to be. We have no doubt about the utility and effectiveness of such a mode for advertising the advantages of Woburn as a trade centre. It is a good scheme, if it is not made to cost too much.

This matter has been suggested to THE JOURNAL with a request to "write it up" by prominent trades-people of the city, and these few lines are penned and printed just to start the ball in motion.

What say you, gentlemen dry goods merchants, clothiers, groces, shopkeepers, and everybody else, shall Woburn have another Merchants Day this month, such as it had last April, or shall it not?

City Council.

ALDERMEN.

The Board of Aldermen held a meeting on the evening of Sept. 4. It was their first one after vacation. Mayor Bean and Ald. Fowle were absent.

The Mayor nominated John J. Hayden, of North Woburn as a special police officer but the Board refused to confirm this nomination by a vote of 3 to 3.——A petition was received from Rufus A. Lovering for State aid which was referred to the State Aid Committee. Gordon Parker applied for a sixth class liquor license, as a druggist. ——The Chief of Police reported 84 arrests during the month of August, 15 of whom were non-residents. —— Milk Inspector Leeds reported 11 licenses granted ——The Overseers of the Poor rendered a report for July and August. Eighty families consisting of 380 persons have been assisted to the amount of $492 49; by cash, $65; fuel, $14 84; clothing, $3; medicines, $5; paid to other places, $87.55.——The monthly report of the auditor was received and placed on filer The following recommendations were made by Council Committees: By State Aid committee, that Mrs. Dorinda Hadley be granted State aid of $4 per month; by Finance committee that the City Treasurer be authorized to borrow $20,000 for the building of the new Central Square schoolhouse and give ten notes for the same of $2000 each payable yearly. Passed —— The sum of $150 was transferred from the miscellaneous department to military aid ——An order was passed to alter the line of Main street on the easterly side between Fowle and John Streets.

Class Reunion.

The pleasant parlors and other rooms of the fine residence of Mr. Benjamin Hinckley on Academy Hill were brilliantly illuminated and tastefully decorated on last Tuesday evening, and wherefore?

Because Miss M. Adeline Hinckley, daughter, entertained about 25 of her mates of W. H. S. Class '90, the same being the first annual reunion of that large class of as good scholars as the School ever graduated.

It was a pleasant party, the enjoyment of which could have been enhanced only by the attendance of the entire membership of the Class, Miss Hinckley's desire for which of course could not well be gratified.

Besides Miss Hinckley's classmates, her guests of the evening were Mr. Willimn W. Crosby, President of W. H. S. Class '89; Mr. J. Chester Hanson, President of Class '91; and Professor Samuel W. Mendum, Principal of the Woburn High School.

The evening was delightfully spent. Miss Hinckley is a happy entertainer, and she was never in better "company" mood than on last Tuesday evening. With music and conversation an evening all too brief was pleasantly whiled away and its close was reached with regret.

Happy school days were discussed as old soldiers "fight their battles over again," and life after graduation was a prolific theme for conversation.

Mr. and Mrs. Hinckley aided their accomplished daughter in making the reception a delightful one to all present.

Miss Hinckley, who was a student at Smith College last year, will remain at home this season.

The graduates of Class '90 were: Gertrude M. Bickford, Ada D. Carter, Alice H. Cottle, Bertha M. Cummings, Jennie F. Ditmars, George R. Ferguson, Marion E. Gray, Winnifred B. Larkin, Flora B. Parkhurst, Katherine D. Ramsdell, Stillman Shaw, Arthur W. Tidd, Edith A. Hanson, Anna H. Johnson, M. Adeline Hinckley, Mary D. Prior, Albert S. Bulfinch, Peter A. Caulfield, Lillian M. Charman, John Conway, Wellington T. Cook, James E. Greaney, Patrick B. Hickey, Daniel McSweeney, Annie C. Naven, Lena M. Page, Joseph H. Parker, Jr., Fred W. Prior, J. L. Skinner, W. W. Wade.

Chief Wade's New Medal.

Hon. Rufus R. Wade, Chief of the State District Police, is one of the best and most popular officers in the Commonwealth. When the international convention of factory inspectors met at Cleveland, O., a fortnight ago, Chief Fell of New Jersey delivered an address the key to which was the beautiful medal which adorned Chief Wade's desk last Saturday morning, and which was presented to him when he was, for the sixth time elected president of the association.

It is a beautiful specimen of the engraver's art. A heavy gold bar on top bears the inscription: "Presented to Rufus R. Wade, President International Association of Factory Inspectors," and from it, suspended by double gold chains, hangs the heavy gold medal. On its face is the representation of a factory, with the letters "I. A. O. F. I." over it, and on raised shields at the outer edge of the medal are the names of the States and Provinces in the Association.

On the reverse is the inscription: "Presented to Rufus R. Wade, President of the International Association of Factory Inspectors, at the fifth annual convention held at Cleveland, O., August 11 14, 1891."

Naturally the Chief feels very happy over his new acquisition, and well he may. It is a treasure as a work of art, and, taken with his re-election to the office of President of the Association, is a splendid tribute to his worth.

Burlington.

I understand that Mr. Prouty, an esteemed citizen of this town, will probably receive the Republican nomination for Representative to the General Court from this Representative District. He would have had it last year if our folks hadn't foolishly yielded the nomination to another town, which thing will not be repeated this year probably. Mr. Prouty is a farmer; one of our best citizens; not much of a public speaker but a good worker; and I don't know of anybody who would do the District more credit in the Legislature than he would.

North Woburn.

An effort was made by a certain clique here to prevent the re-election of Mr. M. W. True a member of the Republican Ward Committee but it didn't pan out worth a cent. Mr. True got there without any trouble, and his opponents slunk into their holes and pulled the holes in after them.

TREMONT THEATRE.

It was indeed a Jolly Surprise at the Tremont Monday night when Fanny Rice and her company appeared before the packed house and a great many were turned away. Standing room was not to be obtained at any price. There is just enough plot (taken from French and German productions) to make it unusually interesting. The rehearsal of Violet Carol for the variety stage gives opportunity for many songs and specialty acts. "My Mary Maguire," "It takes a girl to do it," pleased the audience greatly. Fanny Rice being a favorite here and with her excellent company will surely pack the house for the remainder of the week. Next week Hoyt's "Texas Steer" will greet you with many new features.

THE GLOBE.

"The Power of the Press" will continue to draw large houses the coming week at the Globe. James E. Wilson as Sera Carson a ship carpenter and Charles Mason as Turne Morgan an ex-curbstone operator, did themselves justice in the leading roles and the entire company gave them good support. The reproduction of the Manhattan Athletic Club house, the realistic picture of the great shipyard and Imperial Hotel Lobby in New York are notably good specimens of stage construction and one imagines themselves on the scene of action. Messrs. Pitou and Jessup are no doubt happy at the success of their play and deserve great merit in giving those who attend the "Power of the Press" a rare treat.

THE BOSTON MUSEUM.

"Ye Earlie Trouble" at the Boston Museum is meeting with unbounded success and hunderds have been refused admission. A notable feature is its charming portrayal of American Society life a century ago. George Wilson as Ebenezer Buck takes the house by storm. E. L. Davenport as the hero, Chas. Barron as the villian are received with applause. Misses Clarke, Addison and Campbell act their parts with credit to themselves while Miss O'Leary sprightly as ever receives the attention of Sir William to shield her lover. The dialogue is bright the situations very interesting and would not fail to please the most fastidious mind. Since the opening night various changes have been made for the better and a long run is predicted for this popular play.

HOLLIS THEATRE

Was packed to its fullest capacity to welcome a fortnight's engagement of Blue Jeans. Last season Mr. Joseph Arthur's Company was received with great enthusiasm but this two weeks return bids fair to surpass its former record Mr. Robert Hilliard the original Perry Bascom of New York's long engagement made his first appearance with a decided success. While the remainder of the Company did credit to their different roles. Blue Jeans is beautifully staged and the mechanical devices so near perfect that one seems to be amid the trying scenes. The saw mill scene is most thrilling while the Barbecue is appetizing as ever. And in fact a great amount of enjoyment may be had by witnessing this play as it is evenly blended with mirth and pathos.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

My Jack has returned to the Grand Opera House for a brief stay and as usual greeted with a crowded house. The applause was tremendous and each thrilling situation was received with great favor. The play has received many improvements and will be seen by many a second time. The life saving scene and the destruction of the light house produce a decided sensation as do several of the scenes presented. The plot being quite complicated holds the attention of the audience throughout Walter Sanford won honors for himself as the hero "Jack Meridith" and in fact the whole company is of the best. The flag used in the desert scene was presented to Mr. Sanford by the explorer Stanley and Dame Rumor claims this scene was takn from suggestions offered by him. The proprietors are each season makieg this play house more popular and the programme's offered are of the best. Next week Annie Ward Tiffany will greet one and all in The Step-Daughter.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Denman Thompson in "The Old Homestead." Crowded houses greet him daily and will surely run the allotted time twelve weeks.

Don't Know a "Square Meal" when He Sees It.

The Woburn JOURNAL prints an old portrait of Cettywayo, the Zulu chief, and labels it Charles F. Loring, candidate for the Governor's Council in opposition to Hudson's favorite son, Jefts. But this is not its worst blunder of last week. Speaking of Congressman Lodge's entertainment of the Suburban Editors, it says:

"Hospitality was never more liberally extended than on this occasion by Hon. H. C. and Madame Lodge, and for once country newspaper delvers on short commons (and none too good at that) learned what a 'square meal' means."

If salad, cold tongue, bread, ice cream and coffee, taken standing, are what constitute a "square meal" they certainly learned something. There was hospitality enough to fit the case extended, no doubt, but it would be a distension of politeness to call it profuse, abundant, or particularly liberal, but whatever there was, was extended by H. C. alone. So far as the visitors knew there was no "Madam Lodge" in existence.—Marlboro Times.

It is a notorious fact that the person who gets next to nothing to eat at home is the first to find fault with the decent victuals he makes a hog of himself on when at somebody's else's table.

Nevertheless, if Congressman Lodge had set before his distinguished guests a liberal supply of "tangle-leg" Col. Morse no doubt would have been perfectly satisfied with the banquet furnished by the young Statesman of fair Nahant.

The purse mentioned was a testimonial at the close of the season of their appreciation and esteem. Literary Notices.

The N. Y. Press is a morning paper that every good Republican in the Union ought to subscribe for and otherwise heartily support. It is one of the keenest, cleanest, clearest-headed, and most influential political dailies in New York City. It preaches sound doctrine; it has a faculty of "seeing into a millstone;" it is perfectly sure as to what it thinks about things; and it states its opinions bravely, clearly, and honestly, no matter who or where they hit. We like the (N. Y.) Press, and besides being all that anyone can desire as a Republican organ, the price of it is so low that nobody hardly need be deprived of the pleasure and profit of its daily perusal—only $3.00 a year.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for August 29, and September 5, contain Pasquale de Paoli: a Study; Robert Browning, and the Last English House of the Bearded Tit, To-day in Morocco and The Diet of Great Men, Stray Thoughts in South Africa, The Field Naturalist; the Rev. J. G. Wood and Jenny Lind, A Forgotten Race, and The Post-office in China, From a Country Personage, Statesmen of Austria, Iltar in a Harem, Social Bath in the Last Century, Rus in Urbe, with instalments of The Blue Rose, A Study in Grey and The Prince of Morocco and poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages each (or more than 3,300 pages a year) the subscription price ($8) is low. Littell & Co., Boston are the publishers.

THE MUSICAL RECORD for September is one of the very best in literature and music ever issued. It is published by O. Ditson & Co., Boston, and is one of the best and most popular musical magazines in the country.

The last number of the handsome St Louis magazine CHAPERONE is one of the most perfect numbers in illustration and general perfection of workmanship yet issued. W. H. Little has another interesting article on physiognomy. He calls these papers very appropriately, Portraits of the Soul, and gives in this some fourteen illustrations; the mouths alone being presented. These are from actual photographs of prominent women of the United States and form with the writer's comments most interesting reading. A series of exquisite engravings of the famous M. L. Solon's design's in plaques and vases is worth a year's subscription. The delicate beauty of the great artists creations is most clearly depicted. The dress and fashion department is beautifully illustrated and full of seasonable hints, and the cuisine has some nice cold dainties for midsummer weather. There is no finer magazine than the CHAPERONE in the West, and its energetic editor, Mrs. Annie L. Y. Swart, is to be congratulated on its deserved success. HEALING THE BLIND MAN

LESSON XI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 13.

Text of the Lesson, John ix. 1-11 and 35-38—Commit Verses, 35-38—Golden Text, John ix. 25—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "And as Jesus passed by He saw a man which was blind from his birth."

And being full of compassion His heart went out to this poor man, who had now spent over a score of years in darkness both physical and spiritual (verse 21).

2. "And His disciples asked Him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?"

That all suffering is the direct result of some sin on the part of the sufferer or his ancestors is not only a very old but a very common belief. That it is sometimes the case is evident from the words of Jesus himself, "Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee" (John v. 14). But to conclude that it is always so would be directly contrary to the teachings of Scripture, for "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."

3. "Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."

In the light of the testimony of all Scripture is the only way to understand any Scripture. From this saying of Christ some might blindly conclude that we have here a sinless man with sinless parents; but what saith the Scriptures? "All have sinned and come short of the Glory of God;" "There is none righteous, no, not one" (Rom. iii, 10, 23). The words of Christ are an answer to the question of the disciples concerning this man's blindness and the reason of it, and He simply says that there was no special sin on the part of the parents by reason of which they were given a blind son, but, on the contrary, this blind man was going to furnish a special opportunity for the manifestation of the power of God. See also the reason why Lazarus was permitted to sicken and die (chapter xi, 4, 15, 40).

4. "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work."

Over thirty times in this gospel Jesus says that the Father sent Him, and He constantly appeals to the works as evidence that he was sent by God (chapters v, 36; x, 25, xiv, 10, xv, 24).

5. "As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world."

This also He often repeats, as in chapters viii, 12; xii, 35, 46. He is both Life and Light, and neither death nor darkness can abide in His presence.

6. "When He had thus spoken He spat on the ground and made clay of the spittle, and He anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay."

Sometimes He made the blind to see with a word, and immediately (Mark x, 52), sometimes by the use of a medium, as the clay and spittle and waters of Siloam, as in this case, and sometimes gradually, as in the case of the man who first saw men as trees walking, and then when Jesus put His hands on him a second time he saw clearly (Mark viii, 23-25).

7. "And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam (which is by interpretation, Sent). He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing."

Jesus was just as able to open his eyes with a word, and on the spot, as in the case of the blind men at Jericho, but He saw fit to do as He did for some wise purpose. There may be a connection between the significance of Siloam (Sent) and the fact that He so often speaks of Himself as Sent by the Father.

8. "The neighbors, therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?"

9. "Some said, This is he; others said, He is like him; but he said, I am he."

And surely he ought to know. The change in the man's appearance was so great that he was barely recognizable even by those who had known him best. I myself have seen one who had been a drunkard and a blasphemer so changed even in his features by the spirit of God in him that his former friends would scarcely know him.

10. "Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?"

The change was so great and so clearly manifest that the people could not help inquiring how it came about. When a work of grace in one's heart becomes so outwardly manifest in the life that people observe it and inquire about it, then God is glorified.

11. "He answered and said, A man that is called Jesus made clay and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam and wash; and I went and washed, and I received sight."

This is his testimony, simple, full, straightforward. The man called Jesus did it all, and he, the blind man, simply obeyed. Where was the faith in this instance, either on the part of the man or his parents or friends, before Jesus spoke to him? Faith cometh by hearing the word of God (Rom. x, 17).

35. "Jesus heard that they had cast him out, and when He had found him He said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

36. "He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on Him?"

The greatest question that can be asked of any mortal is that which Jesus asked this man in the last verse, or Pilate's question, "What shall I do with Jesus?" If all were as ready as this man how blessed it would be!

37. "And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee."

The woman of Samaria said, "I know that Messiah cometh, who is called Christ: * * Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he" (iv, 25, 26). And immediately she went off to the city with the tidings. So Jesus now reveals Himself to this man as the need of his unsatisfied soul, even as after the resurrection He revealed himself to weeping Mary, the sorrowful two, the perplexed women, the fearful disciples, doubting Thomas, the hungry and disappointed fishermen, and in every case tears, doubts, fears and perplexities all vanished, and there was joy and peace and plenty.

38. "And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshiped Him."

Happy man, for as a believer he at once received all the riches of God's grace in Jesus Christ. I do not say he at once enjoyed all the riches of God's grace, but he became possessor and began to enjoy. Consider the possessions of one who can truly say, "Lord, I believe." According to the infallible testimony of God's word he has eternal life, is a child of God, has the forgiveness of sins, has peace with God, is a joint heir with Christ, is a king and priest unto God, has an inheritance incorruptible, his body has become a temple of the Holy Spirit, and he has the assurance.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Some Evidence of It—"Do ghosts ever have the cholera?" asked Johnny Squildig. "Of course not," replied his papa. "Whist an absurd question." Then what kind of a disease is cholera n phantom?" asked Johnny, with a riumphant air.

THE ROMANCE OF BUCHANAN'S LIFE.

Idle Gossip and a Thoughtless Act Are the Causes of a Life of Sorrow.

A Minneapolis lady told me the other day the true reason why James Buchanan, the fifteenth president of the United States, never married. She used to live in Lancaster, Pa., and it was near this little city that President Buchanan lived (when "at home") and died. I quote her own words:

"When I was a girl and a young lady at home I used to know Mr. Buchanan quite well. Father was one of his intimate friends, and used to spend a good deal of time—nearly all his Sunday afternoons—at his country place, Wheatland, about a mile from Lancaster. They had a bond of sympathy between them; both were Democrats. Why, he was at my sister's wedding, and I remember the expression on his face and the twinkle in his eye as he quoted the old saying to my oldest sister: 'When a younger sister is married first the older has to sit on the fence and await her turn. You must dance in your stocking feet tonight.'

"He was a tall, fine looking man, with silvery white hair, generally dressed in black broadcloth, black satin vest, and wore the old fashioned high linen collars. One great peculiarity of his was carrying his head on one side.

"He told my father about the love affair. I've heard it dozens of times. He was engaged to Miss Coleman, of Lancaster, and there, too, lived Miss Rose Hubley, also very much in love with him and mortally jealous of Miss Coleman. The course of true love was running smoothly for the two lovers until Miss Hubley came between them. Mr. Buchanan had been out of town on some business, returned late one afternoon to the city, and on his way home he passed by where Miss Hubley lived. She called him into the house, and he was there some minutes, and then went directly home to get his supper.

"As frequently happens, some gossipping neighbors either saw it or Miss Hubley herself took pains to inform Miss Coleman that Mr. Buchanan had called at the other lady's home first, although engaged to her. She resented it, and when he went to call upon her that evening declined to see him. The next day he went up to Philadelphia on an early train and with her father. She went up later in the day to go with the two gentlemen to the theatre in the evening. She did not appear as usual, not at all like herself, and finally declined to go to the theater or even see Mr. Buchanan. When they returned she was a corpse, and was brought to Lancaster and buried there. Heart disease was given as the cause.

"The other lady lived to be an old maid and suffered an awful fate. She was standing before an open grate, warming her hands behind her, when her clothing caught fire and she was burned to death. Mr. Buchanan never forgot Miss Coleman. When he died he said that he wanted to be buried in Woodlawn Hill cemetery, because when she was living they used to walk out that way together."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Genius versus Grit.

It is an everyday occurence to hear individual exclamations of surprise over the brilliant, successful career of an apparently commonplace man or woman. "To save my life I can see nothing remarkable in her," is what the amateur critic, with rather fretful impotence, complains—and yet, one by one, the triumphant seeker after fortune captures every citadel, storms the fortress and finally plants her colors on the topmost turret for all the world to cheer.

Of course, no one ever does see the one thing able to accomplish these wonders, for the sole agent is hard, patient toil, the sort that is done in the closet in odd hours, when the rest of mankind is asleep, ever digging away at an idea and breathing life and activity into it by sheer force of will—over and over again, the same old story of tortoise and hare, until one marvels to hear lack of talent given as excuse for want of fortune.

In material matters genius, unless supplemented by energy, does not count for tuppence. While, on the other hand, grit is an independent factor, spinning flax out of hay and long straw, indifferent of means at hand, and only caring for the end in view.—Boston Herald.

Where the Real Fun Comes In.

The noble sport of sailing is real fun if you don't get drowned. In company with a friend who was a veritable "land lubber," in a high wind I skimmed over Chautauqua's blue waters, borne along by the "white wings." After an hour's splendid sport we returned to land, and my friend heaved a sigh of relief. "How did you enjoy it?" said I. "Oh, splendid, splendid!" was the reply. "I kept thinking all the time if we ever got to shore alive what a magnificent time we will have had." I hope to take this friend to sail again, for I always am pleased to know of real and unalloyed enjoyment on the part of those who sail with me.—Chautauqua Assembly Herald.

Rubber Bands Protect Glass.

When you travel be sure and take with you a few rubber bands, such as are to be found at any stationer's. Handglasses and bottles can be insured from breakage by slipping a couple over each article; in case of bottles, put one lengthwise to keep the stopper in as well. It is curious that such a simple device should be an adequate protection, but we are assured it is the safest way to protect anything made of glass.—New York Tribune.

How the Crew Kills Time on a Lightship.

A number of stores in Nantucket sell what are know as lightship baskets. They come in "nests," a nest consisting of five or eight baskets of various sizes fitting one into the other. These baskets are made only on the South Shoal lightship. Their manufacture has been attempted ashore, but has never paid. This is because there is a very narrow margin of profit in them for the lightship crew, who make them chiefly for the purpose of whiling away the weary winter hours.

In summer the crew occupies its spare time "scrimshawing," an old whaling term for doing ingenious mechanical work, but having aboard the South Shoal the special meaning of preparing the strips of wood and rattan for the manufacture of the baskets in winter. The bottoms are turned ashore. The blocks over which the baskets are made have been aboard the ship since she was first anchored off the New South Shoal in 1856. The sides of the baskets are of white oak or hickory, filled in with rattan, and they are round or oval, of graceful lines and of great durability, the sizes to a nest ranging from a pint to a peck and a half.

As she enters womanhood, every young girl needs the wisest care. Troubles beginning then may make her whole life miserable.

But the troubles that are to be feared have a positive remedy. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription builds up and strengthens the system, and regulates and promotes every proper function. It's a generous, supporting tonic, and a quieting, soothing nervine—a legitimate medicine, not a beverage, free from alcohol and injurious drugs. It corrects and cures, safely and surely, all those delicate derangements, weaknesses, and diseases peculiar to the sex.

A remedy that does cure is one that can be guaranteed. That's what the proprietors of "Favorite Prescription" think. If it doesn't give satisfaction, in every case for which it's recommended, they'll refund the money. No other medicine for women is sold on such terms.

But notwithstanding these various attempts at killing time, life on the South Shoal lightship is at its best a life of desolation, with only a few gulls or Mother Carey's chickens for visitors, which seek refuge aboard in stormy weather.—Gustav Kobbe in Century

An Enormous Brain and a Thin Skull.

When Ivan Turgeneff, the great Russian novelist, died in 1883, his brain was removed for the purpose of weighing it, the distinguished physicians and surgeons having often remarked the extraordinary size of his head. When placed on the delicate balances the brain was found to weigh exactly 2,012 grams. The meaning of this can be better understood when it is known that the weight of the average human brain is but 1,390 grams. Turgeneff's brain was the heaviest that has yet been weighed, Cuvier's coming next, his having weighed 1,800 grams.

There are many cases in which an extraordinary intellect has been accompanied by a heavy brain weight, but men whose mental superiority is understood by both friend and foe have often had brains under the average weight.

One other peculiarity of Turgeneff was the surprising thinness of his skull. When at school he often fainted from being playfully tapped on the temples by his schoolfellows. The post mortem, which revealed the enormous weight of the brain, also proved that the skull was so thin that it would yield to the pressure of the fingers and thumb.—St. Louis Republic.

Odd Monuments in Churches.

Sometimes the memory of departed persons has been perpetuated by the erection of some part of the fabric, or by the gift of some article of church furniture instead of by the erection of a monument. In Little Birmingham a pew is thus constituted a souvenir. In Willington church, Sussex, a tie beam is made to answer this purpose. A corbel in Reculver church, Kent, is inscribed to the memory of one Thomas. Many fonts and screens are thus memorials, as are also chalices.

The pulpit in Wells cathedral was put up in the reign of Henry VIII, by Bishop Knight, "for his tombe." Lord Thomas Daere in 1531 left a certain sum of mouey for a tomb, which he directed should be used as the Easter sepulcher. In the preceding century another testator desired there should be made for him "a playne tombe of marble of a competent height, to the intent that it may bear the Blessed Body of our Lord, and the sepultur, at the time of Estre."—Gentleman's Magazine.

A Bad Day for Shopping.

The superstition that Friday is an unlucky day, so prevalent of late among women, seems to have died out. That is, it hasn't died out exactly, but Friday has given way to Monday. The following conversation between young ladies overheard in a street car has some bearing on the subject: "I'll never go shopping on Monday again." "You don't mean to say you ever did, it's awfully unlucky." "Yes, I went last Monday; I positively had to. Well, a wagon load of watermelons broke down, and the cars were blocked for an hour; and another wagon with a boiler on it, the boiler rolled off into the street; and a clothesline full of clean clothes broke and the clothes got all dirty; and the cat in grandmother's had a fit; and two cross eyed men ran into each other in the street. Wasn't that dreadful! Supposing one had followed you home?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Value of Decayed Forests.

The decayed vegetation of forests has furnished to the fields their present fertility, upon which man depends for food. In the tree growth of virgin woods and in the floor of rotted foliage beneath are stored the accumulations of centuries. Nature does not care whether this growth is useful to the human race or not. It is left for us to encourage the growth of such trees as we find valuable, to the exclusion of others. Thus an economical use is made of the resources at hand and a new conception of the forest arises. The forest primeval becomes "wood lands," while the new "forest" includes only cultivated woods.—Interview in Washington Star.

It will cost $4,000,000 to blast the rocks out of the so called "iron gates" of the Danube river. The Austrian government is levying tolls on passing vessels to pay for the cost of the work.

HAND TO HAND WITH KNIVES.

An Indian Dispute Settled by the Death of Both Parties to It.

William Weston, a ranchman living twenty miles north of Fishomingo, I. T., brings a story of a most horrible duel which was fought with knives by two Indians near his ranch. There had been bad blood between the two for some time, which had started over a horse race.

The Indians were named Sewapi and Nunechi. They had been restrained from fighting several times by their friends, but on meeting at a horse race the quarrel was renewed, and it was finally arranged that they should end the matter by a duel with knives. A large crowd of Indians and halfbreeds were present, and a ring was formed. Each man had his second, who was armed with a Winchester rifle, ready to shoot down any one who might be tempted to interfere.

The contestants were stripped to the waist, and each was armed with two sharp knives, the blades being about eight inches long. When the men entered the ring it was with the understanding that it was a duel to the death. Both were magnificent specimens of manhood, and they were equally adept in the use of the knife.

Amid breathless silence the combatants slowly approached the center of the ring. There they stood for a minute gazing at each other, while the silence was most painful. Not a sound could be heard except the occasional stamp of a horse on the outskirts of the crowd. The spectators sat around perfectly motionless, while the duelists began slowly to walk around each other, watching for a chance to catch one another off guard. It was probably two minutes before a change came, and then it was with the rapidity of a lightning stroke.

Sewapi suddenly made a leap through the air toward his enemy, and for an instant the air appeared to be full of Indians and knives, which latter flashed in the sunshine like streaks of light. As quickly as they came together did they separate, and notwithstanding the rapid play of the weapons it was seen that neither had received a scratch. Still, during the whole exciting scene, not a sound could be heard except the clashing steel as it came together.

Slowly the circling began again, and the glittering eyes alone showed that the walk meant death. Soon the same leap was repeated, this time by Nunechi, who seemed to fly through the air. The fight was fast and furious, and when they separated both were bleeding profusely. Sewapi had a terrible cut across his breast, while Nunechi had the muscle of his left forearm almost severed.

The intermission was very short, and both men sprang simultaneously toward each other. The struggle was fierce, and suddenly a trip was given and Sewapi fell on top of his antagonist. The lightninglike rapidity of the stroke and parry precluded the possibility of knowing who was getting the worst of it, until it was noticed that Nunechi threw up his arms, stiffened out his legs, and was dead with a knife in his heart.

Sewapi sprang to his feet, gave an earsplitting yell, and then slowly sank to the ground, with blood gushing from a dozen wounds. Before a friend could reach him he, too, was a corpse.—San Francisco Examiner.

Animals That Used to Live Ages Ago.

Of the dinotherium no complete skeleton has been discovered, but it was doubtless the biggest land mammal that ever lived. A full grown skull of this earliest of proboscidians, which had long tusks as well as a trunk, measures five feet from the point of the lower teeth to the top of the head. The brontops, of elephantine size, had a head like a rhinoceros, with huge horns. Quite as remarkable was the sivatherium, a beast like an antelope, but big as an elephant, with two conical horns on the front of its head and two immense spreading ones behind.

Among birds were waders ten feet in height, such as the dinornis and gastornis. Contemporary with them were the mammoth and the mastodon, the woolly rhinoceros, armadillos nine feet in length, and the saber toothed tiger, larger than the greatest lion of today.

All that is left of these wonders of animal life is found in deposits such as those of the western lake beds. For years the government has been engaged in excavating their bones.—Rene Bache in New York Sun.

Grocers Who Were Dressed in Colors.

In the early part of the Fifteenth century it is recorded that the "Grocers' guild appeared in livery of scarlet and green." A few years later scarlet and black was adopted.

Funeral services of deceased members "were attended with much show of pageantry." At the burial of Sir Philip Sidney, who was a member of the Grocers' guild, his worship the mayor, aldermen and other civic officials were present, "rydinge in purple."—Harper's Bazar.

Musical Fish of Ceylon.

Every bay and inlet on the coast of Ceylon abounds with musical fish. Their song, if it can be called a song, is not one sustained note like a bird's, but a multitude of tiny, soft, sweet sounds, each clear and distinct in itself, something like the vibrations of a wine glass when its rim is rubbed with the moistened finger. In the harbor at Bombay, India, there is a fish with a song like the sound produced by an Æolian harp.—St. Louis Republic.

A Husband's Mistake.

Husbands too often permit wives, and parents their children, to suffer from headache, dizziness, neuralgia, sleeplessness, fits, nervousnefs, when by the use of Dr. Miles Restorative Nervine such serious results could easily be prevented. Druggists everywhere say it gives universal satisfaction, and has an immense sale. Woodworth & Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Snow & Co., of Syracuse, N. Y.; J. C. Wolf, Hillsdale, Mich.; and hundreds of others say "it is the greatest seller they ever knew." It contains no opiates. Trial bottles and fine book on Nervous Diseases, free at Charles H. Buss'.

Cooks and Cooking in India.

I don't believe any old Indian can ever feel satisfied with a dinner which has been cooked outside of India. I thought that I knew what good cooking was when I was attached to the northwest, but really I never ate curry and rice till I reached the Madras presidency. I was stationed there for nearly a year and a half, and whenever I could manage it I made a run to Madras simply to eat curry and rice, and the only thing that will tempt me back to India will be to eat that dish.

So good are the Madrassi cooks that the Prince of Wales took one home with him to be in his special employ. The Madrasi did not like the life at Sandringham and came back. I am of the opinion that Madras is the only place in the world where unborn animals are cooked and eaten. The most delicious curry is made from an unborn lamb, the mother being killed and the young extracted from the womb before birth. The natives declare that the meat is infinitely more tender. I have heard some people express repugnance, but it is the same with a person who has never eaten a frog.

Another mistake is generally made, and that is that the mango can be eaten in all its excellence in every part of India. That is not so. The best mango I have ever tasted was in Goa, in the Bombay presidency, which is a part of the Portuguese possessions.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Startling Honesty.

A bit of honesty as startling as it was noteworthy came to light in the prosaic region of the New York barge office Tuesday. An Italian who arrived in this country on Monday and passed the inquisition clerks in safety came back again with all his baggage and went to Colonel Weber's office. There he explained that he wanted to right a wrong. "I lied yesterday," he said, "when I said I had never been in prison. I lay awake all night thinking about it, and I came down this morning to be sent back. About ten years ago I got into a fight with another man, and we were arrested and made to serve two months in jail!"

"Indeed!" gasped the astonished superintendent. "And did you use a knife in this fight?" "No, sir," was the answer, "we fought with our hands and feet." "Do you think you can get along in America without fighting?" "Oh, yes, I came here to be a good man, and I would like to stay if I could." "Well," said Colonel Weber, "I guess we'll have to let you through on the grounds of excessive honesty. You may go."—New York Times.

Evidence That Cats Talk.

An Androscoggin county woman will have it that animals talk to each other. And this is the anecdote she relates to prove her theory:

She has two cats, Dot and Dot's youngest, named for his exploring propensities Christopher Columbus. One morning a little bird flew in at the open window, and falling to the floor lay panting and dying. Christopher Columbus just then appeared at the doorway. "No, you don't, Christopher Columbus," exclaimed his mistress, and procuring a tiny box she put the still warm body of the feathered mite into it and made a deep grave under the apple tree. Christopher followed and looked longingly at the box, then went away where he was not seen for some time. Only Christopher witnessed the burial, yet an hour after, going out to look at the grave, she found Dot had dug up the box and Christopher was just about to devour the dainty mouthful. Now, if Christopher Columbus didn't go to Dot and say, "Mother there is a little bird buried under that apple tree; get it for me, please," how did Dot know there was a bird there?—Lewiston Journal.

Luminous East Indian Plants.

Upwards of sixty species of East Indian plants, mostly of the fern family, with a goodly sprinkling of grasses and creeping vines, are luminous, and it is said that the sides of the mountains in the vicinity of Cyree are nightly illuminated by the pale, white light which they emit. The root stock of a plant from the Ooraghum jungle, near Layki (supposed to be an orchid), possesses the peculiar properties of becoming luminous when wet, while when dry it is quite lusterless. No Escape.

They were nearing an ice cream palace on their evening stroll, and just as the young man saw his danger he heard the friction of the two pennies in his vest pocket.

"Have you heard," he asked in a voice of settled gloom, "of the poisoning of a whole family by eating ice cream?"

"Yes," she said quickly; "they used poison for flavoring. That comes of eating homemade ice cream."—Detroit Free Press.

Every Animal Likes Bananas.

The leaves of the banana are tender, and the strong winds of the tropics—the hurricanes—soon tear the leaves in strips, thereby adding to their grace and beauty. The banana is a fruit that beast and bird, as well as man, are fond of, and the owner, when he lives in a sparsely settled country, must need protect his plantation by a fence of some thorn plant.—Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

THE DANGEROUS OLEANDER.

The Buds and Leaves of the Popular Plant Are Not Healthful Things to Eat.

"I wonder if it is a mere matter of fancy, or does that tree affect my health?" queried a very delicate looking woman, as she broke some large bunches of exquisite pink and white blooms from a tall and wide spreading oleander which stood in a large tub in her room. "Sometimes I feel perfectly certain that the odor of the blossoms hurts me—makes my eyes burn and causes an irritation in my throat. I am more satisfied about the latter, however, and am going to have the plant taken out of my room, although it is one of which, for several reasons, I am very fond."

"I think you are wise in doing so," replied her friend. "I am certain that continuous breathing of the atmosphere laden with the odor of that tree is capable of producing the most serious consequences. I have not the slightest doubts that the deaths of at least two friends of mine are traceable to this cause, and I know of several cases where throat affections have been caused and aggravated by living in the same room with large plants of this sort. In one instance there was at first a slight swelling in the throat, then a long period of gradually increasing pain and inflammation, then malignant symptoms and death, with very marked disturbance of the heart's action toward the last.

"The dispensatories and other authorities tell us that the oleander contains a principle which is an active heart poison. It seems remarkable that no investigation of its actual effect on human life has been made. In some countries it is in general use as the principal ingredient of a compound for destroying rats, mice and many sorts of insects. An armful of boughs cut from a number of trees on a gentleman's lawn was thrown into a pond where cattle went to drink, and several valuable animals died from drinking there.

"A gentleman one day rode his horse up to the porch of a house where he desired to call, tied the animal to one of the rails and went indoors. Returning after a few moments' stay, he found the horse in a state of violent agitation, trembling and scarcely able to stand. A few moments later he fell, and died almost instantly. Investigation revealed the fact that he had reached over the rail and eaten several large branches from an oleander which stood on the porch. Members of the family who chanced to be aware of the death of the cattle from drinking the poisoned water, and also of other corroborative evidence, had no hesitation in declaring that the oleander shoots that the horse had eaten were the cause of his death.

"In view of these facts, it seems quite important that some qualified individual should investigate the subject and give to the public the results. A lady of some experience and considerable medical knowledge gives it as her opinion that enlargement of the glands of the throat, goiter and various forms of heart disease are either produced or aggravated by inhaling air charged with the odors of this plant. Especially is this likely to occur in winter, when plants are kept in living rooms in a high temperature, or where the air is charged with moisture. Certain it is that with my observation and experience of its effects I would have it removed without delay, beautiful as it is."—New York Ledger.

Shaving with Rapidity.

A barber who can shave five men in an hour is doing quick work, and a young Pittsburger who has the fortune or misfortune, as you may choose, to possess a stiff black beard, thought he was seeking the impossible when he asked a barber to shave him in five minutes in order that he might catch a train. But the barber thus challenged, with the added incentive of a double fee if he did the work in the allotted time, settled down to his best gait, and succeeded in shaving his man, without a single cut, but clean, smooth and complete, in some seconds less than five minutes. More than this, the barber brushed his customer's hair and put in all the little extras of bay rum and the rest, handed him his hat and remarked the heat of the day before the five minutes had elapsed.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Woburn Journal

Abraham Lincoln At Richmond.

A GRAPHIC ACCOUNT BY ADMIRAL PORTER.

The September number of Belford's Magazine, contains the first of a series of papers from the pen of Admiral Porter, giving an account of the entrance of Abraham Lincoln into Richmond, Va. The President had been on board of the flagship Malvern. Admiral Porter says: The night before Richmond was evacuated by the Confederate forces we were sitting on the Malvern's upper deck, enjoying the evening air. The President, who had been some time quiet, turned to me and said:

"Can't we do something at this particular moment to make history?"

"Not much," I replied; "the navy is doing its best just now holding in utter uselessness the rebel navy, consisting of four heavy ironclads. If those should get down to City Point they would commit great havoc, as they came near doing it while I was away at Fort Fisher. In consequence, we filled up the river with stones so that no vessels can pass either way. It enables us to hold the fort with a very small force, but quite sufficient to prevent any one from removing the obstructions. Therefore the rebel ironclads are useless to them."

"But can't we make a noise?" asked the President; "that would be refreshing."

"Yes," I replied, "we can make a noise: and, if you desire it I will commence."

"Well, make a noise," he said.

I sent a telegram to Captain Breese, just above Dutch Gap, to commence firing the starboard broadside guns of the vessels above, to have the guns loaded with shrapnel, and to fire in the direction of the forts without attempting any particular aim; to fire rapidly and to keep it up until I told him to stop. The firing commenced about 9 o'clock, the hour when all good soldiers and sailors turn in and take a rest.

The President admitted that the noise was a very respectable one, and listened to it attentively, while the rapid flashes of the guns lit up the whole horizon.

In about twenty minutes there was a loud explosion which shook the vessel.

The President jumped from his chair. "I hope to heaven one of them has not blown up!" he exclaimed.

"No, sir," I replied; "my ear detects that the sound was at least two miles farther up the river; it is one of the rebel ironclads. You will hear another in a minute."

"Well," he said "our noise has done some good: that's a cheap way of getting rid of ironclads. I am certain Richmond is being evacuated, and that Lee has surrendered, or those fellows would not blow up their ironclads."

Just then there was a second explosion, and two more followed close after.

"That is all of them," I said; "no doubt the forts are all evacuated, and to-morrow we can go up to Richmond."

Of the great difficulty in finding a proper place to land, the Admiral selected a spot, and says:

There was a small house on this landing, and behind it were some twelve negroes digging with spades. The leader of them was an old man sixty years of age. He raised himself to an upright position as we landed, and put his hands up to his eyes. Then he dropped his spade a sprang forward.

"Bress de Lord," he said, "dere is de great Messiah! I knowed him as soon as I seed him. He's been in my heart fo' long yeahs, an' he's cum at las' to free his children from deir bondage! Glory, Hallelujah!" and he fell on his knees before the President and kissed his feet.

The others followed his example, and in a minute Mr. Lincoln was surrounded by these people, who had treasured up the recollection of him caught from a photograph, and had looked up to him for four years as the one who was to lead them out of captivity. It was a touching sight—that aged negro kneeling at the feet of a tall, gaunt-looking man, who seemed himself to be bearing all the grief of the nation, and whose face seemed to say, "I suffer for you all but will do all I can to help you."

Mr. Lincoln looked down on the poor creatures at his feet; he was much embarrassed at his position.

"Don't kneel to me," he said. "That is not right. You must kneel to God only, and thank him for the liberty you will hereafter enjoy. I am but God's humble instrument; but you may rest assured that as long as I live no one shall put a shackle on your limbs, and you shall have all the rights which God has given to every other free citizen of this Republic."

His face was lit up with a divine look as he uttered these words. Though not a handsome man, and ungainly in his person, yet in his enthusiasm he seemed the personification of manly beauty, and that sad face of his looked down in kindness upon those ignorant blacks with a grace that could not be excelled. He really seemed of another world. All this scene was of brief duration, but, though a simple and humble affair, it impressed me more than anything of the kind I ever witnessed. What a fine picture that would make—Mr. Lincoln landing from a ship-of-war's boat, an aged negro on his knees at his feet, and a dozen more trying to reach him to kiss the hem of his garments! In the foreground should be the shackles he had broken when he issued his proclamation giving liberty to the slave.

Twenty-six years have passed since that event, it is almost too new in history to make a great impression, but the time will come when it will loom up as one of the greatest of man's achievements, and the name of Abraham Lincoln—who of his own will struck the shackles from the limbs of four millions of people—will be honored thousands of years from now as man's name was never honored before. It was a minute or two before I could get the negroes to rise and leave the President. The scene was so touching I hated to disturb it, yet we could not stay there all day; we had to move on; so I requested the patriarch to withdraw from about the President with his companions, and let us pass on.

"Yes, massa," said the old man, "but after bein' so many years in de desert widout water, it's mighty pleasant to be lookin' at las' on our spring of life; 'scuse us, sir; we means no disrespec' to Mass' Lincoln; we means all love and gratitude."

And then, joining hands together in a ring, the negros sang the following hymn with the melodious and touching voices possessed only by the negroes of the South:

"Oh, all ye people clapp your hands,
And with triumphant voices sing;
No force the mighty power withstands
Of God, the universal king."

The President and all of us listened respectfully while the hymn was being sung. Four minutes at most had passed away since we first landed at a point where, as far as the eye could reach, the streets were entirely deserted, but now what a different scene appeared as that hymn went forth from the negroes' lips!

The streets seemed to be suddenly alive with the colored race. They seemed to spring from the earth. They came, tumbling and shouting, from over the hills and from the water side, where no one was seen as we had passed. The crowd immediately became very oppressive. We needed our marines to keep them off.

I ordered twelve of the boat's crew to fix bayonets to their rifles and to surround the President, all of which was quickly done; but the crowd poured in so tearfully that I thought we all stood a chance of being crushed to death. I now realized the imprudence of landing without a large body of marines; and yet this seemed to me, after all, the fittest way for Mr. Lincoln to come among the people he had redeemed from bondage.

What an ovation he had to be sure, from those so-called ignorant beings! They all had their souls in their eyes, and I don't think I ever looked upon a scene where there were so many passionately happy faces. While some were rushing forward to try and touch the man they had talked of and dreamed of for four long years, others stood off a little way and looked on in awe and wonder. Others turned somersaults, and many yelled for joy. Half of them acted as though demented, and could find no way of testifying their delight. They had been made to believe that they would never gain their liberty, and they were brought face to face with it when least expected.

It was as a beautiful toy given to a child after months of hopeless longing on its part; it was such joy as never kills, but animates the dullest class of humanity.

But we could not stay there all day looking at this happy mass of people; the crowds and their yells were increasing, and in a short time we should be unable to move at all. The negroes, in their ecstacy, could not be made to understand that they were detaining the President; they looked upon him as belonging to them, and that he had come to put the crowning act to the great work he had commenced. They should not feel they were free in reality until they heard it from his own lips. At length he spoke. He could not move for the mass of people; he had to do something.

"My poor friends," he said, "you are free—free as air. You can cast off the name of slave and trample upon it; it will come to you no more. Liberty is your birthright. God gave it to you as he gave it to others, and it is a sin that you have been deprived of it for so many years. But you must try to deserve this priceless boon. Let the world see that you merit it, and are able to maintain it by your good works. Don't let your joy carry you into excesses.

"Learn the laws and obey them; obey God's commandments, and thank him for giving you liberty, for to Him you owe all things. There, now, let me pass on; I have but little time to spare. I want to see the Capital, and must return at once to Washington to secure to you that liberty which you seem to prize so highly."

The crowd shouted and screeched as if they would split the firmanent, though while the President was speaking you might have heard a pin drop. I don't think anyone could do justice to that scene; it would be necessary to photograph it to undsrstand it.

A Remarkable War Record.

"I served on General Butler's staff," said Port Warden Comstock; "was over four years in the army, but never fired a gun; was promoted for gallantry on the field and never was in a battle, and, in fact never saw a Confederate in arms, and I don't get a pension. I didn't carry away any spoons from New Orleans, but I've got Shakespeare, Byron and Moore in leather that I brought away from the Twiggs mansion where we made our headquarters while in New Orleans. If anybody got away with the spoons it would not be strange.

The distinguished family that moved out for us left the family silver and everything else, and we moved in and took possession and used the abandoned property as we had, under the laws of war, a perfect right to do. We found the famous Twiggs swords there. They have long been on exhibition at Washington. The Twiggs heirs are trying to get all these things back, but they'll have as hard a time to trace that library I'm afraid, as they will the spoons."

The Philadelphia Ledger takes the loftiness out of a word that is in very frequent use. "Styling a public dinner a 'banquet' is something of a mistake; that is, if the use of the word 'banquet' is to add more dignity to the occasion, or even to be more uppish bumptious or 'toplofty.' 'Banqute,' from the French and Spanish, means amall bench, a little seat, and when spelled banqueta means a three-legged stool. It has reference to sitting while eating, instead of taking refreshments in 'stand-up' fashion, as at one of our Wistar parties or at a free-lunch counter. The truth is that 'banquet' is simply a grandiose expression—ambitious and somewhat 'effected.'"

Height of Cruelty.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the pictures of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppression, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc., his Restorative Nervine is unequaled. Fine treatise on "Heart and Nervous Diseases" and marvelous testimonial free. Sold and guaranteed by Chas. H. Buss.

A use has been found for the Soudan. In addition to unlimited quantities of sand the country produces numberless quails, which are imported to London via Egypt, and ultimately find their way to English tables. Never before have so many quails been sold in the metropolitan markets as this season, and never within the memory of dealers has the price been so low. The quail of the desert is also put to another use. It is exceptionally rapid in flight and strong on the wing, and is beginning to be much used in shooting matches. Quails for this purpose are carefully brought over alive, and give, it is said, excellent sport.

It Is Good Work to Give Health.

The only remedy for blood disorders is one that will expel the germs of disease, and make the blood pure and rich. That is best effected by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., a medicine of great value in the treatment of all blood disorders and diseases of the Kidneys. It tones the system and helps to do good work.

A man who will lie for himself without hesitation will recoil with horror from lying for you.

Widow Hulda Hackett's Turnip Patch.

A better shipmaster never sailed the main than Captain Abram Baxter of Nantucket. In the 40 years of his seafaring life he visited every land and crossed every ocean on the globe, and wherever he went he was recognized as a master navigator and downright good fellow. No shipmaster was ever more popular on deck or shore, and like all Nantucket sailors of those primative days he was trustworthy to the core.

But Capt. Baxter was a dry stick. A favorite pastime of his when aboard ship was trying to make his men believe he could invariably determine the exact latitude and logitude of his vessel at any hour of day or night by simply touching his tongue to the mud and sand brought up from the bottom of the sea when sounding. He made this astounding claim with all the apparent honesty of a judge on the bench. But he generally found his crews incredulous concerning it, and it is not on record that a sailor was ever known to believe the yarn.

Captain Baxter was asleep in his cabin one afternoon (or pretended to be) when it occurred to his men that it would be a good time to test his ability to exactly locate his vessel by tasting the soundings under her bottom.

There was a box of turnips down in the scullery covered up in their native loam from the garden of Widow Hulda Hackett of Nantucket of whom the Captain bought the vegetable just before he sailed. With this loam the sounding lead was thickly covered. When the sailors had got everything fixed to their liking they awoke the Captain, told him they had just taken soundings, and were very anxious to know just where their gallant craft was at that particular moment.

Captain Baxter, with an air of confidence born of superior knowledge, touched his tongue to the lead. He smacked his lips. There was a medatative, far-away look in his eye. Again he put his tongue to it. He seemed to grow more thoughtful and somewhat perplexed. A third time he sampled the mud. He had solved the mystery. "Men," said he in excited tone, "Men, Nantucket's sunk! She's gone to Davy Jones's Locker sure's shootin', and the Abigail Jane is sailing right over Widow Hulda Hackett's turnip patch!"

The old Captain was not caught napping. After that nobody on the Abigail Jane ever dared question his ability to give the exact loc

SPECIAL NOTICE.

All Advertisements, to insure insertion in this paper, must be handed in as early as 10 o'clock on Thursday forenoon.

IT IS ALLEN.

The Republican State Convention was held in Tremont Temple, Boston, last Wednesday. It was singularly harmonious and free from gall considering the character of the canvass for candidates that preceded it

Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge was President of the Convention. On taking the chair he made a speech an hour long which was listened to with great interest. It a very clear and able setting forth of the issues of the campaign and his strong words struck just the right chord and everybody cheered it to the echo.

There were only two candidates for Governor before the convention, namely, William W. Crapo of New Bedford, and Charles H. Allen of Lowell. Ex-Gov. Long put the former in nomination in an eloquent speech, and in another equally eloquent General Coggswell, Congressman from Salem District, nominated the latter. The vote stood:

CRAPO, 514
ALLEN, 713

And Allen was chosen the Republican standard-bearer in Massachusetts for 1891. In accepting the honor he made a splendid speech which was enthusiastically cheered from beginning to end.

The remaining nominations made were:

For Lieut. Gov.
WILLIAM H. HAILE.
For Auditor.
JOHN W. KIMBALL.
For Secretary of State.
WILLIAM M. OLIN.
For State Treasurer.
GEORGE A. MARDEN.
For Attorney General.
ALBERT E. PILLSBURY.

This is a ticket that the Russell crowd will fail to faze next November.

The Crapo people fell right in and cheered for Allen just as enthusiastically as though their man had got the nomination.

The Platform made is one that every decent man in the State can stand on and feel at home. It goes in for Civil Service Reform, Purity of the Ballot, Sound Money, The McKinley Bill with the Reciprocity Annex, Public Economy, Reformed Emigrant Laws, strongly upholds and glories in our Public Schools, favors Progressive Temperance, Endorses Judicious Labor Legislation, and invites all friends and lovers of Good Government to come forward and lend a hand towards electing the Republican State ticket.

It was a grand convention.

THE LEGISLATURE.

We fear that the importance of choosing an anti-saloon Legislature this fall is not fully realized by the more respectable classes of people in this State. The selection of members to the General Court will be of greater account than the election of a Governor therefore every temperance voter should be sure to put his ballot next November where it will do the most good.

The rumsellers feel confident of carrying the Legislature in a way to promote their own ends. They pretend to be able to elect a pro-saloon Senate and probably a House of the same character. The re-election of Gov. Russell is deemed a foregone conclusion by them. It is not surprising therefore that the friends and promoters of the stupendous evil that is doing so much towards the destruction of the men of this day and generation feel jubilent.

Temperance voters ought to be up and doing. The place for them to work to the best advantage is in selecting members of the right sort for the Legislature. See to it that only temperance candidates are put up by the caucuses, and then see to it that their election is sure to follow.

COUNCILLOR CONVENTION.

The Republicans of the Sixth Councillor District will hold their convention at Jackson Hall in Lowell at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, Sept. 22, instant, as per announcement in another column of this paper.

The fight for the nomination will take place between Mr. Jefts of Hudson and Mr. Loring of Melrose, with the chances of success about evenly divided.

The delegates chosen to represent this city in said convention are: Abijah Thompson, E. C. Cottle, William Beggs, Griffin Place, E. H. Burdette, George F. Hosmer, Samuel A. Thompson, J. W. Ellard.

☞ Last Friday's Evening Record of Boston was a great paper. It was an anniversary number and a better filled sheet we never wish to see. It doesn't seem but a little while ago when the The Record was given away in the streets of Boston and suburbs, and now it is one of the most prosperous evening papers of the Hub and boasts of close on to 100,000 daily circulation. It is the sauciest and saucy ablest paper that we enjoy the pleasure of a daily perusal of.

☞ We are indebted to Hon. Horace G. Wadlin, who is Chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics and Labor, for copies of late publications by that Department of the State Government of which he is the author. The two volumes received from him the other day were: "Statistics of Labor," and "Statistics of Manufactures," both of which will receive proper attention from the JOURNAL's Statistical Editor in due time.

☞ The Boston Herald says that the Democracy of this State are booming ex-Mayor Douglas of Brockton, the great "Douglas shoe" man, for one of the four delegates at large to the National Democratic Convention next year, with more than a fair prospect of success. Douglas is a great political hustler as well as a remarkably successful business man.

☞ Senator Edwin F. Wyer of this city was one of the Vice-Presidents At-Large of the Republican State Convention last Wednesday.

The best music will be provided.——It is hoped that a General Secretary will soon be found for the Association.

— Any Mayoralty slate next December on which the name of William C. Kenney has not a conspicious place in large letters will most certainly be an imperfect one. There is not a single doubt in the mind of this writer or among the intelligent part of Woburn's voting public but that Mr. William C. Kenney will be "in it" for keeps.

— Miss Elsie R. Francis, the bright young daughter of Mr. J. W. Francis, Janitor of the Public Library ever since it was opened 12 years ago, has gone to Abbott Academy at Andover to complete her education. She graduated from the Woburn High School, '91, in which she ranked high as a scholar. Miss Elsie is going to make her mark some day.

— Mr. Ferguson of the Board of Assessors went into Boston last Tuesday to attend the hearing of Waltham before the Board of Metropolitan Sewerarge Commissioners. Waltham belongs in the Charles River District of the System, while Woburn is in the Mystic Valley District. Woburn's hearing before the Board will follow the finish of the Charles River hearings.

— Rev. Mr. Biggs, a Universalist clergyman, preached in Lyceum Hall last Sunday to an audience highly respectable in numbers and character. He has been pastor of several churches of his denomination in recent years but seeme to have become imbued with the spirit of heresy after the manner of the men of Andover Theological Seminary, and has entered on a "reform" movement which seems to be made up of the odds and ends of all religious creeds extant, and which we think he'll find hard work to succeed in. He means well, especially in his efforts to call in the non-church-goers, and to that extent we wish him well.

— Especial attention is called to the card of Messrs. Henshaw and Perkins in the JOURNAL this week. They are graduates of Harvard and very bright young men. Mr. Henshaw has been tutor at Harvard since his graduation from that old college, and bears all the marks of having been cut out for a teacher. They will build up a famous school yet—Henshaw and Perkins will.

— Tomorrow, if nothing splits, the grand tournament of the Middlesex County Tennis League which was advertised to come off on the courts of the Woburn Lawn Tennis Association on Labor Day will take place on said courts on Mt. Pleasant street, when and where great playing of tennis is anticipated. Several "big guns" will take a hand, and here's hoping our people will win all the prizes.

— The North Woburn Shirt and Overall Co. is an establishment that merits encouragement by our people. Mr. H. F. Dearborn (not Ald. Dearborn), the Manager, is a thorough-paced gentleman who does the fair thing by his employees as well as by his patrons. He employs just now some fifteen girls, and advertises in this issue of the JOURNAL for more. It is a clean, nice, good paying business.

— Mr. John Duncan of Canal street received a pleasant visit from two of his sons last week—Joseph, a prominent banker at Fort Plain, N. Y., and D. A. who resides at Jersey City, N. J., and is Superintendent of the Pullman Car system. They are smart, pushing young gentlemen, and are brothers of Mr. John Duncan, Jr., for some years Manager of the Boston Clothing Company's store in this city.

— Mr. A. A. Fish, mason, and L. W. Perham, carpenter, have been improving the Board of Trade Rooms, Mishawum Club Quarters, and other parts of Dow Block very much. Fish and his men besides plastering all the apartments have given the walls and ceilings a new and livelier tint which makes them more attractive. Lewis's Music School suite have also been much improved by plasterer Fish and his employees.

— "Personals" are getting more and more like "hen's teeth" every week—"few and far between." The return of the tourist and the vacation outist and summer billiter on country cousins makes the reporter feel just like "Othelo's occupation's gone," at least for the present. But the JOURNAL welcomes the summer wanderers back to their homes and old occupations again and hopes they will enjoy "many returns of the same."

— The Ladies' Schumann Quartette of this city is a musical organization too well and favorably known to need any particular commendation from our pencil, and the only excuse we can give for the appearance of this item in these local columns is a wish to call public attention to the Quartette's card on page 2 of this week's JOURNAL. The Ladies' Schumann Quartette is not a venerable organization but it has made many notable hits in the past and won praise and popularity wherever its music was heard last year. The individual members are known to stand high in musical circles and to well deserve the excellent reputation they sustain. Please make a note of the Quartette's announcement in these columns.

— The entire machinery of the public schools of this city was set in motion last Monday morning after a vacation of 11 or 12 weeks. It seemed quite pleasant and natural to see the pupils wending their various ways to the numerous school-houses of the city generally preceeded by teachers willing, if not anxious, to get to work and once more be earning something to keep the wolf away from the door with next winter. Yes, it was rather an interesting spectacle and for one we enjoyed joyed it.

— The professional card of Dr. L. F. Hatch may be found in this copy of the JOURNAL. Already he has found friends here from whom patronage begins to flow into his hands. Dr. Hatch is a thoroughly educated physician of the Alopathic school; is professionally trained in modern ways and practice; has stored up the latest "improvements" in the science of medicine; and those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance say he is a very genial young gentleman.

— If there was ever a circus in this town it was at the Democratic Ward Caucuses last Tuesday night. The result will be two sets of delegates from three Wards at least to the conventions. In their respective Wards Editor Kenney and City Clerk Moreland tried to have the business carried on according to law but they might as well have tried to manage a cyclone—the mobs paid no attention to them, and independent caucuses were held. From all accounts it was hades let loose in some of the meetings.

— Mr. Charles F. Lyford, for many years head salesman for Copeland & Bowser, the well known dry goods house in this city, has been chosen to the important office of General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Cambridge made vacant by the resignation of another very worthy Woburn boy, Alfred H. Whitford, one of the most popular and successful Y. M. C. A. workers in the State. Mr. Lyford is a devout Christian; he has always taken a deep interest in the young, and the people over in Cambridge will like him.

— The neatest "Boston Notion" that has attracted public attention this many a day is the "Food and Health Exposition" which will be opened with proper ceremonies at Mechanic's Building, Huntington Avenue, at 10 o'clock on Monday, Oct. 5. The Exposition, the first ever held of the kind, will run three weeks under the auspices of The Boston Retail Grocers Association, who conceived the idea, organized the Great Show of Foods, and will carry it through. There can be no doubt but that the Exposition will attract big crowds of people from all parts of New England.

— Dea. G. R. Gage visited the old store last Monday, sat an hour at the desk formerly occupied by him, and sold a bill of goods. It seemed like years ago and the visit proved fully as pleasant to Mr. Flint, the proprietor, as to the Deacon himself. While at the store many of his friends called and chatted with him and warmly congratulated him on his greatly improved physical condition, the preservation of his good looks, and on his jolly spirits. Dea. Gage is very much better than he was a year ago, and it is not easy to see why he may not get to be nearly as good as new again.

— Everyone who has heard him preach says Rev. E. P. Telford, the great London Evangelist and for 10 years a London street preacher, is a powerful sermonizer and effective exhorter. He is eloquent, earnest, bound to do all in his power to save men, and his meetings held at 7 o'clock every evening at the M. E. Church are crowded with the best people in the city, and his open-air temperance meetings on the Common every evening are thronged. Mr. Moody says Mr. Telford is one of the greatest of living evangelists and the fruit of his revival labors fully bear out the assertion.

— Managers of the Melrose Lyceum Course have issued a very attractive programme of entertainments for the season of 1891-2, which comprises nine events made up of lectures by the best of orators, music by firstclass artists, readings, special performances, the course to open on the evening of Oct. 27, with a grand concert by the De Vere-Campanini Concert Troupe, and will close on Jan. 25 by the rendition of Haydn's Oratorio of "The Creation." It is a rich bill of fare, the sale of tickets to which will take place at the Town Hall in Melrose at 8 o'clock, Saturday evening, Sept. 26.

— Dr. Sherman Sanborn is a man who likes to see editors of country newspapers happy. There is nothing small about the Doctor anyway. He got back from his fishing trip to Maine last Monday and when he struck this town what should he hand out from among his luggage but a string of "speckled beauties" for the palate of the JOURNAL Editor and his family. They were just abont 12 inches long, plump as partridges, old gold in color, and delicious to the taste. The Doctor was very thoughtful and generous and we and ours were very grateful for the trout from those clear brooks of Northern Maine.

— The picnic of Assembly 2956, K. of L., which was fixed for Labor Day but had to be postponed on account of the rain, was held in Hudson's Grove on the banks of Horn Pond last Saturday and proved to be a great and highly gratifying success. It was attended by many people of both sexes and nearly all ages and everything passed off not only with eclat but to the complete satisfaction to all concerned. Calnan's Orchestra furnished the best of music in generous quantities for the dancing. There were refreshments without limit. The athletic sports were prolific of fun and the prizes gave unbounded satisfaction. The affair was highly enjoyed by every body at it.

— Mr. F. D. Blake broke up his home on Canal street early this week. His wife and child went to California last May, during a large part of the time since which date they have been at the residence of Mrs. Blake's parents at Oakland, across from San Francisco. She is now and has been for several weeks at a large hotel on Howell Mountain, Nappa county, Cal., where she has greatly recruited in health. Mr. Blake is a member of the large shoe manufacturing firm of E. H. Stetson & Co., No. 97 Summer St., Boston, with factory at South Weymouth, in the interests of which he travels nearly all the time. Should Mrs. Blake's health demand it the family will ultimately settle on the Pacific Coast, of which Mr. Blake was a resident from 1874 to 1884, and it is with this possibility in view that the home on Canal street has been broken up and abandoned.

— Last Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wells returned by the Cunard Line of Ocean Steamers to their residence in this city after a most delightful visit of two months at their old home in England. Mr. Wells was a native of Bury-St. Edmonds and Mrs. Wells was from Leiston, and they emigrated to America and came to Woburn 10 years ago where they have lived ever since. While in their native England Mr. and Mrs. Wells visited London, Fakenham, Canterbury, Leiston, Aldburgh, Beccles, and other places familiar to them before coming to this country. They enjoyed the voyage each way and the visit among relatives and friends in England very much indeed.

— Mr. Edward F. Bryant, Secretary of the Pullman Loan and Banking Company at Pullman, Illinois, formerly book-keeper at the Woburn First National Bank, and wife have been visiting Mr. Bryant's parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Bryant of this city, and left yesterday for their home on the shores of Lake Michigan. He has a great many friends here, this being his "My own My Native Land", so to speak, among whom he was kept very busy shaking hands and exchanging courtesies during the few days he and Mrs. Bryant were in our city. Mr. and Mrs. Bryant love Chicago and its environs and have become nearly as good Suckers as are those to "the manor born."

— Last Sunday Rev. Hugh Montgomery preached by invitation to 200 members of No Surrender Lodge of L. O. L. at the M. E. Church who were there as a Lodge supplemented by a large congregation of non-members of the Order. The text which the preacher selected was: "You cannot serve God and Mammon" on which words for a foundation he built up an impregnagable negative answer to the question: "Is 'good' Roman Catholicism consistent with American citizenship?" Copious extracts—almost a verbatim report, indeed—from the M. E. pastor were published in the Boston Traveller of the 14th, which we are unable to reproduce through lack of space.

— Miss Mabel C. Davis of Canal street is a teacher of vocal music of superior gifts and accomplishments and of exceptional success. She was educated by the best of preceptors, among whom she has reached and now occupies an enviable position. She is well and very favorably known in and all about Boston as a soloist and in the season of concerts, etc., she has a plenty of engagements to sing. At present Miss Davis is a member of the Quartet of the Universalist Church in Salem where she commands a handsome salary and is highly esteemed for her rare professional merits. Young people who would be taught vocal music by a person in every way capable of teaching the art in its best form should see Miss Davis and arrange with her for instruction.

— Bright and early yesterday morning William Winn, Esq., of Pleasant street honored the JOURNAL office with the light of his countenance which is always a welcome visitor but unusually so this time on account of a large box of dead ripe "Winn Seedling" peaches raised on his Burlington farm which he brought along for the Editor. They were by far the finest peaches we have set a tooth into this season. Mr. Winn planted the pit from which the tree that bore this box of delicious fruit grew many years ago and it was the only one of the 18 that took root. The "Winn Seedling" has taken first premium year after year at State and County Fairs, and the specimens at the Middlesex Co. Fair now in full feather at Mystic Park, Medford, will no doubt win first honors for peaches. They were lucious.

— In the next issue of the JOURNAL we hope to be able to submit to our readers perfected plans for a "Merchants' Day" to be held very soon in this city. It will probably be gotten up somewhat after the style of the one held last April and proved such a remarkable success. Many of the leading merchants are out of town this week which made it nearly impossible to get the enterprise sufficiently on its feet, or give it such form as to make it safe to publish much about it. Whatever other papers may have to say concerning the matter great caution should be exercised in accepting their statements, or rather, they should be discarded altogether. The only safe plan that can be adopted is to wait until the JOURNAL "says the word," and publishes all necessary information concerning this very commendable move of the Woburn Merchants.

— Tom McCarthy of this city was worsted in 8 rounds in a prize fight with Billy Smith of Australia at the California Athletic Club of San Francisco, Cal., last Tuesday night, for a purse of $1200. McCarthy was lately taken to California by the Club with other professional fighters under contract to engage in any fistic contest which the Club desired. The fight was a big one, but the Australian carried too many guns for the Woburn boy. McCarthy has a good record. He was born in Woburn 23 years ago. He has beaten B. Fitzpatrick in three rounds, Conly in four rounds, Billy Baker in six rounds, Mike Dyer in 10 rounds, John McLaughlin, John Fitzpatrick, John McGillicuddy, George Smith and Mike Nelson in from one to five rounds. He has fought a 10-round draw with Mike Brennan and an 11-round draw with Arthur Upham.

— A JOURNAL reporter says the Winchester V. I. A. did themselves proud yesterday afternoon and last night. They held an exhibition of Fruits, Flowers and Vegetables at the Town Hall and such a spirit of rivalry had been worked up that the display of the farm, garden and orchard products of that town was just simply immense. It was the tallest thing of the kind ever seen in those parts. A grand good supper was furnished for the big crowd of people at low figures and before the guests arose from heavily and very richly laden tables neat oratious, addresses and speeches, all of an agricultural, horticultural and floricultural type of character, were closely listened to and loudly applauded. The Woburn Orchestra composed of 9 pieces—one of the best musical combines anywhere to be found—discoursed the finest of music all the evening and were highly praised for their important contribusions to the delights of the occasion. It was really a very big affair, and everyone enjoyed it hugely.

— In this issue of THE JOURNAL appears a correct and well executed portrait of Mr. F. H. Lewis, Principal of the Lewis Music School in this city, accompanied by a brief biographical sketch of him and a longer one of his musical career and professional triumphs, which we take from the August number of The Keynote of New York City, the leading musical magazine in this country. We understand that the publishers of this monthly, which makes a specialty of portraits, biographies and professional lives of prominent singers, instrumentalists, teachers, and distinguished patrons of the art, have for three years or more been seeking of him the materials needed for a proper notice of Mr. Lewis's work as an organist, pianist and teacher, but not until the present time has he seen fit to furnish them, and it was only after he had investigated and found The Keynote to be firstclass in every particular would he consent to comply with the urgent request of the publishers. The entire publication is highly complimentary to Principal Lewis and his musical career, and is flattering also to Mrs. Lewis.

Massachusetts Schools.

The census report gives fresh proof that "nothing can lie like figures." It shows that the population of Massachusetts has increased 25.57 per cent in ten years, while the public school enrollment has increased but 17.3 per cent; from which it is easily argued that the public school increase is falling behind the gain in population. Consequently the conclusion is inevitable that the public schools are losing in popularity.

What are the real facts? The increase in the number of children of school age—five to fifteen—is but 18.3 per cent, while the increase in enrollment of children of those ages is 16 per cent. The slight difference is accounted for on the ground that the private kindergartens claim many of the children of five years, and the sentiment is decidedly against sending children to school so early. The test years are now from eight to fourteen, and the statistics show that the increase of enrollment between these years is 27 per cent, which is higher than the gain in population. The fact is incontestable, that in the actual school years the increased enrollment in the public schools is ahead of the increase of population; and the only thing which the census figures show is that children do not go to school so early, which is a matter for public rejoicing. The interest and confidence in the public schools was never so great as at present, as these facts prove.—Journal of Education.

A Sensible Suggestion.

Our suggestion that inducing the rank and file of political parties to become contributors of small sums for campaign purposes would be an important influence in bringing out the stay-at-home vote, has been quite generally commented upon by our contemporaries, most of them fully comprehending the real purpose of the suggestion (creating an interest in political affairs and introducing that element of personal responsibility so essential to the best results), and urging some such action by town and ward committees. A few have discovered in what we wrote, merely a plan for raising money, and have spoken slightingly of the suggestion. Modified a trifle, our plan is feasible even along this lower plane—the money getting idea. Suppose there are 600 Republican voters in any town or ward. Is it unlikely that among this number sixty active and energetic men could be found who would be willing to agree to consult with nine other Republicans in the immediate neighborhood of each to review the situation and collect a small sum (say twenty-five or fifty cents) to be turned into a general fund? We believe nothing could be more easily secured than this number of solicitors; and then not only would an ample fund for campaign purposes be secured, but that other more essential thing—the house to house canvas, a coming into touch and sympathy by those who in the main think alike thus securing concerted action—would be accomplished. Will our town committee make the experiment?—Arlington Advocate.

The above plan for raising money for campaign purposes and arousing a deeper interest in the Republican cause is worthy of a hearty trial.

Frederic H. Lewis.

Frederic Henry Lewis was born in Manchester, New Hampshire, July 9, 1856. At an early age, marked talent for music was noticeable. He was placed under the instruction of the late Mrs. Dr. Custer a thoroughly schooled musician from Germany, and he believes to-day, that the unusual success he enjoys, is greatly owing to the first few years of conscientious and competent drilling received under that noted teacher. When about 12 years of age, he made his debut as a concert pianist, before a large and cultivated audience, at one of the principal concerts at Manchester, where he created great furore. Advancing in his study and desiring to take up harmony and organ playing, he secured the services of a supposed competent teacher of these branches in his native city, and plodded along unsatisfactorily for a year or so, then resolved to take an exhaustive and expensive course of study in Boston. 1872 finds him at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, where an examination resulted in securing for the College of Music, Boston University, of which Dr. Tourjee was Dean, one of its best students. After a most exacting course of study, including Harmony, Counterpoint, Composition, History, Theory, Analysis, Organ, Piano-forte and Conducting, of about four years duration, we find him graduating at the head of his class, performing the Rubinstein concerto in D minor, on a hot June day, and also, an organ work of prominence, on the Boston Music Hall Organ. Mr. Lewis's studies were persued under the guidance of such able masters as J. C. D. Parker, Dudley Buck, J. K. Paine, Signor Maggi and Carl Zerrahn. His course in the college was marked by close application to work, frequent appearances at the college concerts and marked display of talent. During this period he was constantly teaching others, and considers he has learned very much in so doing. His career as a teacher has been marked by a steadfast resolution to adhere to a common sense system of work: To cultivate an artistic and quiet style, even at the expense of a too rigid adherence to prescribed mechanical gyrations. Art first, technique secondary. In 1875 he was tendered a position as one of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, by Dr. Tourjee, which he accepted and has filled the position for the past 16 years, without the loss of a term. In 1886 he founded a music school in Woburn, Massachusetts, which is proving so remunerative as to compel him to give up other work of less prominence, and as he has received an additional appointment in Woburn, that of Musical Director at "Ashley Hall," a new and prosperous select school for young ladies, he has severed his Conservatory connection of 16 years duration. In 1878 Mr. Lewis married Annie M. Soule, daughter of F. L. Soule, the indefatigable Secretary of the South-eastern Massachusetts Musical Association and a resident of Taunton. Miss Soule was a prominent piano-forte teacher in Taunton, and now, as Mrs. Lewis, fills an important position in the Lewis Music School, in Woburn, as assistant piano-forte teacher. She is a descendant of Miles Standish, who came over in the Mayflower in 1620. Thus two families of very honorable repute are united. One son, Frederic Percyval Lewis, is already making an enviable reputation as a young pianist at 12 years of age. Mr. Lewis is one of our best American Pianists. His concert programs are models of excellence. His Boston concerts of ten years ago, when he gave much time to concert work, established a reputation equal to the best. His greatest triumph was made at one of the Symphony Concerts in Boston Music Hall, gaining on that occasion, by his "masterly rendering" of Schumann's difficult concerto, a most favorable indorsement of from all of Boston's noted critics. He has established and successfully maintained a course of Free Concerts at his school in Woburn, and also, at "Ashley Hall." He has such a reputation for thorough work, that his services are sought by those who have finished a course, and graduated from the New England Conservatory and wish more thorough instruction. He confines himself to three departments of music study, viz: Piano-forte, Organ and Composition, including Theory, History and Analysis, as far as relates to the above-named branches. Such, then, is a brief outline of the career of F. H. Lewis to date. At the age of 35, we find him occupying an unusually successful position among the musicians of America. A leading teacher in Boston, director of two schools, and at the head of all teachers in New Hampshire, his work including a small portion of teaching in Manchester. His compositions have attracted favorable notice from those best qualified to judge. Only a system of technique has been published. (By O. Ditson Company, Boston). Manuscript works include: A complete Grand Opera of considerable length, several Piano-forte suites, Sonatas, Trios, Studies, other lesser works for piano-forte and organ, also vocal works, sacred and secular. Many have received public performances in Boston and elsewhere, and invariably receive the most favorable notices by the press.

The actual statistics show that, in spite of the new tariff, the prices of cotton cloth, printed cottons, iron nails, steel nails, steel rails, etc., are lower now than they were a year ago.

Under a tariff the capital of the Arlington cotton mills in Lawrence grew from $200,000 to $2,000,000 from 1865 to 1890.

COMMON COUNCIL.

This honorable Body held a meeting on the evening of Sept. 11th inst., with all the members present except President Waldron who had not sufficiently recovered from a very severe illness to permit his attendance. Petition of Charles W. Bryant and others for an electric light on Eastern Avenue was referred to the Committee on Street Lights. ——Petition of Joseph F. DeLoriea for edgestones on the sidewalk in front of his residence on Lawrence street was referred to the Committee on Highways.

The order authorizing the City Treasurer to hire $20,000 for the building and furnishing of the new school at Central Square, and give ten notes of $2000 each, payable yearly, the first one in 1882, was passed in concurrence to a second reading, under suspension of the rules.

The order transferring $1500 from Miscelaneous Department to Schools, Highland School Building Department, and $150 from same department to Military Aid Department, was passed in concurrence.——Order to authorize the sale of land from the Highland Schoolhouse lot, some 14,180 square feet, and also to sell the old schoolhouse was passed in concurrence.

Report of City Auditor for July and August was received and placed on file, the reading being dispensed with.——Report of the Overseers of the Poor for August was received and placed on file without reading. It shows 44 families of 163 persons aided to the amount of $259.24.——The Committee on Highways reported recommending leave to withdraw on the petition of Henry B. Hayes for alterations on Main street. Granted. The same committee recommended leave to withdraw, which was also granted, on the petition of Isaac W. Butler and others for laying out and accepting Tremont street, Ward 5, as a public highway.——Councilman Larkin, of Ward 3, offered an order that an electric light be placed at the corner of Morse and Munroe streets and one at the wooden bridge on Harrison Avenue, west of the railroad. Referred to Committee on Street Lights.

Woburn Co-operative Bank.

There is a large and increasing demand for the money of this prosperous institution. At the next October meeting there will be between $2,000 and $4,000 for sale, and there are a plenty of people waiting for it to be offered.

There was sold at the meeting on the evening of the 10th inst., $600—all the bank had on hand for sale, although there was in its vaults $2,683.78, which parties had previously bought. That sold on the 10th went for from 20 to 30 cents per share premium. It was voted to issue the 10th series of shares of 300, which will be offered for sale at the October meeting. At a meeting held on the evening of the 11th, Friday last, a semi-annual dividend of 3 per cent was declared, while Treasurer Whitcher was able to show a very handsome surplus of $981.52. Such a surplus is unusual with Co-operative Banks generally speaking.

The Bank has a membership of 421. The total number of shares sold is 2,556. The number of real estate loans made is 96, and of share loans 17.

The Bank has been in operation 55 months, which means $55 paid in by the original share-holder, and those first shares are now worth $63.06, a net enhancement in value of $8.06 The amount which the Bank had safely invested in real estate at the meeting on Sept. 10, was $79,425.

Secretary Whitcher reports a brisk demand for the Bank's funds chiefly by young men for building purposes and that the institution is doing all in its power to meet it. The Bank is one of the most prosperous in the State.

William D. Howells' New Story.

Rumor says that the scene of William D. Howells's new story, not yet published, is laid mainly in Boston. This story will not appear in book form for a considerable time as Mr. Howells has sold the right of publication in New York to a leading newspaper for a very large sum. It is reported that the author is now negotiating with the leading Boston newspapers to find a purchaser in that city, and the papers are bidding against each other at a rate which will make Mr. Howells's price a very handsome one.

High School.

The Woburn High School gets larger and larger as the years roll by. Each succeeding graduating class, with rare exceptions (or none at all), is bigger than its predecessor, and if the city keeps on growing in the future as it has in the past two High Schools will become a prime necessity and perhaps more.

This regular and quite considerable annual increase of High School pupils speaks volumes to the credit of the teachers in the Primary and Intermediate branches as well as being an assurance of growth of the city. If the foundation is not well laid the superstructure cannot be a good one; and if boys and girls are not well grounded in the rudiments of learning they will knock in vain for admission into the High School.

Principal Mendum found a large flock of pupils gathered together when he went to his post of duty last Monday morning. After looking the field over with care and deliberation about the first thing he put his hand to was to fulfill his promise to the JOURNAL and make out a list of scholars who had come up from the Primaries and Grammars to enter the High this fall. The result of that piece of work (for which he will please accept the hearty thanks of the JOURNAL) was this, viz.:

Abbie H. Allen, Harry D. Buxton, Ambrey Bonelli, Ethel S. Burbeck, Mabel Burgess, John T. Callahan, Clyde Carleton, Michael J. Clancy, Waldo P. Cutler, Bertha L.Cutler, Waldo P. Converse, Mabel T. Cooper, Emma Laura Felch, J. Berton Ferguson, Mary Louisa Flynn, Helen Burgess Fosdick, Ida M. Hawkins, John F. Hoy, Elizabeth C. Kellelea, Ruby Kentie, Frank W. Knights, Edith M. Leathe, James H. Linnell, Irma F. Lovering, Mary E. Maloney, James F. McCormick, John E. Moore, George C. Munroe, Harry E. Nickles, Maggie A. O'Brien, Ethel H. Perley, Ida L. Robbins, Mary E. Scanlon, Mary Scanlon, Mary J. Smith, Katharina E. Spencer.

SPECIAL STUDENTS.

Florence E. Charman, Luiu A. Simonds, Mary F. Simonds, Emma L. Whitten.

These names constitute a very pretty exhibition of new entries to the W. H. S. and would seem to point to hard work for Principal Mendum during the current School year.

Warren Academy Free Industrial School Exhibition.

An exhibition of the work of the above successfully conducted institution of learning in this city will be given from 2 to 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, Sept. 26, to which everybody is cordially invited.

A miscellaneous display of the products of each of the three departments of the School—Cooking, Sewing, Carpentry, etc.—will be made and opportunities afforded for judging of the progress the pupils have made during the comparatively brief period of the School's prosperous existence. Those attendants who are capable of judging will be surprised beyond measure by the proof of such progress as they will discover in the handiwork of the boys and girls.

With this exhibition the school closes its first term and on that account it is especially desired by Supt. Richardson and the corps of teachers that parents, guardians, and friends of industrial education should attend it and see for themselves what such a school, properly carried on, is capable of accomplishing.

A Classmate on Dr. Crapo.

EDITOR WOBURN JOURNAL:—I am surprised that the Woburn delegation is all against Crapo. I have known Crapo well since 1848. He was my right hand man all through College. He was the idol of his class and in my opinion the best man, all in all, in this class which has President Gilman of John Hopkins University, President Johnston of Indiana University, President Sprague of North Dakato University, Judge McCully of the Supreme Court, H. I., Judge Vanderbury of the Supreme Court of Minn., Senator Stewart of Nevada, and many others the superiors of the writer. He was a fine prose and poetical writer. His prose is quoted as famous in the Stedman and Hutchinson Libraries of American Literature. His College songs have become classic. If he would, he could write National Hymns that the country would prize. He has no "fuss and feathers." He is accesible and considerate of others. He has a manly, solid character—a true man.

CLAIMS FOR GOVERNORSHIP.

In Congress he wrote the text of the law in relation to the Alabama Claims, as I was told. He was on the Committee of Finance and largely moulded the laws as to money matters in the darkest hours of the Republic and shares the honors of financial victory which was almost as great as that over Slavery.

President Porter of Yale replied when I said that the class of '52 now proved that Yale had honored herself in giving Crapo an LL. D.: "Well, he deserved it for his good work in Congress."

Dr. Crapo is a railroad authority and a thorough man of business. I have nothing to say against Mr. Allen. I am glad to know he is a good man; but if Crapo is made Governor Massachusetts will honor herself more than she honors him.

No one has asked me to write this nor am I any the less a citizen because I am a Doctor of Medicine. But I can't keep silence when such a nature's nobleman as Dr. Crapo is ignored in my native city Next to him I would put the Hon. John Cummings. Both of them ought to have been Governors before this.

Sincerely yours,
EPHRIAM CUTTER.

New York, Sept. 10, 1891.

[The receipt of this letter after the JOURNAL had gone to press last week gives it somewhat the character of a "back number" considered as a communication for publication; but we print it in these columns that his former neighbors may see how the Doctor feels on the Gubernatorial question.—ED. JOURNAL].

Montvale.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.—Do you want me, Mr. Editor, to tell you "how the Democratic caucus was carried out in Ward 5" last Tuesday night? Well, Lawrence Martin read the call and read it well. William McDonough said it was wrong because no Councillor was mentioned. Martin replied, "I'm running this thing." James Cogan was appointed Chairman, and James McEvoy, Clerk.

Then ignorance prevailed. No regard for the ballot act was paid. A committee of 5 was appointed to retire and bring in a list of delegates to the various conventions. The following composed the committee: William Flynn, Lawrence Martin, James Dwyer, Thomas Connell, John Walsh, who went out, meditated, came back and reported.

Mr. Flynn and Mr. Dwyer were roughly handled. Ald. Walsh threw off his coat and went for Dwyer. It was "rough and tumble" until Dwyer made his escape back to the hall and reported facts. Flynn was pulled back half a dozen times to the room.

A prominent politician would say to the lot of men he had stuffed with rum, "don't go—I want you." There will be two sets of delegates to the Senatorial convention.

The Republicans will gain a number of votes in this Ward this fall.—BOB.

Boston Theatres.

BOSTON MUSEUM.

Guy Carlton's great success "Ye Earlie Trouble" is drawing large crowds at the Museum and will be the attraction until further notice. The treatment of war and comedy, the stealing of his Majesty's Statue to mould into bullets and Geo. Wilson's impersonation of Ebenezer Buck are some of the leading features that make this play such a success. The play is one of Mr. Carleton's best and is one of the most exciting plays seen at the Museum for years.

PARK THEATRE.

"Cold Molasses" is still winning each race in Neil Burgess' popular play "County Fair." Standing room only is the placard to be seen nightly.

BOSTON THEATRE.

Denman Thompson plays each night to crowded houses and "The Old Homestead" at Swanzy seems more realistic than ever. Several weeks more will hardly satisfy the patrons from present indications.

HOLLIS THEATRE.

This week closes a successful two week's engagement of "Blue Jeans." Monday night Wm. H. Crane in "The Senator" will be here for one week and probably the last time in Boston of this play. Mr. Crane will receive a hearty welcome. The cast includes Messrs. Neil, Frawley, Bergman and Misses Russell, Florence and Foster and others equally popular. "The Senator" is one of Messrs. Floyd & Rosenfeld's Comedies and is under the direction of Mr. Joseph Brooks and will surely draw full houses.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Saturday matinee and evening closes a successful engagement of "Stepdaughter." Next Monday Mr. D. K. Higgins powerful melodrama "Kidnapped" comes to the Grand Opera House and Boston for the first time. It presents realistic pictures of the slums, the home and street and holds the audience so closely that one could not find a dull moment from beginning to end. The play is elaborately mounted, the abduction of the handsome young lady, the patrol wagon filled with police, and drawn by a pair of blooded horses are only a part of the attractions in this realistic production.

THE GLOBE.

"The Power of the Press" has won great success during its run at the Globe and will continue one week more. There are many features of this American melodrama which are worthy of more than passing notice. The hero through drink is falsely accused sent to prison and upon his return is shunned by his former friends, but through the efforts of his faithful wife sets about to prove his innocence which he does and again establishes his honor before the world. The scenic effects add greatly to the situations and make it seem real and it is indeed wonderful and a great success.

TREMONT THEATRE.

"A Texas Steer" opened a two weeks engagement at the Tremont on Monday evening and was received by rounds of applause and a full house. Mr. Hoyt, the author, was loudly called for at the close of the third act. He responded with a short speech thanking one and all for the compliment paid him. The election of the Texas Congressman, his life in Washington, and adventures with bummers, negro office-seekers, and finally with a set of ruffianly politicians who come on from Texas to investigate him are only a few of his trying positions and keep the audience in the best of humor from beginning to end.

Main street has got to be widened sure pop.

The High School opened last week with 123 pupils.

Contrary to all expectations Mr. Arthur Nichols is very nearly well again.

The annual meeting of the Y. M. C. A. will be held in the course of a week or so.

The Unterrified of this town will hold a caucus this, Friday, evening in Town Hall to choose delegates to the various conventions.

Abijah Thompson and wife, after enjoying the summer at the beach very much, have returned their pleasant home in this village for the season.

Mrs. Herrick's cat has found more than her match for size in one at Wakefield. In view of which the Star mournfully sighs:

"I never loved
A dear Gazelle," etc.

The Congregational church's big new organ will be dedicated on this, Friday, evening, by a grand concert in the church, at which Mr. S. B. Whitney will be the organist. A male quartet will sing.

If the JOURNAL knows of anyone in Woburn who would like to buy a balky horse it had better send him down here to buy the animal that is supposed to haul the engine to fires, but don't. That critter's contrariness will cost this town 40 times more than his head is worth one of theee days.

The Star didn't tear its hair so much over Lawyer McCall for Representative last week as it did the week before. Sometimes that sort of a thing is overdone. See Boston Record on Crapo. The Star means well, but it wants to go just a little mite slower—that's all. No doubt Lawyer McCall will get there, but some of our folks would prefer Dr. Geo. P. Brown.

Boston Journal: Samuel J. Elder, Esq., was among the happy arrivals on the Cephalonia at this port yesterday. A moment's chat with him as he was making his way from the boat to Young's Hotel gave assurance that his trip abroad had been thoroughly satisfactory. He was in fine health and spirits, pleased with what he had seen and better satisfied than ever with what he had returned to, as becomes a genuine American.

Boston Herald: Edmund H. Garrett now makes his home in Winchester, near the borders of Mystic pond. Winchester is one of the most picturesquely situated towns in the neighborhood of Boston, and is rich in woodland, water and pastoral scenery of the kind that painters delight in. There is considerable architecture in the town that takes its place charmingly in with the landscape in a semi-rural English kind of way—as, for instance, the town hall with its fine tower viewed from the bridge over the Aberjona river, reflecting itself in the calm water; also, the pretty little Episcopal Chapel on the banks of the stream beside another bridge. J. Foxcroft Cole had his home in Winchester for several years in a beautiful house on a bluff overlooking Mystic pond.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

LESSON XII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 20.

Text of the Lesson, John x, 1-16—Commit Verses, 14-16—Golden Text, Ps. xxiii, 1—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "Verily, verily, I say unto you."

These great and most emphatic words occur so often (some twenty-five times in this gospel) that the careless reader is apt to slight them instead of attaching to them the importance which they deserve. "Verily" is "Amen," and carries us back to Isa. lxv, 16, where we read of "the God of Truth" or "the God Amen" (R. V., margin). "I say unto you" is equal to the "Thus saith the Lord" of the prophets.

"He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

2. "But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep."

3. "To him the porter openeth, and the sheep hear his voice; and he calleth his own sheep by name and leadeth them out."

The porter is the Lord the Spirit, the third person of the Blessed Trinity, who opens the heart to the Lord Jesus and His message as He opened the heart of Lydia (Acts xvi, 14); and who also opens doors for the followers of Jesus (Acts xiv, 27; Cor. xvi, 9; II Cor. ii, 12). His own sheep who hear His voice are those that are truly His, not having merely a name to live, but having life indeed, having sincerely received Himself as their life. As to calling His own sheep by name, see Ex. xxxiii, 12, 17, and Isa. xlii, 1; and remember how He spoke to Simon and Nathaniel and Lazarus and Mary, calling each by name (John i, 42, 47; xi, 43; xx, 16).

4. "And when He putteth forth His own sheep, He goeth before them, and the sheep follow Him, for they know His voice."

He does not drive them out, but He leadeth them out. He does not ask His sheep to go where He has not gone Himself, nor to do what He Himself has not done.

5. "And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers."

The stranger is the thief and robber of verse 1, the shepherds that feed themselves of Ezek. xxxiv, 2, or the idol shepherds of Zach. xi, 17

6. "This parable spake Jesus unto them, but they understood not what things they were which He spake unto them."

Even the disciples understood not many of His sayings (John xii, 16; Luke xviii, 34; Mark ix, 32), so that He had to say to them, "Are ye also yet without understanding? Do not ye yet understand?" (Math. xv, 16, 17). The secret of understanding is simply hearing and believing (Math. xv, 10; Heb. xi, 3) without reasoning or questioning.

7. "Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep."

He is the door by which the sheep enter the fold, for no one can come to the Father but by Him, and there is none other name given under Heaven among men whereby we must be saved (John xiv, 6; Acts iv, 12).

8. "All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not hear them."

He could not possibly refer to such as Moses and the prophets who were before Him in the sense of antecedent to Him, for they were sent by Him and were His faithful witnesses, but the word "before" sometimes signifies "instead of" or "in preference to," as when God said, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me" (Ex. xx, 3).

9. "I am the door, by me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture."

He is not only the entrance to Life and to the Kingdom, but He is the only entrance, and He is an entrance wide open, inviting and entreating all to enter in. Any one, whosoever will, may enter with the assurance of being made welcome (John vi, 37; Rev. xxii, 17).

10. "The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy; I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

The thief or stranger or false prophet is well described in Ezek. xxxiv, and elsewhere in the prophets. His aim is always selfish; he speaks to please the king and the people, that he may have their favor and receive their wealth, or he oppresses that he may enrich himself.

11. "I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd giveth His life for the sheep."

He is also called the Great Shepherd and the Chief Shepherd (Heb. xiii, 20; I Pet. ii, 25). Instead of killing and destroying for His own benefit, like the thief, He suffers Himself to be killed for others.

12. "But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth, and the wolf catcheth them and scattereth the sheep."

Hireling and wolf are all one with thief and robber—that is, they are all on the side of the enemy, and against the sheep and the Good Shepherd. "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad" (Math. xii, 30).

13. "The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep."

He cares only for his hire, as if a minister should think more of his salary than of the souls committed to his care.

14. "I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep and am known of mine."

This is the essential theme of the whole discourse. The under shepherds may receive into the church many who are not His, and may fail to gather in many who are His. "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are His."

15. "As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father. And I lay down my life for the sheep."

At another time He said, "No man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him" (Math. xi, 27). He dwells much upon the oneness of the Father and Himself, and also upon the oneness of believers with the Father and Himself. If we but grasped this great truth more fully we would be more ready to lay down our lives for the brethren, as we are taught in I John iii, 16. See how He repeats again and again the fact of His laying down His life for the sheep; and in chapter xv, 13, He tells us that this is the greatest possible love of man to man. But in Rom. v, 8, the Spirit by Paul calls our attention to the fact that God's love is so far beyond ours that He died for sinners.

16. "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

He is speaking to Jews, but His heart goes out to the Gentiles yet to be gathered to form the great company out of all kindreds and peoples and tongues and nations.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

The Herald prints conspicuously a comunication attempting to discredit the existence of American tin plate industry, but it makes no attempt to explain how it is that if the tin plate industry is a myth, we are enormously increasing our imports of pig tin, as was stated in its columns the other day.

THE CALF ON THE LAWN.

I'm goin to hitch this 'ere young caff out here

He'll stay right here an chaw the grass till the

He'll chaw thet corner off today until he's et it

Looks bad, yer say, to see a caff out in a man's

An blattin like a barnyard on this stylish boolevard;
But that air caff shall eat that grass until I get

An if he feels like blattin, w'y, I reckon he

Across the way wuz parstchure lan, ware

My caff wuz then hitched in my yard fer the

An no darn enterprisin dood cum roun to

W'en this road growed a village street my caff

An now the street it swells 'ith style—a city

But I will hitch this 'ere young caff out here in

He'll stay right here an chaw the grass till the

You say the way I carry on makes the hull city

Wall, let 'em laff; this 'ere young caff shall stay

An if I hear 'em laff too hard I'll trot out the

I'll hitch 'em both to the same stake right here

An let 'em stay an chaw the grass till the hull

She Was Awfully Tired.

The car was pretty well filled, but the bright faced miss who tripped in with her music roll and parcels managed somehow to squeeze in beside an old colored man, who, half asleep, opened his eyes for a moment and then slept right on. Whether it was the warm weather, or the lulling speed of the car, or the remembrance of dreamy music, or of cleverly concluded bargains cannot be determined, but this is certain, that the young lady fell beautifully asleep, and gently her head rested on the shoulder of the old colored man.

The passengers began to get out in a little while, and presently the two sleepers were the only occupants of their side of the car. How sweetly they slumbered, and how sympathetically the observer smiled until it became irresistible, and the smile broke into a laugh, and the laugh into the old fellow's dreams, and his great hand slipped and fell upon her little one, and she awoke. Her face was a study. —Washington Post.

The Emperor as a Business Manager.

When I think of the emperor as the business manager of a practical political corporation I am constantly inclined to look for the key to his success and popularity in Germany by quoting the laconic opinion of him expressed by an American officer who was presented to him for the first time at the Baltic maneuvers in 1890. He came away from his audience flushed with excitement, and I expected a vigorous report from the fact that this officer had been drawing his impressions of Germany principally from Paris and St. Petersburg.

"What do you think of him now?" I said.

"Immense; he has a genuine Yankee head on him."

It only need be added that this compliment was the highest in the court vocabulary of my fellow countryman.—Poultney Bigelow in Century.

A Sermon That Stopped a Horse.

The late Archbishop Tait, of Canterbury, once made an effective use of a sermon. Driving down Holloway hill he was confronted by a runaway horse, with a heavy dray, making straight for his carriage. He threw a sermon in its face. The horse was so bewildered by the fluttering leaves that it swerved and paused, the driver regained control, the sermon was picked up, and the bishop proceeded on his way. "I don't know," he said to his companion, the present Archbishop of York, "whether my sermon did any good to the congregation, but it was of considerable service to myself."—San Francisco Argonaut.

How a Caterpillar Eats.

The caterpillar feeds with two saw-edged jaws, working transversely, and uses them to such good advantage that he eats three or four times his own weight every day. Toads, tortoises, turtles and most lizards have no teeth. Frogs have teeth in their upper jaws only. Anteaters, sloths and armadillos have no teeth.—New York World.

Masks for the face are made of asbestos. It is said that the heat from the hottest fire cannot penetrate through them to the skin. Air for breathing is supplied through a tube from beneath the mask, so that the flame or the burned atmosphere is not inhaled. In this way the discomfort of working directly in front of retorts and furnaces is greatly relieved.

People who through accident are obliged to use a glass eye should have one for night and one for day use. The pupil of the natural eye is smaller by day than by night. A glass eye that looks all right during business hours gives the wearer an uncanny appearance at night.

In the Portuguese settlement of Ambriz, Africa, the seeds of the custard apple are strung upon thread for necklaces; and in the Kew museum are rosaries made of olive seeds and other fruit stones.

Are Dogs Afraid of Ghosts?

"Perhaps you are not aware," said a young lawyer to the scribe, "that dogs and horses are as much afraid of ghosts and other uncanny or mysterious things as are the most timid of the human race. I proved it one time on two dogs, at any rate. Not long after the war the negroes were so bad about our place in Kentucky that it was with difficulty that we could keep our belongings on our place. Every other method having failed I finally hit upon the plan of frightening them by appearing before them dressed as a ghost is said to habilitate itself.

"Of course, the negroes were successfully frightened away from us, but upon one occasion I also frightened our two watch dogs as badly as any negro ever was frightened by ghostly apparition. The dogs were fierce fellows, and would allow no stranger or strange thing on the place; but one moonlight night they came upon me in spectral attire. The dog that first caught a glimpse of me just humped up his back until all four of his feet covered not more than six square inches of Kentucky soil. His eyes stood out and his hair stood up, and he began moving backward, never for an instant taking his eyes off my figure.

"His companion came up, went through the same movement, and both began backing cautiously from me. And as long as I could see them they put distance between us in that way. A few moments later I heard them barking at home, half a mile distant. They had taken refuge under the house, and it was four days before we could coax them out again."—Charleston Democrat.

Hard to Swallow.

The teller of "tall stories" generally finds his rebuke awaiting him in an intelligent company. On one occasion, when several physicians had met, the conversation ran to the subject of the extraordinary things which a human being might swallow and still live.

The familiar stories about swallowing silver dollars, sets of false teeth, and so forth, had been related, when Dr. Longbow began to speak.

"Two years ago," he said, "I was called in great haste to attend a carpenter in my town, though the message said that the man was beyond doubt already dead, for he had, while holding a large gimlet in his mouth at his work, suddenly been taken with a fit of hiccoughs and swallowed the gimlet.

"But when I arrived at the man's house I found him very comfortable. The gimlet, gentlemen, gave him no trouble at all to digest."

There was silence for a moment. Presently one of the other doctors remarked:

"With you for his physician, Longbow, the man was lucky that it was only a gimlet that he undertook to swallow."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, if he had tried to swallow one of your stories it would have choked him to death."—Youth's Companion.

A Laconic Correspondence.

It is said that the celebrated German theologian Schleiermacher was rather inclined to save than to spend money.

He was at one time quite ill, and sent for a renowned physician, Dr. Grafe, who was court physician at the time, and whose son became the great oculist.

Schleiermacher recovered, and when fully restored to health he sent a polite note to Dr. Grafe, expressing his gratitude and inclosing four louis d'or, begging the physician to accept this small sum as a token of his appreciation of the services which had been rendered him.

The following day he received his gold pieces again, accompanied by the following laconic note from the great physician, "The poor I cure for nothing; the well to do pay me according to the regular 'medicine tax'; the rich reward me lavishly, according as it suits their pleasure!"

Thereupon the clergyman sat down and sent Dr. Grafe this still more laconic answer:

"The four louis d'or are received back with gratitude. The poor Schleiermacher!"—Exchange.

A Somnambulist the Thief.

A somnambulist story comes from Georgia. The somnambulist mysteriously lost four suits of clothing, one after the other, and his son, unknown to the father, thought he would set a trap for the thief. Invariably the thefts were committed at night. So the son hid himself in the room. The thief came, but it proved to be the father himself. He got out of bed, dressed himself, walked down to the river, and after placing his garments in the hollow of a tree, took a swim; finishing, he couldn't remember where he had put his clothing, and so returned home without it, all this while being asleep, and even not awakening on tumbling into bed again. It was in this manner that he had lost all four suits.—Philadelphia Ledger.

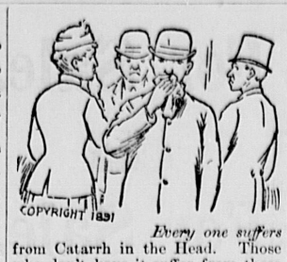
Calls for Domestic Animals.

In controlling the movements of domestic animals by the voice, besides words of ordinary import, man uses a variety of peculiar terms, calls and inarticulate sounds—not to include whistling—which varies in different localities. In driving yoked cattle and harnessed horses teamsters cry "get up" (usually "git ep"), "click, click" (tongue against the teeth), "gee," "haw," "whoa" or "wo," "whash," "back," etc. All of the above are used in English speaking countries. In Continental Europe the same terms are expressed as "arre," "arri," "juh," "jahi," "gio," etc.—St. Louis Republic.

Take Warning

And don't let the germs of that vile disease, catarrh, take root and flourish in your system. Sulphur Bitters will prevent this and make you strong and healthy.—Editor Weekly Press.

Should the telephone girl wear "yeller" shoes in summer?



Every one suffers from Catarrh in the Head. Those who don't have it suffer from those who do. It's a disease you can't keep to yourself.

Here are some of the symptoms: Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid, and offensive; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. But only a few of these likely to be present at once.

The cure for it—for Catarrh itself, and all the troubles that come from it—a perfect and permanent cure, is Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. The worst cases yield to its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties. A record of 25 years has proved that to its proprietors—and they're willing to prove it to you.

They do it in this way: If they can't cure your Catarrh, no matter how bad your case, or of how long standing, they'll pay you $500 in cash. Can you have better proof of the healing power of a medicine?

Some Habits of the People in the Bahamas.

There are about 10,000 people in Nassau, three-fourths black, and of the 7,500 blacks you see about 7,000 on the streets every day. They are nearly all barefoot, though some of the old women shuffle along with their toes stuck in slippers, and now and then a proud young girl limps along in shoes. They carry their parcels on the top of their heads.

They do not sing or chant on the streets, but they do a great deal of shouting at one another. Conversation usually begins when the participants therein are about a block apart, and continues uninterrupted till the same distance, or perhaps a block and a half, has been put between them by their slow and lazy footsteps.

The conversations are usually accompanied by a strange swinging of the hands. The gestures are not definite or emphatic—nothing is in the Bahamas but the bite of the mosquitoes—and are not often belligerent. What their meaning is no one can find out.

This aimless swinging of the arms and hands is a peculiar characteristic of the negroes here. Even while alone, standing or walking in the street, with heads down and apparently unconscious of what they are doing, fully one-half of the adults move their hands and arms about, spreading their fingers and working the wrist joints almost constantly. Even the policemen, who are all colored and great dandies in the white uniforms and helmets, have the same habit.—Cor. Chicago Herald.

She Didn't Want Much.

Among the arrivals on a Hamburg ship recently were a German widow and her seven china eyed, flaxen haired stair steps. Being turned over by the authorities to a German paternal society of the city, the widow complacently sat down upon their temporary weekly allowance, awaiting its evolution by the most natural laws into a permanent weekly allowance. The German Ladies' Aid society appointed a committee to wait upon her Hamburgian majesty and propose some plan of reasonable investment on the part of the society whereby the widow could undertake the support of herself and family. She listened amiably to their propositions of a cow, a goat, a washerwoman's outfit, but evidently demurred at such humble walks through American life. Finally, being asked to suggest something, this is what she said:

"Ef you blease, laties, dis is wot I tinks. I tinks ef you laties would so gute be, dat you call a wisit upon de mayor of New Yorruk, und ask would he so gute be dat he gif me but one of dose so many stfreet cars dat on de Broadway strasse run—I kann meinselb de horses make to go, und I will meinselb see dat you gute laties wot have so helped me gute, must no money pay for riten. I kann much money maken von so many man dat rite all de day in my stfreet car."—New York World.

Shirt and Pigtail.

A correspondent sends to The Youth's Companion a copy of a letter written by an English sailor on his return from an India voyage. It is dated "Warren Hastings, East Indiaman, off Gravesend, March 14, 1813." One thought was uppermost in the writer's mind, as will be perceived by the hastiest reader.

DEAR BROTHER TOM—This cums hoppin to find you in good health, as it leaves me safe anchor'd here yesterday after a pleasant voyage, doable short and few squalls.

Dear Tom—Hopes to find poor old father stout, and am quite out of pigtail. Sights of pigtail at Gravesend, but unfortunately not fit for a dog to chor. Dear Tom—Captain's boy will bring you this, and put pigtail in his pocket when bort. Best in Lannon at the black boy in seven diles, where go acks for the best pigtail, pound of pigtail will do and am short of shirts, only took two whereof one is wored out, and t'other most, but don't forget the pigtail, as I 'aven't 'ad a quid to chor since a Thursday.

Dear Tom—as for shirts, yer size will do only longer, I like 'em long—get one at present—best at Tower Hill, and cheap—But be particler to go to 7 diles at the black boy for the pigtail, and dear Tom—acks for pound of best pigtail, and let it be good—captain's boy will put the pigtail in his pocket Boy likes pigtail so ty it up strong.

But dear Tom, shall be up on Monday, there or there-abouts—according not so particler about the shirt, as the present can be washed, but dont forget the pigtail without fail, and so am your loving brother. T. P.

P. S.—be sure you dont forget the PIGTAIL.

Small Change in Plenty.

A well dressed and not bad looking woman, with a small handbag, rushed into up town shops and stores the other day for "just one cent to make up five cents for car fare." She took it systematically, and nearly everybody she came across responded to her appeal. A group of gentlemen in a cigar store each contributed a penny—all but one. He said apologetically that he was sorry, but that he had nothing less than half a dollar.

"I can change it," she said promptly.

The three men opened their eyes, but she saw her bad break at the same moment and slipped away with a faint smile creeping up from behind her ears. —New York Herald.

A Mushroom Caterpillar.

New Zealand sends large quantities of mushrooms to San Francisco and also to Hong Kong. The Chinese eat it, use it for medicine, and make a fine dye out of it. One remarkable species grows out of the body of a large caterpillar, practically converting the animal into a vegetable.—Indianapolis Journal.

A Warning to the Supersensitive.

Primary—What did you do that she should leave you on the wedding tour and return to her father?

Secundus—I kept the promise she exacted of me that we should not be taken for a newly married couple.—New York Epoch.

No one doubts that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy really cures Catarrh, whether the disease be recent or of long standing, because the makers of it clinch their faith in it with a $500 guarantee, which isn't a mere newspaper guarantee, but "on call" in a moment. That moment is when you prove that its makers can't cure you. The reason for their faith is this: Dr. Sage's remedy has proved itself the right cure for ninety-nine out of one hundred cases of Catarrh in the Head, and the World's Dispensary Medical Association can afford to take the risk of you being the one hundredth.

The only question is—are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the risk? If so, the rest is easy. You pay your druggist 50 cents and the trial begins. If you're wanting the $500 you'll get something better—a cure!

Bolivar (an enthusiastic advocate of cremation)—"I wrote the Cremation Company last week asking them to file my formal application to be cremated." Van Dyke—"Ah! Did you recieve a reply?" Bolivar—"Oh, yes. They told me to come early and avoid the rush."

Under the old law the duties on our imports were $3 6 per capita in 1889 and 1890, under the new law they will be only about $2.50, or less than at any time since 1863. But meanwhile our foreign trade has largely increased.

NOT MOURNING FOR THE BUFFALO.

A Retired Army Officer Who Sees No Reason for Lamenting Him.

The disappearance of the buffalo has been the fruitful occasion of much unreasonable sentiment. Men who never saw a buffalo except in a menagerie are especially given to lamentation. An eastern paper recently gave up a column or more to one of the mourners who sorrowed with much satisfaction because of the disappearance of large game from the face of the earth. The sad fate of the hippopotamus, the rhinoceros and other useful quadrupeds is often bemoaned, but the American bison comes in for the largest amount of cheap sympathy. Those who enjoyed the personal acquaintance of great numbers of buffalo are not numbered among the eulogists.

A retired army officer, who in his day saw much service on what was called "the plains," said the other day: "I am tolerably familiar with the buffalo and feel justified in saying that one might with equal sense lament the disappearance of the bobtail car. When I first struck the plains those animals bounded and abounded in countless numbers. I remember that once when marching down the Republican valley for miles we passed a herd of the enormous bovines moving up the same valley.

"They traveled about three miles an hour and we about four, and yet, though going in opposite directions, we were over six hours in passing the herd, which almost filled the valley. Any one who feels that he is a born mathematician can figure out how long that herd was. Compute it for yourself. The heard averaged, I would think, about 300 yards in width. Quite a large aggregation of tough beef, wasn't it?

"Hunting the buffalo was never sport; a plainsman never did it except for food and hides. Occasionally some English tourist or all around Nimrod would come out west armed with a complete arsenal of rifles and shotguns of the most cumbersome make and elaborate finish. He would proceed to butcher a few stupid bulls, have the hides carefully dressed and, I presume, exhibit them with appropriate blood curdling yarns in the halls of his ancestors.

"I think that with the exception of a few sentimentalists and naturalists, few see any reason to regret that the buffalo no longer cumbers the earth. He required about three times the acreage an American steer does for subsistence, his meat was tough and flavorless, his robe not half as good as a Minnesota blanket and five times as heavy, and his habits were inconsistent with a settled country. No, we might as sensibly lament the loss of the trees that once stood where now are fields of corn and wheat. The buffalo served his purpose, fulfilled his destiny, and has simply, like other things of the earth, passed away in the Lord's good time."—Kansas City Times.

Where She Could Hear the Clock Tick.

Bertha is a blue eyed little German girl from Gotham court who had never before seen the grass and the trees. Bertha has a poet soul in that squat, sturdy body of hers. "I never saw a child like her," said the good woman of the farm where the child had staid. And it is very likely such children are not common.

"Was it very strange in the country?" I asked her.

"I could hear the clock tick all the time," answered the child.

Go down to Gotham court and you will understand that. All day there is the long rumble of the city's streets. Sometimes the sound is loud and smites sharply on the nerves; sometimes it is heavy and dull, or pierced through with the cries of men and of little children. Can you think what it would be to live where you could never be sure that you heard the sound of your timepiece, and to come to hold it as the strangest of surprises that you could "hear the clock tick all the time?"—Harper's Bazar.

The First Friction Matches.

The first really practicable friction matches were made by an English apothecary named Walker in 1827. He coated splints of cardboard with sulphur and tipped them with a mixture of sulphate of antimony, chlorate of potash and gum. Each box, holding eighty-four matches and sold for one shilling, contained also a folded piece of glass paper, which was to be pressed together while the match was drawn through it.

Three years later another ingenious person named Jones, in London, patented the idea of making a small roll of paper, soaked with chlorate of potash and sugar at one end, with a thin glass globule filled with strong sulphuric acid attached at the same point. When the sulphuric acid was liberated by pinching the globule it acted upon the chlorate of potash and sugar so as to produce fire.—Washington Star.

Only Half Correct.

Matthew Arnold, next to Whistler, was, perhaps, the most colossal egotist of his time. After his return to London from his first lecturing tour in this country, he visited old Mrs. Proctor, widow of the poet "Barry Cornwall" and mother of Adelaide Proctor. Mrs. Proctor, who was then eighty years old, in giving Mr. Arnold a cup of tea, asked him, "And what did they say about you in America?" "Well," said the literary autocrat, "they said I was conceited, and they said my clothes did not fit me." "Well, now," said the old lady, "I think they were mistaken as to the clothes."—San Francisco Argonaut.

HOW CROWS CATCH CRABS.

Watching Patiently for These Delicate Shellfish for a Meal.

Fishermen in Havre de Grace at the mouth of the Susquehanna river, tell amusing stories of the way crows catch crabs and prepare them for eating. When the crows first come in the spring they visit the streams connecting bay and ponds every morning looking for crabs. They commonly arrive before crabs begin running, but the crows exhibit great patience, sometimes waiting ten or fifteen days.

The crows scan the stream from small tree tops or mounds of sand. Others stand on the banks of the rivulet with heads cocked sidewise and an eye staring at the water. When the crabs begin running the crows dive into the water from any coign of vantage near by, clutch the crab, soar into the air and drop their prey with great precision on the stone covered beach which fringes the bay. By this means the crabs are reduced to pulp, and the crows, with much wing flapping and discordant cawing, voraciously bolt the meat.

Captain Tom Carroll, of Chincoteague, says he once saw five crows teasing a crab. One of the birds caught and carried it to a big dry sandbar. There it was put down. The crow's cawing brought five of his tribe. They pulled it about, turned it upon its back and fumed over it. These gymnastics were accompanied by hoarse chattering and a gurgling sound, which Carroll avers was laughter. To vary the sport they would make believe to fly away, but dropped softly to the sand forty or fifty feet off.

From that point the dusky quartet of practical jokers kept their eyes intently fixed on the crab rolling along in the direction of the water, a hundred yards away. The crows, without a sound, craned their necks watching their hard shell victim flopping laboriously through the soft, dry sand. Suddenly they broke into a wild chorus of caws and made after the crab. One picked it up and soared away to the beach, followed by his fellows. There he was dropped to death and the crows flew away to their roost.—New York Recorder.

The Telephone Has Made Them Stout.

The telephone is more used in Honolulu than any other place. There are two rival companies in the island, and the rates are so cut that every soda water stand has its telephone, and the marketing is all done over the wire. Even railway trains are started by telephone, and men use their legs as little as possible, now that the facilities for verbal intercourse enable them to avoid to a considerable extent the inconveniences of a hot climate.

An English electrical engineer who has been engaged in making a series of surveys in the island says that the introduction of the telephone has had a somewhat ludicrous sequel. The ladies, who were wont to do their marketing with more energy than could be looked for in such a warm climate, now stay at home and send their orders by telephone, and the business men to a great extent follow suit. The consequence is that there is a marked accession of avoirdupois among the better classes of the community, male and female. This phenomenon, which is vouched for as a fact, can be easily understood when the cessation of accustomed exercise is taken into consideration.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Future of Silk.

The days of the excessive costliness of silk have gone by, and the probability is that in the next few years large additions will be made to the silk producing area of the world. Southern California, many parts of the southern states, the West Indies, Mexico, Central America, the northern part of South America and large districts in Africa are excellently well suited to the growth and development of the worm, as well as of the mulberry on which it feeds, and in not a few localities arrangements are now being made, both in this and other countries, by planting mulberry groves to prepare for silk culture. Good silk is still costly enough, but the change in price from the time when Leicester imported his famous breeches to that of the present day augurs well for a still further reduction in the future.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The proprietors of Ely's Cream Balm do not claim it to be a cure-all, but a remedy for catarrh, cold in the head and hay fever. It is not a liquid or a snuff, is easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once. 50 cents.

I had catarrh of the head and throat for five years. I used Ely's Cream Balm, and from the first application I was relieved. The sense of smell, which had been lost, was restored after using one bottle. I have found the Balm the only satisfactory remedy for catarrh, and it has effected a cure in my case.—H. L. A Mystery Explained.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and a fine book containing many marvelous cures free at Chas. H. Buss's Drugstore, who also sell and guarantee Dr. Miles' celebrated New Heart Cure, the finest of heart tonics. Cures fluttering, short breath, etc.

A Good-Looking Face

We like to see. Yet Erysipelas disfigures the features and the disease is as dangerous as it is repulsive. It is sometimes called "St. Anthony's Fire," and often ends in sudden death. S. B. Carpenter, Grandville, N. Y., had it in both legs, and was cured by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y. This medicine excels all others for the blood.

Every thousand more consumers in a city means higher value to the outlying farms and a higher price for their produce. The tariff tends to increase the number of consumers in the city.

Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup accomplishes its object so quickly and so satisfactorily that its praises are in the mouth of every mother. Sold for 25 cents.

Persons living in unhealthy localities can easily avoid all bilious attacks by taking an occasional dose of Laxador. Price only 25 cents.

"How contagious the gentleman behind the bat is," said a Boston girl at the base ball match.

"Papa says Mr. Blanque is a promising young man." Her Sister—"He is, indeed; he's engaged to six girls!"

Now Try This.

It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a Cough, Cold, or any trouble with Throat, Chest or Lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is guaranteed to give relief, or money will be paid back. Sufferers from La Grippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a sample bottle at our expense and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Trial bottles free at F. E. Lovell's Drug Store. Large size 50c. and $1.

The more markets the farmer enjoys, the better prices he will get for his produce. The more manufactories there are, the more commercial enterprises there are, the more markets he will have; and the tariff builds factories and creates commerce.

SHE IS ENGAGED,

AND THIS IS WHAT IS FOUND LYING OPEN ON HER TABLE.

Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the hand above;
A woman's heart, and a woman's life,
And a woman's wonderful love?
Do you know you have asked for that priceless thing
As a child might ask for a toy,
Demanding what others have died to win,
With the reckless dash of a boy?

You have written my lesson of duty out,
Men like you have questioned me,
Now stand at the door of my woman's soul,
Until I shall question thee.
You required your mutton shall always be hot,
Your socks and your shirts be whole;
I require your heart to be as true as God's stars,
And as pure as is heaven your soul.

You require a cook for your mutton and beef;
I require a much greater thing;
A seamstress you're wanting for socks and shirts;
I look for a man and a king—
A king for the beautiful realm called Home,
And a man that his Maker, God,
Shall look upon as He did on the first
And says: "It is very good!"

I am fair and young, but the rose will fade
From my soft young cheek one day;
Will you love me then, 'mid the falling leaves,
As you did 'mid blossoms of May?
Is your heart an ocean, so strong and deep,
I may launch my all on its tide?
A loving woman finds heaven or hell,
The day she becomes a bride.

I require all things that are grand and true,
All things that a man should be;
If you give me this all I would stake my life
To be all you demand of me.
If you cannot be this—A laundress and a cook
You can hire—and little to pay;
But a woman's heart and a woman's life
Are not to be won that way.

A YOUNG MAN SAVED.

Julius May was a lawyer—that is, he was going to be one—it spending more or less hours every day in Reed & Tappen's offices could produce the arranged-for result. At first the prospect had been pleasant enough to him, but a course of winter amusements in New York must have some effect in Mr. May's case had not been, in a legal sense, satisfactory.

Music and drama, libraries bound in Russia, instead of calf; fine ladies and fancy balls, London tailors and Fifth avenue boarding houses—these, and many other splendid things, had become very agreeable to the newly-fledged exquisite. But his little fortune was rapidly disappearing, and his little salary was so extremely small that it was scarcely worth counting as a means toward these desired results.

What must he do? He had asked himself this question almost every hour lately, and had never got but one answer—"Marry!" At first he had met the suggestion with a negative shrug, and a muttered "Nonsense!" but it had come back every time with a more persuasive appearance. Finally, one cold, windy night in March, he determined to devote an hour or two to a consideration of his chances in the matrimonial market. After a careful and honest review, he was compelled to admit that among all the rich and splendid girls whom he had habitually spoken of as crazy about him, only two were likely to be crazy enough to entertain the thought of marrying him—pretty little Bessie Bell and the exceedingly clever Nora St. Clair. He was quite sure both of these lovely creatures adored him; the only point to settle was which he liked better; or, rather, which it would be best for him personally and commercially to choose.

Bessie was the only child of a rich widow, who lived in excellent style, and who was perfect mistress of her income. She was a sweet, dainty little blonde, always ready to dimple into smiles, and never at a loss for just the most agreeable thing to say.

Nora was a close friend of Bessie's but in all respects a contrast. She was no tenderly nurtured heiress, but a poor, brave girl who had by the force of intellect, study and hard work gained an enviable position in the literary world. Her income from her writings was very handsome; she visited in the most aristocratic circles; she was charming in person and manners, and dressed like the rest of the fashionable world. But then Julius felt that in every sense she would not only be the "better half," but probably the four-fourths of the house; and that his personality would simply sink into Mrs. May's Husband.

So Bessie won the decision, and he determined, if his new suit came home the next day, to offer Miss Bell the handsome person which it adorned. For, to tell the truth, he was a handsome fellow; and if this work-a-day world had only been a great drawing-room, with theatrical alcoves and musical conservatories, why, then Julius May would have been no undesirable companion through it.

The new suit came home, and fitted perfectly; the tonsorial department was equally effective in results; every precaution had been taken, and he felt an earnest success in the very prosperity of these preliminaries. He rang at Mrs. Bell's door; before the footman could open it, a gentleman came quickly out, threw himself into Mrs. Bell's carriage, and, in a voice of authority, ordered the coachman to drive to the wharf.

The incident scarcely attracted his attention until, upon entering the parlor, he saw pretty Bessie watching the disappearing vehicle with tearful eyes. She glided into her usual beaming, pretty manner; and very soon Mrs. Bell came in and asked him to remain to dinner.

After dinner, Mrs. Bell's clergyman called about some of the church's charities, and as the young people were singing they went into the library to discuss them. Now was the golden moment, and Julius was not afraid to seize it. What do men say on such occasions?

Do they ever say what they intended? Do they remember what they say? I don't believe Julius did; for before he had done—right in the middle of a most eloquent sentence—Bessie laid her hand on his with a frightened little movement, saying:

"Mr. May, please, sir, please do stop! Surely you know that I have been engaged ever since I was eighteen to Professor Mark Tyler. Everybody knows it—we had a betrothal party—he is just gone to Europe for six months that is what I was crying about; why, all our set knew about it, though he has been away for nearly two years in the Rocky Mountains and California. Mamma said we were to wait until I was twenty-one, but I love him just the same—and I am quite sure I never did anything to make you think I could care for you in this way, Mr. May;" and Bessie looked just a little bit indignant.

"I have had the honor, Miss Bell, of being your escort all winter."

"Oh, dear! Did you think I was going to marry you for that? In all our pleasant, little dinners and drives and dances, is there matrimonial speculation? That would indeed be dreadful!" She loved the professor too truly; she had been simply pleasant and friendly to him as she had been to all her other gentlemen friends, who, however, had had too much sense and modesty to misconstrue her kindness. Then she walked to her pretty little aviary and began cooing to her birds. Julius hardly remembered what passed afterward, except that he received a cool courteous "Good-night, sir," in answer to his "Farewell," and that he found himself walking round Madison Square in a very unenviable state of mind.

To this speedily succeeded the thought of Nora; he must see her to-night; to-morrow Bessie would give her own version of his conduct, and then—well, he would not acknowledge that that could make any difference in Nora's liking for him. "And yet," he murmured, "women are such uncertain creatures." Where his own interests were concerned, Julius was not wanting in a certain strength and decision of character, and in less than an hour after his rejection by Bessie Bell he had so far composed and encouraged himself as to determine upon a visit to Nora, though whether he should offer himself to her or not was a point he left to the development of circumstances.

He found Nora at home, and, moreover she seemed disposed to welcome him with extra cordiality. He noted with admiration the refined and cultured aspect of the room—the luxurious copies of her favorite authors—the artist's proofs of rare engravings—the blooming ferneries and bowers—the cosy student's chairs—the sofa, warm rugs and carpet—the dancing firelight—the rich silk and lace that robed the lithe, graceful figure of Nora—all these things had a fresh and delightful charm in them. In a little while he managed to make the conversation drift toward Bessie.

Would she be married when the professor returned from Europe?

"Oh, dear, no; not till she is twenty-one."

"Is it not rather a mesalliance?"

Nora's eyes grew dangerously bright.

"Certainly not. Professor Mark Tyler is a wonderful chemist and geologist—a man of wold-wide fame. It is a great honor for Bessie to be loved by such a great soul."

"Ah, indeed! I had not thought of it in that light. People usually spoke of a mesalliance with regard to money affairs."

"Yes I know," replied Nora, "and just there they are frightfully wrong—there are worse mesalliances than disparities in fortune—but, however, here there is none of any kind; the professor has found shemistry a sufficiently rich alembic with a residum admitting of no kind of doubt."

"Will you be glad when she marries?"

"Very."

"Yet you will lose your friend?"

"By no means. She will remain at home, and the professor and I are very old friends; he knew me when I was a little girl."

"Indeed! Perhaps you may marry before Miss Bell."

"I may do so. I have no specific against doing such a thing eventually; but I am quite sure I shall not do so immediately."

"Why not?"

"Because I cannot afford it. I am just one of those women who would be likely to make a mesalliance—in money matters—and I repeat, I cannot afford it just yet. I have at present another extravagance before me, a great deal nicer than a husband."

"I should like to know what it is."

"A long European tour, with, perhaps a peep at the Pyramids and a ramble about old Jesusalem."

"Oh, dear!" said Julius, in a tone half serious and half mocking. "I should have no chance, I suppose, against such a temptation?"

"None at all," she said, positively; and though she kept up the bantering tone, it was quite evident to Julius that if he asked her in sober earnest she would answer just the same with a slightly different accent.

But Nora with a woman's ready tact, turned the conversation, and gradually led it into a very unusual and practical channel—the nobility and the necessity of labor. The glowing thoughts, the plain yet hopeful truths that fair young woman uttered, Julius heard for the first time in his life that night. Never before had he realized the profit and the deep delight which might spring—and only spring—from an honest career, no matter how humble or laborious, if it was steadily pursued until success crowned it. She hid none of her own early mistakes and struggles, and then alluding to her assured position and comfort, asked Julius "how he supposed she had won it?"

"By your genius," he said, admiringly.

"Not so, sir; but by simple persevering, conscientious labor in the path I had marked out for myself. Therefore," she said, with a bright, imperative face, "go home to-night, Mr. May, choose what particular form of law you will study, throw yourself with all your capacities into that one subject, and success is sure to come. Depend upon it, the world is not far wrong in making success the test of merit."

"You have made a new man of me, Miss St. Clair," said Julius enthusiastically. "When I have proved this may I come in to see you again?"

He had risen to go, and they stood with clasped hands—"Then you may come again." Nothing more was said, but they quite understood each other, and Julius went out into the clear starlit night, determined to make himself worthy of a good woman's acceptance before he offered himself again.

Next evening, Bessie and Nora sat in the firelight, sipping their after-dinner coffee; it was an hour for confidence, and Bessie said, rather sadly:

"Poor Julius May—he asked me to marry him last night."

Nora turned quickly, but said nothing.

"That is, he wanted to marry my money; everybody knows that if he loves anybody really, it is you, Nora."

"He called on me, too last night," said Nora, "and I saw he was in trouble, so I gave him something to do. Nothing like that old, old gospel of Work when you're in trouble. When he had done it, I told him he might come and see me again."

"Surely you would never marry him! You will just have him to dress and take of."

"All men need women to care for them, else why were women made? But I think Julius will do very well yet. These elegant carpet-knights sometimes don armor and take the world by surprise."

"We shall see."

"Yes, we shall see. Time proves all things."

Time proved in this case what has often been asserted, "that every woman influences every man she comes in contact with, either for good or bad." Julius went steadily to work, used with economy the remains of his patrimony, became known among the lawyers as a hard-reading, clear-headed, steady young man and in a little more than two years he ventured to call again on Nora St. Clair and ask her a certain question to which she answered, with pride and confidence: "Yes."

Another evening Bessie and Nora sat sipping their coffee together in the gloaming of an early summer evening.

"Bessie," said Nora, "Julius May asked me last night to marry him."

"Going to do so, Nora?"

"Yes, dear, I am going to take care of him, and he is going to take care of me."

"That's all right, I suppose."

"Yes, I am quite sure it couldn't be better."

Both girls sat silent awhile, and then Nora said sadly:

"I have been wondering how many bad husbands might have been good ones, did women always use their influence for noble ends. There ought to be a saving power in love—if it is true love—and there is, for I have proved it; and what I have done other women can do also."—The Ledger.

Literary Notices.

The September issue of ST. NICHOLAS is introduced by The Song of the Goldenrod, written by Grace Denio Litchfield, and illustrated by Laura C. Hills, whose frontispiece drawing has proved a successful trap to catch a sunbeam. Perhaps if this illustrated poem had been in time to serve as a campaign document, the result of the vote for a State flower in New York might have been less pleasing to the advocates of Queen Rose. Charles F. Lummis begins in this number a series of Tee-Wahn, or Pueblo, Folk-Stories which are truly remarkable. Of unknown age, these tales are aboriginally American, and will, no doubt, be as eagerly examined by wise professors skilled in such lore, as by their chubby children who care nothing for comparative mythology, but know a good story when they see it. The illustrating, by George Wharton Edwards, is remarkable for its force and originality of motive. The number furnishes a feast of fat things, a few of which are: To Malcom Douglas, How the Great Plan Worked, Two Lads of Block Island, Lost in a Cornfield, The Old Clock's Story, A Formal Call, The Isle of Skye, etc. The illustrations are very fine.

THE CENTURY for September has many salient points of interest. The subject which will probably attract the widest interest is the discussion of the Treatment of Prisoners at Camp Morton, Indianapolis, during the war, a discussion began by Dr. John A. Wyeth's article in the April CENTURY. The present number contains a reply to that article by Col. W. R. Holloway, who during the war was private secretary

FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

Possibly the leaders of the party have already selected the Republican candidates for Representatives to the General Court from the 14th District, but if so our ear has failed to catch their names. We should sooner think that it had not been done.

From our point of view it looks as though the Republicans never had a better chance for electing their candidates than they have now. In the first place neither party in the District has much advantage over the the other in point of numbers and a very little thing is as likely as any way to give either side the victory.

The Democracy do not pretend to deny the fact that their forces are hopelessly divided and under no circumstances will it be possible for them to unite and pull together on Representative question this fall. Their quarrel increases in bitterness every day.

The Republicans ought not to ask for anything better than that. A divided Democracy and a decent degree of harmony in their own ranks means victory for their side at the polls, if the conditions are rightly utilized. They can't help winning if every Republican does one half his duty. Let such men as Jacob Brown, Benjamin Hinckley, Edward E. Thompson, Dr. J. M. Harlow, E. C. Cottle or any two of a couple of dozen of others be nominated for the Legislature and the Republicans will be able to carry this Representative District without any sort of trouble.

INCONSISTENCY.

The editor of the Woburn JOURNAL is a curious creature in politics. In his last paper he has an article opposing the renomination of J. O. Hayden of Somerville for the office of treasurer of Middlesex County because he has been there long enough—six years. He has no fault to find with the man or the officer. He has administered his duties faithfully and correctly, but he has been in office long enough.

To show his consistency the Woburn editor advocates the nomination of "Brother Jefts" of Hudson for Councillor. Brother Jefts has held remunerative offices for more years than you can shake a stick at. He is always in office or a candidate for office—and this ain't saying anything against Mr. Jefts, either.

Our motto is, If you get a good man keep him.—Reading Chronicle.

The JOURNAL has never advocated the nomination of "Bro. Jetts" or any other man for the office of Councillor for this District. Uncle Twombly should not be quite so free with his accusations against his neighbors if he wants to stand well in their estimation.

But what does the venerable quill-driver mean by saying: "If you get a good man keep him?" What has that to do with either Jefts or Loring? What does it mean, anyway?

GRAND RALLY—GREAT ENTHUSIASM.

The Boston Republicans are wide awake and ready for the fight. They made a beginning last Tuesday evening and it was a glorious one. Music Hall was packed with live party men and euthusiasm was at fever heat. Music and oratory were rampant.

Such political giants as Hon. Charles H. Allen, Hon. W. W. Crapo, Senator George F. Hoar, ex-Governor Brackett, Lieutenant Governor Haile, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, ex-Congressman Greenhalge, Collector A. W. Beard, Congressman Elijah A. Morse, Congressman Walker, Hon. A. W. Tufts, Hon. E. Pillsbury, ex-Governor Ames and Hon. Frank D. Allen, sat on the platform and from the lips of the most of them flowed eloquent speeches till late into the night.

It was indeed a grand Republican ratification rally and one that foretells victory for that party in November.

Another big meeting was held at Haverhill on Wednesday evening at which candidate Allen did full justice to his oratorical powers.

Things look as though there wouldn't be much left of the Democracy after election.

CAMPAIGN OPENED.

Candidate Allen has opened the canvass in good style. He started out for Democratic scalps on the night of the Republican State convention and has kept things humming ever since.

His speech in Boston last Saturday evening was a good one. It will trouble Gov. Russell to face candidate Allen's statements and arguments such as he made in Boston, but he's got to do it or give up beat.

The efforts of the Democrats to keep the tariff bill, the silver question, and some other topics of a general interest out of the canvass are bound to fail, because the Republicans are determined that these great subjects shall not be kept in the background but be made prominent and laid fairly before the people of the State. It is evident from the samples he has given us that candidate Allen's speeches will prove to be hard nuts for Gov. Russell to crack.

Judging from present appearances the campaign is going to be a lively one, with everything in favor of the Republicans and victory for them at the polls. That is the way it looks.

FOR COUNCILLOR.

Charles F. Loring, Esq., of Melrose was nominated at the Republican Sixth District Councillor Convention held at Lowell last Tuesday over Luman T. Jefts, Esq., of Hudson by a good sized majority. Mr. Loring is a prominent Boston lawyer and a leading citizen of Melrose.

Griffin Place, Esq., of this city was elected a member of the District Committee.

— Mrs. Conway, wife of Dr. J. H. Conway is visiting New York, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Richmond, Va., dand other cities in the South and will be away several weeks longer.

— Dr. Harry G. Blake, John McConnell and newsdealer Charles R. Brown tried their luck for trout in the raging Shawsheen last Tuesday. No report of their catch has been made public.

— The first meeting of the Board of Trade after vacation was held on Monday evening and was well attended. Several themes of interest were discussed, after which the meeting was adjourned to Oct. 5.

— It looks as though we are to have in this city a bicycle club that will bear bragging on. Capt. David Ronco, an enthusiastic 'cyclist, is engineering the matter backed by some of the best wheelists in the city.

— Mr. Fred. B. Leeds is local agent for the World's Fair Excursion Co. of New Bedford, this State, which is a big thing. The arrangement for tickets is a unique one and to make a complete success of the business one cannot begin too soon. Read Mr. Leeds's card and the consult with that gentleman.

— Last Sunday was a beautiful day. The sunshine was delightful, the atmosphere delicious, the faint breezes came laden with sweet autumn odors, and a more charming Sunday nobody ever saw or enjoyed.

— Mr. William Winn's exhibition of "Winn's Seedling" pears carried off the champion's belt at the Middlesex County Fair held at Medford last week. So also did his display of apples from the old Burlington homestead.

— We have received a communication recommending Mr. F. H. Lewis for Representative to the Legislature. Everyone has notions and ideas peculiar to himself. But we do not believe Mr. Lewis would listen to such a proposition for a moment.

— The Democratic State Committee has ordered a new caucus to be held in Ward 1 in this city and left the fight in Ward 4 to be settled at the State Convention. The Ward 1 Caucus will be held this evening, and there will be dead loads of fun at it.

— Jimmy Carroll, formerly of this city but lately of Peabody, was sunstruck in Boston last Friday and the report reached here that it killed him. This was an error however, although it came very near proving true, and he is still suffering from the stroke.

— The following change in the North Woburn Street Railroad timetables has been made by Supt. Sewell: The first and last daily trips from Winchester to Medford have been taken off: also the 1.15 anb 2.15 p.m. trips from North Woburn to Winchester.

— Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Bancroft are guests at the Mountain View House, North Woodstock, N. H., where they will remain for a week or two. Woodstock is one of the pleasantest regions in the mountains and this is the best season of the year to enjoy its loveliness.

— Mr. Frank W. Wells of Billerica Centre advertises wagons for sale in the JOURNAL this week to which announcement attention is called. Mr. Wells is a thorough workman, capable and trustworthy, and his own make of goods are always guaranteed as of the very best.

— After the allusion to Mr. F. H. Lewis's portrait in the local columns of last week's issue of the JOURNAL the gentle reader must have been considerably surprised at its absence therefrom. The trouble was, the cut wouldn't "work" and the attempt to print it proved abortive.

— Mrs. Helen Kimball of Chicago visited the JOURNAL family yesterday very much to their delight. She and her people were old Iowa and Illinois friends of ours and a day with Mrs. Kimball was an unusually pleasant experience which we hope may be repeated early and often.

— The entire family of Mr. Esta brook, the baker, including himself, have been very sick with divers complaints. There appears to be a good deal of sickness of one kind and another prevailing here at the present time. Nearly all of it has malarial foundation, typhoid being quite prevalent.

— Miss Nellie E. Platts has for some years given instructions on the piano-forte in this community to the satisfaction of her patrons. Her musical education is of the best quality, and she has the reputation of being painstaking and possessing a peculiar talent to teach. Her card is in this paper.

— Judge Johnson of the Fourth Middlesex District Court would have a pretty easy time of it were it not for the business furnished by Stoneham and Winchester. Last Monday morning nearly all the session was taken up with cases from Stoneham. That is a great place for non-observance of the Sabbath.

— We should advise people who take an interest in the Warren Academy Industrial School of this city not to forget the exhibition of the work of the school which will be given between 2 and 4 tomorrow afternoon. The JOURNAL told all about it last week and prints this item merely as a reminder of the affair.

— "And still there's more to follow." Richard Mack, W. L. Dodge, and Miss Minnie Perkins were the last Woburn names enrolled on the students' books of Burdett's widely known and very popular Business College of Boston. The Woburn young ladies and gentlemen would alone make quite a good sized school.

— The Woburn Woman's Club opens its fall meetings two weeks earlier than is its custom with an afternoon tea to its members to be given in Music Hall, on Friday, Oct. 2, from 4 to 6. This social will be followed on the regular day for opening the Club, the 16th of October, by a "home talent" meeting. Further details to be given later.

— The women of Woburn are respectfully asked to read over carefully the notice of the Board of Assessors in this paper. Please scan the dates very closely. Prominent ladies have asked the JOURNAL to throw out this hint that every woman may know just when it will become absolutely necessary for her to don her bonnet and visit the Rooms of the Board and get registered.

— Last Sunday morning Mrs. Sparrow Horton sent us, in token of her appreciation of the unsurpassed merits of the JOURNAL as a family newspaper, a magnificent bouquet of late summer and early fall flowers, for which she will please accept our thanks. We have not seen anything more beautiful in the way of a bouquet than the big one Mrs. Horton sent us last Sunday morning.

— Mr. Robert B. Eaton of Central Square is disposed to praise Street Commissioner Jones to the skies for his fine work on the road leading from the Centre to No. Woburn. He maintains that there is not a better piece of highway in Woburn or out of it. It has been transformed, under Com. Jones's intelligent direction, into a fine boulevard over which it is a perfect luxury to drive. Mr. Eaton speaks in high terms of the Commissioner and his good work on our city thoroughfares, and his words of praise are warmly seconded by the other good people of Central Square, No. Woburn, and all over the city.

— Messrs. T. Marvin Parker and Edward H. Richards returned from a very successful fishing trip to Parlin Pond in Somerset county, Maine, last Sunday leaving Mr. Joseph Henry Parker there to finish up the job. We should be very loath to report the fish stories these estimable gentlemen heard down there, but the stories of their own achievements were exceedingly modest and reasonable.

— Miss Elizabeth West of the High School class of '91, this city, is making good progress in the Salem Normal School and bids fair to be a firstclass instructress. The entrance tests were passed by Miss West in a highly satisfactory manner, her mark standing so high as to be conditioned in none of the subjects. The members of the class of '91 are likly to make their mark in any place.

— Dr. Carl H. Kylander died at his residence on Walnut street very suddenly last Saturday morning from the kick of a horse on the Wednesday before, aged 64 years. He was a native of Sweden and a graduate of King's College at Skara, and was well educated in his profession which was that of veterinary surgeon, in which he enjoyed a good practice. He had lived here since 1862. He left a widow to deplore his loss.

— The Innitou Canoe Club will give their annual concert at Lyceum Hall on the evening of October 14, for which the best talent in the country have been engaged, to wit: Gad Robbins, the celebrated Banjoist; the popular Romania Ladies' Quartet; Herbert Johnson, 1st tenor of the Ruggles street Church Quartet, and others. More particulars of this grand musical event will be given next week in these columns.

— Tuesday evening's Globe contained the exterior plan of the new Central school house with a description of the interior. The architect was J. Merril Brown of Boston and his work on this building met the approval of all. It is to be of brick with stone facings and will make a school structure which will be a credit to the town. The lot from the Page Eaton estate is a fine one. The house will contain 4 rooms and accommodate 200 pupils. The cut in the Globe looks firstrate.

— In less than 30 minutes after the handsomest pair of pickerel that made their headquarters in Horn Pond's clear, cold waters were pulled out last Tuesday afternoon by Tom Kenney, the piscatorial belt-winner and wearer in these parts, a mighty handsome 2-pounder was planked down on the Editorial table for the especial delectation of the Editor's family's pickerel tooth by Thomas himself who took away with him in return our best thanks. Handsomer fish never swam the water or graced an Editorial banquet board.

— The way of it is this: Mr. Charles F. Lyford has not had a call to become General Secretary of the Cambridge Y. M. C. A., of which Mr. Whitford was up to a recent date the Secretary, but he has been chosen Associate Secretary with Mr. A. C. Cotton as Senior Secretary. Messrs. Cotton and Lyford have been assigned to different but equal tasks in the Cambridge Association and they will work together for the accomplishment of the same end, and with two such able laborers and real Christians at the helm the Association cannot but thrive. It would be hard to find two young men better equipped for successful Y. M. C. A. work than A. C. Cotton and C. F. Lyford. Success to both and their labors to save the young men of Cambridge.

— Rev. E. P. Telford, the widely known London (Eng.) Evangelist, under the auspices of the M. E. Church of this city, has delivered sermons of power and eloquence by the roadside near the Common every evening at 7 o'clock for two weeks past with excellent results. At a later hour on each evening he has preached in the Methodist meetinghouse to large and attentive audiences. It was well worth ones while to go to the Common on any of the evenings the gifted Evangelist held forth there and listen to his discourses and exhortations and take note of the crowd there gathered about his rude pulpit. It would be hard at any time to see a disrespectful listener in the congregation, and that many people got a different idea of themselves and of their spiritual needs, and resolved to find the things they wanted most, there can be but little doubt. It is unquestionably true that Rev. Mr. Telford's evangelistic work here did this community good.

— Chief McIntosh and Officer McDermott made some successful liquor raids last Sunday. They captured "the critter" nearly every time. For their successful war on the illicit rumseller Chief McIntosh and his faithful aids are entitled to the lasting gratitude of all decent people. The places which Police lightning struck with damaging effect last Sunday were: Stephen Hart's on Conn street: half barrel beer, 4 cases of lager.——Mrs. Gilgun on Canal street: 2 half barrels beer; quantity of whiskey.——Tolan on Buckman street: 8 gallons beer; lager. We hope the Chief will keep up his raids on the "kitchen bars" and all other places where rum is sold illegally until the miserable business is abandoned. Of course, it is one of the most difficult things in the world to gather evidence against these people sufficient to convict them. The rumsellers will lie and their victims will lie in their favor; but if the Police keep pegging away sooner or later the law-breaking sellers will get sick of the business and give it up.

— The B. & M. and C. & M. Railroad excursion to Weirs last Friday was a great success and everybody enjoyed it hugely although it was by far the hottest day of the year. Wasn't it a scorcher though! Nevertheless the tourists had a right-down good time. Eighty-nine of them boarded the train at this station, about 20 at North Woburn, and the entire outfit consisted of 8 cars, everyone of which was loaded to the gun'ls with men, women and children of all ages, sizes, sexes, and without any regard to former condition of servitude. At the Weirs the big crowd had one of the times we read of. On arriving there the multitude scattered and in small flocks, bevies, knots, quartets, trios, pairs, and solus and took in the beauties and enjoyed the delights of that fairest part of the Old Granite State. Some spent the time in wandering over the rocky hills, through the groves, and along the sleepy streets of Weirs; but a large share took in the charming 2-hours sail on beautiful Winnepesaukee and declared it the finest thing in the world. The long heavily loaded train left for home at 5 P. M., and landed the Woburn Centre people at their doors long before bedtime. They reached here hot, grimmy, sweaty, and pretty well fagged, but everyone of them declared the day ought to be marked with a white stone, and should be. Mr. George W. Storer, the wideawake A. G. P. A., C. & M. Railroad Company, is mainly responsible for the annual series of delightful autumn excursions to the beautiful and romantic regions of New Hampshire and the White Mountains for which the B. & M. RR. Co. have become famous.

Middlesex County Tennis League.

The annual Tournament of the Middlesex County Tennis League was to have been held on the Courts of the Woburn Lawn Tennis Association in this city on Monday, Sept. 7, but failed to materialize on account of the rain. The event was postponed to Saturday, Sept. 19, and came off accordingly. It was a splendid day for the business and a big crowd of people watched with great interest the games as they took place. It was observed with pleasure that there were many young ladies hanging on to the outskirts of the Courts who were deeply interested spectators of the plays. Evidently the gallant contestants were much encouraged by the presence of so many fair ones and that fact may also account in a measure for the excellence of the work of those engaged in the contest. It was a gay affair, set off and enlivened by the presence of the ladies aforesaid, and made interesting from the nature of the stakes played for. There were 15 entries and all the events were played except the finals.

The defeat of J. B. Reed of Cambridge by J. H. Carter of Winchester was hardly expected. Shaw's victory over Sheafe was also a surprise.

Really the best tennis of the tournament was between Keyes of Concord, who is a member of the Woburn club, and Banks of Belmont.

The final event between Keyes and Shaw was played off last Tuesday afternoon, at 4.30 o'clock.

The winner of this match will then contest with H. B. Bixby of the Lowell club for the championship of the county. The summary:

An Anniversary.

On Friday evening of last week about twenty of the friends and neighbors of the veteran street car conductor, John E. Russell, and his estimable wife, called on them at their residence on Nichols street, North Woburn, it being the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage. The worthy couple were found sitting on the veranda trying to keep cool, as the evening was sultry. That Mr. and Mrs. Russell were surprized there can be no doubt, as they had not presence of mind enough left to invite the company in.

But the company knew what they had come for, so they invited themselves in and took possession. The table was soon laid in the cozy dining-room and a bountiful supper was served which the company had brought with them, consisting of cake, coffee, fruit and ice cream.

The party left for their homes at eleven o'clock, leaving behind them a sum of money with which to buy something as a reminder of the occasion, coupled with many wishes for many happy returns of the day.

By the kindness of Superintendent Sewell a special car was tendered Conductor Russell to return his friends to the Centre.—REPORTER.

A Correction.

Lawrence Martin of Montvale complains that the JOURNAL's Ward 5 correspondent did him great injustice in his report of the Democratic caucus over there. Naturally Martin was very mad about it. Like a man, he brought his grievance direct to the JOURNAL office where he received genuine Editorial sympathy and strong promises of better fashions by the correspondent in the future.

Martin says things were pretty lively at the caucus but McDonough was the only man who had been drinking, and he wasn't cock-sure about him even. Martin said he didn't deny he was a rumseller, but he wasn't a rum drinker, and the last thing he ever thought of saying at the caucus that night was "I'm running this thing." Such a preposterous idea never entered his bosom, and his lips never uttered any such daring and boasting words as those. The JOURNAL correspondent lied about it, he said. He wanted us to ask Captain C. K. Conn of the Globe about it and we did.

The JOURNAL regrets exceedingly that the feelings of Mr. Martin were so severely lacerated by the correspondent's inaccuracies of statement, and hastens to deny the correspondent's story in toto, and to tender the amende honorable to the agrieved Mr. Martin.

EDTIOR JOURNAL:—I have received a letter from Rev. James L. Fowle, a Missionary at Cesarea, in which he says he would like to have you correct a statement made in your paper of July 10, in which you say that there were no young men graduated in the class of 1864. He and Jotham Hill both graduated that year and afterwards re-entered the classical department graduating the second time in 1866. If you will correct the former statement you will oblige him.

A. B. WYMAN.

[The article in which the error occurred was prepared for the JOURNAL by Capt. C. K. Conn whose care and accuracy in such matters are proverbial and therefore we did not deem it necessary to verify his statement.—ED.

Resolutions on Wm. S. McGregor.

The following resolutions have been drawn by a committee of and confirmed by Clan McKinnon, No. 45, Order of Scottish Clans, of this city.

WHEREAS, by the inscrutable will of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, our well beloved brother Clansman, William Scott McGregor, has been removed from our midst; and,

WHEREAS, it is but a just tribute to his memory to say that we mourn for one who was a true Scotsman, genial in manner and generous of heart, anxious to promote peace and harmony among his brother Clansmen, and ever ready and willing to assist the needy and distressed:

Resolved, That we, members of Clan McKinnon, No. 45, Order of Scottish Clans, while we bow in humble submission to the will of an all-wise Providence, who doeth all things well, yet we lament the departure of our brother and we desire to place upon record our sense of the loss this Clan has sustained in the death of W. S. McGregor, who was one of its originators, and has ever since been a leading official:

Resolved, That we extend our most tender sympathy to the bereaved family in their great affliction; that these resolutions be engrossed in the minutes of the Clan and that a copy of the same be presented to Mrs. Julia McGregor.

TREMONT THEATRE.

On Monday night next, September 28, the Comedian, Stuart Robson, will come to the Tremont Theatre in "She Stoops to Conquer" and will find the welcome to a friend and artist, and a gentleman personally held in high esteem. Mr Robson will be seen in the role in which he should be superlatively excellent, that of Tony Lumpkin, the graceless scamp who makes a victim of everyone, his vain, fussy mother included. Of all the old English plays this is probably the most perfect specimen of what real comedy should be. At the very first sentence the stream of humor begins to flow. The original epilogue, slighted by modern managers, and not spoken from the stage since the first production of the comedy at Covent Garden Theatre, London, 1773, will be delivered in this production by Miss Waldron, Miss Bushby, and Mr. Robson.

HOLLIS THEATRE.

"The Senator" opened this week and a hearty welcome was given to Mr. Crane and his Company and the engagement closes Saturday evening. Next Monday a rare treat is in store for those who attend this popular house. Rose Coghlan in "Dorothy's Dilemma" will be at the Hollis for one week. Miss Coghlan is always careful and painstaking and in this play she is said to be able to do some of her finest work she has ever done. From present indications full houses will welcome her.

GLOBE THEATRE.

This week closes a successful run of "The Power of the Press." Next Monday Mlle. Rhea will present Mr. Alexander's new play "Judith" at the Globe for one week only. An excellent company supported by William Harris, Erroll Dunbar, E. L. Walton, Burr Caruth, J. R. Amory, Laura Rees, Gracie Sherwood, Lillian Lawrence, Una Abell, Florence Sherwood and as favorites of the Theatre going people will surely meet a hearty welcome. Mr. Alexander, the author, is well known as he calls Boston his home.

BOSTON MUSEUM.

"Ye Earlie Trouble" continues to crowd the Museum at every performance. Mr. Carleton has succeded beyond his expectation in dealing with incidents of the revolution and has brightened his play with a delightful love romance. The members of the excellent Museum Company have opportunities to display their abilities, and from the fact that the Museum always prerents plays of such high character it is safe to say "Ye Earlie Trouble" will please all who attend.

PARK THEATRE.

Neil Burgess is delighting thousands nightly at the Park with his "County Fair" and to say it is meeting the expectations of the public would be expressing it lightly. The horse race with its wonderful mechanism, the affection displayed by "Cold Molasses" for Aunt Abby and the husking scene are only a part of the good things to be seen in "The County Fair." Standing room only is the nightly sign and full houses are sure to greet Mr. Burgess and his creditable Company for the entire season.

BOSTON THEATRE.

"The Old Homestead" draws the people nearer at each performance and Denman Thompson and his assistant's popularity seems to increase each night. Cy Prime and Silas Perkins about even on checkers.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

"Kidnapped" is a great success. Tonight, Saturday matinee and evening, closes the engagement. Next Monday "Natural Gas" will be presented. The play has been entirely re-written, new music introduced, new dances, etc. It is one of the best farce comedies before the public. Donnelly and Girard are so well known as comedians of the first rank, that the mere announcement of their appearance is sufficient; but when May Howard is mentioned and others equally popular, it is safe to announce that the patrons of this house will surely have an evening of great enjoyment.

The Wilmington Farmers' Club.

The Farmers and Mechanics Club of Wilmington held its biennial fair Sept. 17. The day was fine and everything anticipated was realized. Fully 2000 people were in attendance. The Town Hall was filled with a fine exhibit of fruits, flowers and needlework. A spacious tent was devoted to vegetables. The sheds were filled with a fine collection of cattle, swine and poultry.

The dinner tent was a most attractive feature, and was presided over by A. Porter Pearson. About 600 sat down to a bountiful feast spread by the people of the town. Rev. Mr. Hammond said grace. The Woburn Brass Band furnished fine music.

After the dinner the President, John T. Wild, made a short address, and was followed by Rev. C. C. Hussey of Billerica. He was followed by L. C. Chase of the State Grange, Horace Gowing of Wakefield, Mr. Morse of Lowell and Rev. Mr. Hammond of Wilmington.

The officers of the society are: President, John T. Wild; Treasurer, Otis C. Buck; Secretary, Edward M. Nichols; Executive Committee, J. H. Eames, Justin L. Parker, John W. Perry, Otis Gowing, Henry Blanchard, Mrs. Dr. Frances B. Hiller, Mrs. J. L. Parker, Mrs. John T. Wild and Mrs. J. H. Eames.

Burlington.

Mr. H. M. Reed has raised a fine crop of peaches, this season.

Rev. Mr. Marston of Montvale preached at the church last Sunday.

The Ladies Benevolent Society met in the church parlor, Thursday afternoon.

We are glad to hear that Mr. C. G. Foster is recovering from his recent illness. His daughter has been filling his place in the Postoffice.

Mr. Barna Snow of the Boston Seaman's Bethel will speak next Sunday evening at the Burlington church upon the work among the sailors. He is an interesting speaker and has an interesting theme. All are invited.

At their business meeting on Wednesday of last week, the Young Peoples' Society voted to become a Society of Christian Endeavor. They also planned for the winter's work. Rev. C. F. Hersey is arranging for a popular course of lectures and entertainments to be given under the auspices of the Society. A number of good lecturers have been secured and several popular artists are already engaged to give a fine concert. Further particulars will be given hereafter. It is hoped that we may again enjoy one of Burlington's popular lecture courses. The Society also propose to have a class for instruction in singing under the tuition of a first class teacher. All who wish to learn to sing should avail themselves of this opportunity.

Literary Notices.

The numbers of LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for September 12, and 19, contains The Revival of Quakerism, Port-Royal, The Apology of Aristides, The Poet of the Knights, Thy Persecuted Russian Jews, The Anak of Publishers, and The Congress of Vienna, Jt. Jean de Luz, and Some Pagan Epitaphs, Scarron, and Ignatius Loyola, The Strange Instincts of Cattle, The Death of Mr. Lowell, with instalments of Montes the Matador, Francesca's Revenge, and Jeanne Zephir's Lovers, and poetry. For fifty-two numbers of sixty-four large pages (or more than 3,300 pages a year) the subscription price ($8) is low. Littell & Co., Boston are the publishers.

The Trouble Grandpa Nature had with the Horse, by L. J. Bates, Bee-Hunting, by Rowland E. Robinson, and A Joint Snake, by E. Olin, are three peculiarly interesting Natural History articles in the October WIDE AWAKE. A Night with Russian Wolves, a blood-curdling true story by Lieut.-Col. Thorndike, Jessie's Chickens, a home-life story by Hattie Tyng Griswold, Edith's Guinea Pig, a travel story by Esther George and Bronson Company (Limited), another home-life story by J. H. Jamieson, are very entertaining. A Moqui folk-tale of The Genesis of Earth and Moon, a Norse fold-tale of Why the Sea is Salt, the Margaret-Patty Letter, The Drawing of the Child Figure (Miss Rimmer's art-paper), The Lake Maidens, a literary narrative by Miss Garland about the daughters of Wordsworth, Southey, and Coleridge, with portraits, and the Peppers Serial, The Italian Child-life Serial, and Miss Matilda Archambeau Van Dorn, together with the poems and pictures, and four pages of Men and Things anecdotes, make up a most readable number. $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

It is not surprising that the ladies are so attached to PETERSON'S MAGAZINE, for it caters very successfully to their needs and tastes. Its publishers seem to know just what will please and help them. The October number is a most admirable one, and it would be difficult for any household not to find something to suit every member thereof, however varied the tastes might be. There are two historical sketches that will interest every woman, The Princess de Lamballe, a vivid sketch of the early days of the Reign of Terror in France, and Women in Ancient Rome, by Prof. A. P. Montague. The illustrated articles A Trip from Naples to Amalfi, and Cups, Gourds and Vases, are well written. The numerous stories are first-class as they always are in PETERSON. The Fashion department gives complete descriptions and illustrations of the early fall styles. In fact, everything about the magazine is good. Terms, $2 00 per year, with great reductions to clubs, and valuable premiums for getting up clubs. Send for their premium list, or five cents will secure a sample copy of the magazine and premium offers. Address, PETERSON'S MAGAZINE, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Photograph Anticipated.

In Fenelon's "Fables," written in 1690, may be found an interesting chapter, entitled "Voyage Suppose." Of the marvels related in that story we read:

"There was no painter in all that country, but when they wished the portrait of a friend they put water into large basins of gold and silver and made this water to face the object they wished to paint. Soon the water would congeal and become as the face of a mirror, where the image dwelt ineffaceably. This could be carried wherever one pleased, always giving as faithful a picture as a mirror."

Who will say that Fenelon did not anticipate the photograph?—St. Louis Republic.

Nobody has a word to say against Lawyer McCall or would dispute that he would make a good Representative, but Hon. A. B. Coffin would poll a larger vote I honestly believe, and as for qualifications he is second to no gentleman in the District. The town would honor itself by sending Mr. Coffin to the Legislature.

As the JOURNAL had it last week, the Winchester fruit, flower and vegetable show on the evening of Sept. 17 in Town Hall was an affair of which everybody feels proud. The exhibition was one of the finest ever seen in these parts, and the interest taken in it couldn't very well have been increased. Possibly the Village Improvement Association will make it a permanent feature in their annual programme.

The wedding of Miss Grace M. Brown, daughter of our esteemed townsman, Mr. George P. Brown, and Mr. L. E. Johnson of Waterloo, Iowa, last week Wednesday, was a notable social event. REVIEW OF THE QUARTER

LESSON XIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 27.

The Gospel of St. John from the Beginning to and Including the Tenth Chapter—Specific Objects of This Gospel. Its Date and Authorship.

For the diligent student this Gospel is full of interest. It is the final summary of one who had personally known Jesus among the first, had been an eye witness of His ministry and then both a witness and a partaker of the labors and sufferings of the apostles, who had seen Christianity grow into a living and truly missionary organization, and had also been a sorrowful witness of the spread of many errors in the infant church. With all these matters present in his mind, he addressed himself to the composition of a Gospel which should at once confute the prevalent heresies and set the true mission and personality of Jesus Christ clearly before the minds of the converts.

Such being the object of this Gospel, it was but natural that it should be subjected to the most merciless criticism. Every word or phrase on which a doubt could hang has been seized upon by the so called critical school and every hint or quotation of it by the early fathers has been studied by critics of all schools. The result has been to prove to a reasonable certainty that the Gospel was generally known in the church as early as A. D. 115—at least so well known that Christian writers assumed a familiarity with it on the part of converts. It is also almost, but not quite absolutely, proved that it was the last book of the New Testament to be written.

As to the author, "The Beloved Disciple," the testimony generally goes to show that he was a few years younger than Jesus, and that he died at Ephesus about 100 A. D. at a very advanced age. Also that he was banished to Patmos in the year 95 during the persecution by the cruel Domitian, that on the death of that emperor he was released and lived in quiet during the peaceful reign of Nerva, and died in the reign of Tragan just before the lighter persecution of that reign began. These facts enable us to see why St. John began by assuming a general knowledge of the previous gospels, and of the commonest terms of Greek philosophy on the part of the Christians, and then goes on to treat of the teachings of Christ.

The opening is singularly beautiful. The first words are the same as those of Genesis. The first verse contains in simple yet sublime phrases the whole truth of God made manifest in the flesh. There is the eternity of the Word, there is the identity of the Word with the Eternal Father. The Greek word "Logos" may be translated Word or Wisdom. Among the Platonic philosophers it had a somewhat fanciful signification, as they held that the material universe was created by an eon or emanation from an Eternal God. St. John took their own word and recoined it. He means by it all that they meant and a great deal more. With him it means not only the power of God, not only the Eternal Thought, not only the Eternal Design as to this world and mankind, but far beyond that the Essential Divine Personality.

Having declared this basis truth, he proceeds to the earthly ministry of Christ. His Divine Being was without limit, but the man Jesus had a beginning in time and an earthly career. In narrating this St. John barely alludes to Galilee, and only relates so much of the Judean travels of Christ as is necessary to introduce His discourses. A very interesting episode is that of an interview with John the Baptist by a committee of the Jewish Sandhedrim. We are plainly informed that the mission of John attracted great attention, and that the Pharisees were among the first to hear of the claims of Jesus.

After the calling of five disciples and the miracle at the marriage feast of Cana, we are introduced to Nicodemus, and through him to the sublime doctrine of the new birth. Mark the important words, "Except" and "Ye must be." They are absolutely exclusive. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God." Therefore He implicitly says to Nicodemus, take your place with the publican and sinner till you are spiritually renewed. It is a pleasure to hear of this Nicodemus twice more, and each time more favorably. In the Sanhedrim he insisted that Christ should not be condemned unheard, and he assisted in laying away the body of Christ. The early fathers agree that he was baptized by Peter and lived and died a faithful Christian.

Christ's authority over the Sabbath and the ordinances are next announced. Then after various teachings comes the all important doctrine of the resurrection. The Pharisees then openly exhibited their hostility, which gives occasion for that peculiar expression in the seventh chapter: "Yet a little while am I with you and then I go unto Him that sent me. Ye shall seek me and shall not find me, and where I am thither ye cannot come." This was most curiously fulfilled almost immediately after the crucifixion, and, strangely enough, it is one of the very few fulfillments of prophecy as to the facts of which there is no controversy whatever. It is among the best established truths in history that at that very time the Jews began to long passionately for a Messiah, to cry, "Lo here!" and "Lo there!" and to run after impostors of every variety. Nor did this cease in Judea until the last vestige of the Jewish community was destroyed and the remnant of the people was utterly scattered.

For the remainder of the quarter the minds of the disciples seem to have been generally prepared for a broader view, for the extension of Gospel privileges to all mankind, and for that glorious fullness set forth in the Epistles of St. John.

What Is Art?

Augustus, the greatest of all parvenus, did not ask of Virgil to recall in verse the cruelties of civil war. No true artist has ever sought to be degraded; no worker of the Middle Ages has reflected the brutality of the world around him. On the contrary, he has appealed to its chivalry and its religion. No treacherous adventurer of the Renaissance is pictured in the sunny, refined architecture that was made for him. You and I know that art is not the attempt at reflecting others, at taking possession of others, who belong to themselves, but that it is an attempt at keeping possession of one's self.

It is often a protest at what is displeasing and mean about us; it is an appeal to what is better. That is its most real value. It is an appeal to peace in time of brutal war, an appeal to courageous war in time of ignoble peace; it is an appeal to the permanent reality in presence of the transient; it is an attempt to rest for a moment in the true way.

We are augurs conversing together, and we can afford to laugh at any respected absurdity. We know that cleverness is not the way to the reality; cleverness is only man's weak substitute for integrity, which is from God.—John La Farge in Century.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it know to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. AN ACROBATIC FAILURE.

He Dived Backward to Show Off Before His Fellows, but Does So No More.

One afternoon Lou Preston was in the middle of a story when we reached the swimming hole. He was always telling stories in the slow, drawling tone natural to him, and as the boys listened eagerly you may be sure they were interested. Boys are no flatterers in word or deed, and if they pay attention it is certain that your story is liked.

What he was telling that day was a little above me, as we say, and while the older boys delayed to hear the last of it I got ready, wet my head first "to prevent a rush of blood," according to tradition, and then jumped in.

As I was unnoticed I took the chance to learn to dive backward. This I did successfully several times, and when Lou's story was finished I had a new feat to execute for my own glory and the delectation of my friends.

"Look here, boys!" I cried. "Look here Charlie! look here! Aw! wait a minute and watch me." I got their attention at last, and braced myself for a triumphant exhibition of my great act.

I have described the swimming hole as a place at one side of the stream, worn deep by the current. Above and below and at the further side the water was shallow. The near side of this hole was perpendicular, and the hole was said to be twenty feet deep. This was just the place to dive.

That day, as the stream was high, its rippling surface overflowed the bank, the top of which formed a ledge several inches wide under water before the true rim of the hole was reached.

In my successful attempts to dive backward I had stood on this ledge, with my feet under water and my heels at the rim of the hole, and turned a back somersault. But now, having drawn all eyes to me, in my haste to act before their notice was distracted and in the flurry of a public performance, I set my heels at the margin of the overflowing water, my feet being on dry land, and forget the ledge hidden by the water between me and the rim of the hole.

Over I went and down I came head first on the ledge. I heard my neck bones crunch under the weight of my body, and I flopped over sidewise, limp and for a moment helpless, into the stream.

As I rose and the water gushed out of my ears, I heard from the bank a shout of wild laughter from the spectators of my great diving feat. The boys said afterward that had they known my neck was broken they could not have helped laughing. As they did not know it was not broken and had every reason to think it was, I believed them.

I had enough sense left to strike out feebly for the next shore. My neck was bent over to one side and I could not straighted it. I swam till my hands touched the gravel bottom, and dragging myself into three inches of water lay like a piece of driftwood on the beach.

My strength began to return after a little, and as the other boys kept up their laughter my recovery was hastened by indignation.

After that, when I dived, it was in the good, old fashioned way, face foremost.—St. Nicholas.

Why the Parson Left.

'Twas only a little hen, with a lopped comb and a flushed face, that broke up the pastorate of an able Maine parson. She used to sneak under the fence, you know, just the way hens do always, tiptoe across the grass border with the minuet step, and then the elder's garden had to take it. Of course it was aggravating. Did you ever watch a hen at this job! She trips carelessly into the middle of the garden bed; she cocks her head; a careless look comes into her eye; she balances partners with a flip and a scrape to the right, a flirt and a kick to the left, a double shuffle and a grand skirt dance flourish. Then she looks for grub.

Well, that parson saw the whole thing for days; same hen, same gestures and she came in miraculously, astonishingly, through a new hole every day. Then came at length wrath and girding of the loins; a gun, bang! dead hen floating upon the placid breast of a river eddy. The current washed the corse upon the neighbor's strand, and then the neighborhood heard the tale. The atrocity was fanned vigorously and the poor parson found that he was not be an assassin and the leader of the parish at the same time. Therefore his farewell sermon.—Dexter Gazette.

Due to Near Sightedness.

"My social blunders," said a near sighted woman recently, "would fill a book. Not long ago at an evening reception my hostess presented me to a lady whom, having heard of before, I was specially pleased to know. We talked together some time, and then drifted apart. Later, in another room, I saw standing near me a guest whose features I thought I recognized, but whose identity I could not place. As she was disengaged, I approached her in my blind way and said, 'Your face is very familiar to me; where have I met you before?' Imagine my consternation when she replied promptly and with a justifiable curtness, 'Fifteen minutes ago in the front drawing room.' She was my just acquired acquaintance."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

What Kind of a Store Was It?

He walked into a Kearney street dry goods store and asked for a pair of overalls. It was evident that he had not been long in town, and the clerks eyed him with amusement depicted plainly on each face.

"Very sorry, my friend," explained the polite gentleman behind the counter, "but this is a dry goods store and we have no overalls in stock."

"Aint, eh? Well, just give me three of your best flannel shirts and I won't kick."

"Sorry, but we don't keep them, either."

"Show me a pair of long legged boots, then."

"No boots either."

"Got any plug tobacco?"

"No."

"Any pipes or tallow candles?"

"No."

"Skillets or fryin' pans?"

"Not here. You'll have to go to a hardware store."

"Well, have you got any blood and thunder novels?"

Saved

—the life that is fighting against Consumption.

Only—act promptly.

Put it off, and nothing can save you. But, if taken in time, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will certainly cure.

It must be done through the blood—and the "Discovery" is the most potent blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and flesh-builder that's known to medical science. The scrofulous affection of the lungs that's called Consumption, and every form of Scrofula and blood-taints, all yield to it. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Bronchitis, Asthma, and all severe, lingering Coughs, it's an unequaled remedy. It's the only one that's guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

"We promise to cure your Catarrh, perfectly and permanently, no matter how bad your case or of how long standing—or we'll pay you $500." That's what the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy say to every sufferer from Catarrh. And they mean it.

"Sorry, but"——

"See here, old man, I've come all the way from Alpine to lay in my supplies, and the first place I strike I run up against a snag. I always had a kind o' sneaking idea that you fellers down here was frauds, and now I know it. There ain't one of them things but what I can get in the little store up to home, and here you don't keep 'em. So long!" and he strolled out with a look of disgust on his face and disappeared in the throng on the street.—San Francisco Call.

Forrest's Castle.

The wreck of his home brought about by Forrest's jealousy is still visible to the eye, and passengers by the Hudson river steamboats may even now see the half ruined and partially completed baronial castle which Forrest built upon the banks of the Hudson, some thirty miles above New York, and where it was his purpose to entertain with true princely hospitality. The building of the castle was an attempt something like that of Alexander Dumas, who with his earnings from the sale of "Monte Cristo," undertook to erect near Paris a castle which he called by the name of this great romance, and which would have required the income of a duchy to maintain.

Had Forrest lived as he proposed doing, his earnings must have been very great to have maintained the life he intended to live in this estate upon the Hudson. Mrs. Forrest never saw it after she left it. Although after eight years' litigation she won a victory over her husband, yet victory in her case was tempered with sorrow. As she grew old her heart softened toward Forrest, and in her declining years she only spoke of him in terms of endearment, which suggested that her recollections of him went back to the earlier days when she was his bride and was happy.—Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Treatment of Indian Babes.

The conditions of existence among many savage tribes are so severe that only the "fittest," the sturdiest and wiriest constitutions can survive. There is a very fine and intelligent tribe of blacks in the neighborhood of the Cameroons, named the Duallas, which imposes from the first a very violent test upon the constitutions of their offspring. Like the ancient Germans, the Duallas take a child when only four or five days old and plunge it in the river. This is repeated every day till the child is strong enough to bathe itself, or till it has succumbed under the treatment. Other less intelligent and more savage tribes of Africans train their children to endure torture from a very early age.

Even the average nursing of the negro mother is enough to try the toughness of the child's constitution. When the child is being fed he is set astride his mother's hip, and he must hold on how he can and get what nutriment he can, while his mother moves about her ordinary duties. When he is not thus attached to his mother he lies on a bed of dried grass on the ground, in all the simplicity in which nature brought him into the world, and crams himself with earth, or whatever he can lay his hands on.—Strand Magazine.

Advice to a Young Man.

A successful young business man of Atlanta tells this story: He said that when he was a boy he had occasion to borrow twenty dollars on a gold watch, and went to a bank to secure the loan. He found there a venerable gentleman whom he had since come to know as the father of Mr. Darwin Jones. The old gentleman spoke very kindly to the boy, told him the bank did not lend money on watches and referred him to a pawnbroker. Then Mr. Jones said slowly and earnestly, "But if I were you I would not borrow the money." "Why?" was asked by the impetuous youngster. "Because"—and every word weighed a pound—"because you will have to pay it back!" The wisdom of a lifetime was in that sentence.—Atlanta Constitution.

Beliefs About Waves.

The Persians believe that the waves of the Persian gulf are caused by air entering caves which have subterranean outlets under the ocean. One of the most curious beliefs of all—one closely akin to a certain ancient oriental hell belief—is that of the South Sea islanders. According to their notion, the rolling of the sea is caused by a "thunder god." In old times this "thunder god" killed the chief deity of the islands and was confined under the ocean as a punishment. His rolling with rage causes the waves.—St. Louis Republic.

Take Warning

Henceforth Mexico will give no cash subsidies to railroads.

How a Negro Got a Holiday.

A favorite name of the Virginia witch is Sally—due to the fact, probably, that one Sallie Slate achieved great fame in this region years ago through her infernal arts. She was guilty of many ugly tricks before she turned old Cæsar—her neighbor's hired man—into a horse and went foraging upon its brawny back. He was a strange negro from Georgia. He had never heard of Sallie Slate.

But the very night he arrived at his new home he was visited by her, so he declared when daylight came. "Bress Gawd, massa," said he in relating his adventure, "an old 'oaman wit' red beard an a hump on her back came to me las' night. 'Git up,' she ses; an up I hopped. Den she straddled my back an I went a pacin off seech as I never seen no hos do afore. She rode into a co'nfiel', an we didn't stop for no fence, but trabbled up a shaft o' moonlight.

"She filled a yaller bag wit' co'n an den make me kerry off her an de co'n to a little house up yander, whar a whole yardful o' black cats meow-ed us a welcome. Den she gim me a slash wit' a black snake whip an ses 'scat,' an I tuck to my heels and paced home. Yoh can't 'spec' me to work to-day, massa; I'se too fagged out."

Of course he was allowed a holiday.—Chicago News.

The Future of Storage Batteries.

There are few electrical appliances that elicit such widely varying opinions from electricians as the storage battery. Some stoutly hold that for traction purposes the accumulator will never be reduced to a commercial basis, while others just as emphatically maintain that it will inevitably be the almost universal source of power for city electric lines. Be this as it may, the storage battery will unquestionably come into general use for lighting in the near future.

As a reserve when the machinery breaks or is at rest, or as a regulator when running, it insures that the consumer is never left in the dark. Buildings have been known to have been lighted for five or six days by storage batteries, while for temporary lighting, for concerts, balls, etc., they form a convenient method of installing, at a short notice, the electric light, while dispensing with the noise of running machinery, accompanied by the ordinary amount of smoke and dirt.—New York Telegram.

The Spirit of English Football.

It is entertaining to listen to the observations of foreigners upon our national game of football. Here it seems as if our character was objectively epitomized. For a mere piece of leather to risk broken necks, heads and limbs in so reckless a manner! And yet if herein one does not discover a very direct descendant of the chivalrous craze of the Middle Ages, I doubt if any such descendant may still be said to exist. Our forefathers, several centuries back, do not, to us, seem very wise in their habit of going about fighting with each other on behalf of the black or the blue eyes of their lady loves. But they did it with the same zest, and probably got as much satisfaction out of it, as our modern fellow countrymen in the honor of winning their game.—All the Year Round.

The Duke's Way.

During the occupation of Paris by the allies in 1815 a French marshal shouldered an English colonel from the sidewalk into the street. Thereupon the Englishman, being forbidden by a general order of Wellington's to give a challenge to or accept one from a French officer, did what he considered the only thing left him—knocked the Frenchman down, and later refused him satisfaction in a duel. The latter then made a formal complaint to the duke, who, to soothe the marshal's feelings, sent a written reprimand to the colonel, but in it inclosed a cordial invitation to dinner.—New York Recorder.

Storage of Heat.

A lake has a wonderfully tempering effect on the climate. Thus, according to M. Forel, the quantity of heat accumulated in the lake of Geneva during the summer of 1889 was equal to that given off by the combustion of 31,000,000 tons of coal, or the amount carried by a coal train 1,120 miles in length. The greater part of the heat is discharged into the air of the valley during the cold season, thus producing a milder temperature in autumn and winter.—La Famille.

One Sunday's Pleasure Crowd.

As to Staten Island the development there is simply marvelous. This is best illustrated by the simple statement that on one Sunday the receipts of the Rapid Transit railroad were $8,000. As the fare is ten cents, this means 80,000 fares, or 40,000 people, a larger aggregation of humanity carried by this little road than by any surface road in the world.—Erastus Wiman in Baltimore Sun.

Her Fate.

Mrs. De Work—I have trained my eldest daughter into a thorough housekeeper. There is nothing she does not know.

Miss De Flight—What a nice, handy maiden aunt she will make for your other daughters' children!—New York Weekly.

Very Drafty.

Minks—This bank building doesn't seem at all cold, and yet most of the clerks wear skull caps.

Jinks—Good many drafts here, you know.—Good News.

Modern Miracles.

A singer for breath was distressed,
And the doctors all said she must rest,
But she took G. M. D.
For her weak lungs, you see,
And now she can sing with the best.

An athlete gave out, on a run,
And he feared his career was quite done;
G. M. D. pray observe,
Gave back his lost nerve,
And now he can lift half a ton.

A writer, who wrote for a prize,
Had headaches and pain in the eyes;
G. M. D. was the spell
That made him quite well,
And glory now before him lies.

Clever Diamond Smuggling.

Talking about smuggling reminds me of a trick I saw resorted to by a passenger on one of the big steamers a couple of years ago," said a loquacious commercial traveler. "You know there is a duty on diamonds, and one of the passengers had three large stones, worth several thousand dollars, which he had purchased in London. The problem of how to evade paying the duty on the stones worried him considerably, but at last he evolved a plan, and a few days before the steamer arrived in New York he proceeded to execute it.

"The chief officer had a little Skye terrier, and the passenger after considerable coaxing induced him to sell the dog. As soon as the smuggler gained possession of the animal he tied him up and gave him nothing to eat until just before we were to go ashore. He then procured some fat meat from the cook, and cutting off a piece a little larger than a walnut made a hole in it into which he placed one of the diamonds.

"A dog will generally bolt a piece of fat without chewing it, and of course a diamond will go down with it. The hungry dog swallowed the meat, as his owner expected he would, and in a short time the three diamonds were safely stowed away in his interior. The diamond smuggler had no difficulty in evading the vigilance of the custom house officials, and was soon on his way up town leading the dog by a string.

"I met him again a few days afterward and asked him how he recovered the stones. 'Easily enough,' he replied. 'As soon as I got home I shot the dog and found the diamonds after a short search. Of course I was sorry for the dog, but dogs are cheap and the tariff on stones is high, and I never allow sympathy to interfere with business.'"—Jeweler's Weekly.

Did Not Want to Tell All.

It was an evening school in Providence, R. I. There was a class of restless, dirty newsboys and bootblacks on the front seat trying to see how little they could study and how much they could annoy the teacher. Finally the teacher called up the class and put them through the catechism of the United States history.

"Who discovered America?"

Nobody seemed to know and the teacher, a long suffering student from the university, lost his patience. Shutting the book with a bang, he dismissed the class with these sarcastic remarks:

"Well, when one of you boys gets to the point where he needs to have some one vote for him as governor or president, he will be ashamed to think he doesn't know who discovered America."

One of the wickedest looking of the boys raised his grimy paw.

"Well, Tom, what is it?"

"I know who discovered America."

"Why didn't you tell, then?" asked the teacher sharply.

"Cos I didn't want to tell all I know," said Tom, while the class cut off into a roar.

The teacher called on the advanced class in spelling, and there was a smile on his face the rest of the evening.—Boston Herald.

A Sculptor's Late Start in Life.

Hiram Powers was the eighth of nine children, and he was a very small boy when his father died, and he had to go to work for the family. He had been born in Vermont, but his parents had moved out to Ohio in that way poor people have of roaming hither and yon after better luck.

It was in Ohio that the father died, and in Ohio that Hiram fought his youthful battle. For seven years he had charge of the wax figures in a Cincinnati museum, and it was while there that he felt an impulse toward his future art, and tried his prentice hand at modeling in clay.

But it was not until he was thirty years old that he was at liberty to strike out for himself, and he was thirty-two before he had money enough to go to Italy. Yet he was to be the sculptor of the "Greek Slave!"—Youth's Companion.

He Knew Her.

A correspondent gives the following incident as one that actually occurred in a local business house:

Customer came smiling to cashier's desk—Will you please cash this check for me?

Cashier—Yes, if you can be identified.

Customer—Oh, ah—yes—well—how do I do that?

Cashier—Bring some one who knows you.

Customer—Oh, yes; there is my husband; he knows me.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Follicles and Gray Hair.

Whatever tends to paralyze the nerves in the outer membrane of the hair follicle will tend to prevent the flow of secretions and the consequent deposit of pigment. When these minute nerves of the follicle cease to act the person necessarily dons "the silver livery of advised age," and when the hair resumes its color in any degree, as it sometimes does, it is the result of an improvement of the follicles or the nerves and capillaries controlling the secretions, or both.—New York Times.

The Missing Information.

First Lady—Well, Emma, what is it you are looking for so anxiously in your cookery book?

Second Lady (newly married)—Ach, our silly cook is stopping out so late, and my husband says he would like to eat some radishes—but I cannot find in the whole book any directions how to cook them!—Creuznacher Anzeiger.

SEVEN YEARS AND DIVORCE.

A Chicago Lawyer's Idea, Which Will Be Regarded as Original.

The Chicago attorney of a scientific turn of mind who evolved the idea of what is known as the seven year amendment to the divorce law, may or may not have simplified one of the greatest social problems. An absolute conclusion in this regard will be impossible until the amendment becomes an act and the practical workings of the new statute have been tested by a more or less intelligent and impatient community. It may not be generally understood that the suggested legislation is imperative as a deduction from consideration of what is known of the constant change occurring in particles of the human body.

Each individual is made up of atoms, and each day some of these atoms are cast off to be replaced by others from the food we eat, the water we drink and even the air we breathe. Miss Jones, though perhaps quite as charming as she was a week ago, is not entirely the same person, nor is Mr. Smith the same young man he was. Each has lost a portion of the body and each has gained an equivalent.

There is the same general contour as before, but there is a slight difference in material. In course of time this change will be complete. Every recent atom of Miss Jones or Mr. Smith will have gone out into the great world and new atoms will have taken their respective places. Miss Jones and Mr. Smith will be new people.

The consensus of learned opinion is that the body changes entirely once in every seven years. Now, suppose Mr. Smith and Miss Jones to wed. Mr. Smith has sworn to cherish the lady who has just become his wife, not some other woman, and, vice versa, Mrs. Smith, nee Jones, has made pledges of equal solemnity and import to love none other than the man beside her. For a time it is all right, that is, relatively so, but at the end of a year only six-sevenths of the present Mrs. Smith remain, while Mr. Smith has suffered an equal variation.

At the end of seven years Mrs. Smith is not the same woman Smith married, nor is he the same man whom she promised to cleave to. There is not a particle, not one jot or tittle, remaining about either of the couple who were married. Clearly their relationship is scandalous, and something should be done about it. To remedy the evil the amendment to the divorce law makes a separation at the end of seven years permissible if not mandatory.

Of course it is claimed by the opponents of the proposed legislation that neither Mrs. Smith nor Mr. Smith can properly be deemed unfaithful, since neither longer exists, and the argument, it must be admitted, has its force. But, admitting the assumption, who are the two people at present living together under the name of Smith, and what excuse have they for the relations now existing? Should not they either separate or marry without delay?—Chicago Tribune.

Wood More Fireproof Than Iron.

In his recent lecture on fire prevention Professor Goodman states that, generally speaking, wooden joists are better for buildings than steel or iron joists. The two latter materials, he explained, lose their strength at a not very high temperature, whereas wood would sustain a heavy strain for a much longer period when exposed to great heat. Besides when wood has once been charred it does not burn so readily again.

Iron and steel soon expand under the influence of heat. Brick and stone are objectionable; the former become fused under great heat, and the latter is liable to crack or fly when suddenly cooled after heating. The drawback to tiles is that when fire plays upon the joists of floors fitted with them the joists expand and allow the fire to play upon the joists through the tiles. Portland cement is objectionable, as it flakes off when heated, but if wire netting or bars are imbedded in concrete this defect is remedied.

A joist padded with silicate of cotton and incased in salamander plaster (a mixture of silicate, cotton and plaster of paris), the professor holds, is a splendid fireproofing material. Such a material is not only a nonconductor, but it is elastic and would yield with the joist. In an experiment undertaken by Professor Goodman it was found that a joist of this kind withstood very fierce heat for eight to nine hours without sustaining any serious damage.—Builder.

A Cat Setting on Eggs.

A cat story comes from Bridgeport, Conn. Mike is a brindle puss belonging to Miles B. Ferris. Twenty eggs packed in sawdust were standing in the window of Mr. Ferris' saloon, when Mike took it into his head to go to sleep on them. Every attempt has been made to drive him away from the box, and every inducement in the way of soft beds was offered to him, but he persists in lying on those eggs all day, only leaving them long enough to eat and drink. Next week the period of incubation will have expired. What Mike will do with his brood if he is successful is an interesting question. But perhaps he knows what he is about, and is hatching them for his own especial benefit.—Cor. New York Sun.

The holding of the World's Fair in a city scarcely fifty years old will be a remarkable event, but whether it will really benefit this nation as much as the discovery of the Restorative Nervine by Dr. Franklin Miles is doubtful. This is just what the American people need to cure their excessive nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, neuralgia, nervous debility, dullness, confusion of mind, etc. It acts like a charm.
